"Troublesome Pets." (Sterling. Thurs., July 30.)—A good comedy, but not as good as the majority of this brand. His wife owns a parrot which her husband doesn't fancy, and he throws it down a well. The whole village is aroused by cries of "help" emitting from the well. A monkey is also introduced which adds to the fun.

"A Wild Ride." (Sterling. Mon., July 27.)—The Sterling kids minus Billy appear in this comedy. The feature of the picture is a wild ride taken by two of the children in a scenic railway car with the burlesque police force following in the next. The picture is good throughout, but this last event is a crackerjack.

"The Dupe." (Eclair-Universal. Two reels, Wed., July 29.)—Helen Marten, Mildred Bright and Bob Frazer play the leads. The story continually commands the attention. An honest man finally triumphs over a group of dishonest business sharps. His sweetheart is a great aid to him. The story will appeal to all except the very young.

"Tribal War in the South Seas." (101 Bison. Two reels. July 25.)—A picture made in the South Seas by William Clifford in which there are numbers of natives and many typical scenes. Several good fights are staged. The story itself is clean and interesting, possessing a number of unique features. A girl, stolen by a rival tribe, is regained after many fierce encounters. There is much realism throughout.

"The Wooing of Bessie Bumpkin." (Joker. Wed., July 22.)—William Wolbert and Bess Meredyth are the principals in this comedy, which is somewhat slow in places. Two foolish men are in love with Bessie, but neither wins her and she is left without a husband.

"Irene's Busy Week." (Victor. Fri., July 24.)—A different kind of comedy with Irene Wallace and Walter Miller in the leading parts. Irene is to marry her guardian, who is old and disagreeable. Her favored lover succeeds in smuggling her off the large estate in a cartload of apples. A very enjoyable and pleasing picture.

Universal Ike, Jr., in "His City Elopement." (Universal Ike. Tues., July 28.)—Much fun is furnished by the actions of the characters in a sleeping car. Ike elopes with the hotel waitress, but is forced by the proprietor and his wife to return. Robert Fuehrer and Louise Glaum are the principals in this highly amusing picture.

"An Indian Eclipse." (Nestor. July 30.)—Paul Machet is the producer of this excellent Indian drama. A white man wrongly accused of murdering an Indian squaw proves his innocence to the Indians by pretending to invoke an eclipse of the sun. He, of course, knew when it was due to occur.

"Wifie's Busy Day." (Joker. Sat., Aug. 1.)—The usual side-splitting mix-up results when a man tries to pass off the wrong woman as his wife. Max Asher plays the lead. A lot of rough slapstick work takes place which will surely create laughter.

"Some Cop." (Crystal. Tues., Aug. 4.)—Not as good as Vivian Prescott and Charles DeForrest are able to do. Charlie is a hobo, finds a cop's uniform and dresses himself in it. He captures the man of the house instead of a burglar and creates a general disturbance before he is arrested.

"That's Fair Enough." (Joker. Sat., Aug. 8.)—Max Asher and Louise Fazenda in a comedy and its success is assured. It's the old story about father's choice and her own, but it has many new twists that keep one in a continual roar of laughter.

"The Storm Bird." (Powers. Tues., Aug. 4.)—This picture is rather disconnected and somewhat hard to follow in places, but it contains a lot of fast action which will please. Ray Gallagher, Edna Maison and Bert Law play the leads. The dissolute sea captain who attempts to win a young girl by force is at length routed by her sweetheart.

"The Mind's Awakening." Frontier. Sun., Aug. 2.)—The story is a little obscure in places. Dolly Larkin, Arthur Allardt and Joe Franz head the cast. There is a stirring fight in the latter part of the picture. The waitress of the hotel in the West is married, but has left her husband. She meets him when he comes to the hotel and both are happy. The girl's father sanctions the marriage.

"Rescued by Wireless." (101 Bison. Two reels. Aug. 8.)—Taken in Honolulu, and acted by the company sojourning there, the principals of which are William Clifford, Marie Walcamp and Sherman Bainbridge. Industrial and tropical scenes are shown throughout the picture. The story tells of a girl, Clifford's sweetheart, who is constantly annoyed by Sherman, the wireles operator. When this man incites the natives to rebellion the troops are called back by the girl's wireless appeal.

"The Third Party." (Joker. Wed., Aug. 5.)—The plump but very agile comedienne, Bess Meredith, is the life of this comedy. For this reason, if no other, the production will be successful. Thinking his wife is receiving a lover makes hubby dress the butler as a girl. The denouement is clever.

"Symphony of Souls." (Rex. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—Robert Leonard and Ella Hall play the leads. Miss Hall looked very pretty, but the part seemed beyond her power. The story is good. A poor double exposure in the print shown is registered. Mr. Leonard leads a large orchestra in a capable manner.

"Behind the Veil." (Rex. Sunday, Aug. 2.)—A Smalley picture told in a capable manner. The story is strong and will please lovers of good drama. The mother and father of a kiddie are separated and the mother takes a house next door and surreptitiously watches over her child, of which the father has charge. A reconciliation is effected in a novel manner.

"In the Days of Old." (Eclair. Sun., Aug. 2.)—A child comedy. Bobby goes to sleep in a knight's suit of armor and dreams of what he might have been if he had lived in the fifteenth century.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"From Wash to Washington." (Thanhouser. Sun., July 26.)—A comedy that really contains something novel as well as humorous. Marguerite Snow as the washwoman's daughter dreams that she is in Washington with a policeman (James Cruz). They visit many points of interest, jumping rapidly from one place to another. The picture is well produced, especially in those parts in which the figures disappear.

"Leave It to Smiley." (Komic. Sun., July 26.)—Rather inferior for this brand. The actions of a stranded troop of actors is the topic. "Tammany" Young, Tod Browning, Fay Tincher and Max Davidson appear in the leading parts.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 28." (Reliance. Mon., July 27.)—Some views of Long Branch and West End, N. J., start off this reel. Then the scene shifts back to New York, where Margaret tries on the latest hats and bathing suits. Mrs. Knickerbocker, Margaret, Dunbar and Jack Stuyvesant then visit Long Beach, where the two men come to blows over Margaret. The quarrel ends peacefully and afterwards the party meets the Dolly twins, the popular New York dancers.

"Jim Regan's Last Raid." (Broncho. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 5.)—One of the best of the sensational Western melodramas, but conveying a wrong idea of the now civilized West. Lightning action marks both reels. Because of the brutality of her husband, Jim, Anna leaves him. She gets a position as singer in the Silver City saloon and falls in love with the proprietor. He proposes, but she refuses, thinking of her husband. Jim and his band raid the place, but he is shot by Anna. She then marries the man she loves.

"The Thunderbolt." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—Grace, an artist, comes under the influence of a disreputable man in the city. She is rescued from his clutches by her brother-in-law, a minister. The man comes to Grace's home town with the purpose of telling falsehoods about her before the entire congregation. As he is about to do so he is struck by lightning. This is a highly sensational picture and will be enjoyed by the lovers of this sort of melodrama.

"The Gangsters and the Girl." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 7.)—Molly is convicted of stealing. In reality she is innocent. The gang of which her sweetheart is leader rescues her while she is on her way to the state's prison, and thereafter she lives with them. A detective is sent to spy on the gang, and to avert suspicion joins them. The girl falls in love with him and, after the gang is captured, Molly and the detective are married. The picture is full of action, and all who love the sensational melodrama will take pleasure in seeing this.

"Jim Cameron's Wife." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., July 23.)—Jim Cameron has a sick child, and is unable to meet his debts. Andy Stiles holds up the stage, is pursued by the sheriff to Jim's home. When Andy sees in what great need the Cameron family is, he gives himself up so they may claim the reward. Clara Williams, Thomas Chatterton, W. S. Hart and Lewis Durham lead the cast. The picture is alive with action of the melodramatic sort and exciting from the start.

"The Curse of Caste." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., July 30.)—A tragic drama played by the New York Motion Picture Corporation's capable cast of Japanese actors. It tells, in a pathetic way, the manner in which a happy marriage was ruined because of class distinction. The Japanese scenery is realistic and the photography of the best.

"The Long Feud." (Broncho. Two reels. Wed., July 29.)—A pleasing drama entertaining from the start to the end. A feud of long standing is ended by the love of a young man and girl from the opposite factions. The picture is not entirely drama. A number of comic scenes are introduced which are good.

"An Eleventh Hour Reformation." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. Fri., July 31.)—A far-fetched but pleasant drama. A robber enters the house of a lawyer who once defended him successfully. He overhears the man's wife planning to elope with another, but his words cause her to think again and she resolves to stay. There is not a slow moment in the picture.

"The Red Man's Heart." (Majestic. Tues., July 21.)—A pleasing offering in which the reformation of the brutal man wins him a wife. There is a lot of action in the picture. Francella Billington, George Siegemann and Dark Cloud play the important roles.

NEWS WEEKLIES

Pathé's Weekly, No. 45. (Pathé. Wed., July 15.)—An unusually large number of entertaining events appear in this number, the most important of which are, dynamiting the ruined buildings of the recent Salem fire, the trial trip of the "William J. Gaynor," New York's newest fire boat, and the large fire in Moscow, Russia, which destroyed the old palace of Alexander.

Pathé's Weekly, No. 46. (Pathé. Wed., July 22.)—Many interesting sights from all parts of the world are shown this week. From Asheville, N. C., come pictures of the Students' Camp, with a review of cavalry by Governor Craig and Secretary Bryan; from Los Angeles, views of the Japanese war vessels visiting here; from Paris, a glimpse of the latest fashions in capes; from Sebastopol, Russia, pictures of the Czar's visit; from London, a snapshot of the Harvard crew winning the Henley; besides other scenes from various places.

Pathé's Weekly, No. 47. (Pathé. Wed., July 29.)—Miss Dorothy Bauer, aged fourteen, who swam from Nyack to Tarrytown across the Hudson is a person much talked about and all will enjoy seeing her. The "Tribune" race from the Battery to Sandy Hook is entertaining, with the winner, George R. Meehan; and then we have Leo Friede winning the international canoe race. The Grand Prix Race in Lyons, France, is a fitting end. Some very good views were obtained in this race. Less important topics consume the rest of the reel.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 41. (Selig. Mon., July 20.)—All who take a lively interest in what is going on in different parts of the world will find plenty to excite their curiosity in this section. It forms a welcome supplement to the daily newspaper by presenting visually what we read about each day.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 42. (Selig. Thurs., July 23.)—General Villa receives the greatest honor among celebrities through the camera-man in this week's pictorial. He is caught before Torreon while his followers accord him the acclaim of a hero. Other scenes with the rebel army in Mexico give this issue more than ordinary timeliness. The best pictures in the reel are those of the Harvard boat crew winning the Henley Regatta on the Thames.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 43. (Selig. Mon., July 27.)—This number does not fall below the high standard that has already been set for this pictorial news service. Secretary Daniels again appears with his beaming countenance, this time reviewing the sailors at the War College. Other events included are the Larchmont yacht races, the war on the rats in New Orleans, and the printing of the new Federal Reserve currency.

Animated Weekly, No. 123. (Universal. Wed., July 15.)—A large number of events are shown in this weekly. They are, the launching of the U. S. S. "Nevada"; views of Paris after the flood; pictures of the convention held in Dayton, Ohio; the meeting of the I. W. W. faction in Union Square, N. Y.; a picture of the new Lehigh Valley bridge in Buffalo, N. Y.; the latest gowns from Paris; the annual rowing race on the Schuylkill River, Pa.; James J. Jeffries' visit to the Universal studios at California; pictures of King George and Queen Mary; the funeral of ex-Senator Baily at Patchogue, L. I.; a squadron of Japanese soldiers on parade in Washington, D. C.; the new sixteen-inch gun in use at the Panama Canal; and cartoons by Hy Mayer end the picture.

Animated Weekly, No. 124. (Universal. Wed., July 22.)—It consists of suffragettes water polo game at Glen Island, N. Y.; a canoe battle at Larchmont, N. Y.; water cycling on the Seine; the yacht race for the Blackton trophy at Larchmont, N. Y.; the carnival at San Diego, Cal.; the trooping of the colors on the birthday of King George; the tennis tournament at Seabright N. J.; the meeting between Warren Kerrigan of the Universal and Jeff Davis, organizer of the Hotel De Gink hobo farms; balloon racing at St. Louis; the construction of the large breakwater at the mouth of the Columbia River; a display of the various trophies won by Sir Thomas Lipton, and cartoons of Hy Mayer.

Animated Weekly, No. 125. (Universal. Wed., July 29.)—Governor Fielder, of New Jersey, holding a reception and reviewing State troops is one of the features of the news events in this well-known series. Others are: the record-breaking swim at Sandy Hook, performed by George R. Meehan; Governor Crue breaking ground for the Oklahoma State house; forcible feeding of Becky Edelson, the I. W. W. agitator; a baby auto show at San Diego, Cal.; funeral of Archduke Ferdinand; fiftieth reunion of the Elks in Denver; the Henley regatta; the hydroplane Disturber IV; auto polo accident at Portland, Ore.; and the aquatic feats at Traver's Island, N. Y.

Mutual Weekly, No. 82. (Mutual. Thurs., July 23.)—A fine view of the launching of the Nevada, Uncle Sam's new superdreadnought, at Quincy, Mass., the christening of the new German trans-Atlantic liner by Count Zeppelin at Vegesack, Germany; a graphic scene of the eulogy of the New York anarchists killed in New York. It shows Union Square crowded with curious sightseers, the throngs so large that 700 police were necessary to guard against any undue demonstration; the float competing at the Flower Carnival recently held at Halle, Germany; the annual water sports at Cour d'Alene, Idaho; the entertainment of notables by the Author's League of Paris with dancing carnival; interesting pictures of the national elimination balloon race at St. Louis; water cycling, a new sport which will interest on account of its unusual qualities; dynamiting the ruins of the big fire at Salem, Mass.

Mutual Weekly, No. 83. The events filmed this week include the following: The pageant celebrating the opening of the new electric road at San Bernardino, Cal.; the Czar visiting Roumania; Trixie Friganza joining a fraternal society in Portland, Ore.; the "River of Doubt"; the funeral of the Austrian Archduke Ferdinand; girl swimmers posing especially for the Mutual camera man; King George reviewing troops; 15,000 people witnessing a man in a box thrown into New York Bay; King Alphonso at a church celebration; Elks at a reunion; the Prince of Battenburg visiting an English schoolship.

International Association Finds New Home

Organization Has Engaged a Suite of Rooms for Its Meetings in the Hotel Marlborough-Blenheim—Standing Committee Will Receive Visitors

THE International Motion Picture Association has moved from its quarters on Third avenue, New York City, to a suite of rooms, Nos. 33-34, in the Hotel Marlborough-Blenheim, Thirty-sixth street and Broadway.

Special facilities have been provided to insure the comfort and guidance of all exhibitors who may come to New York either on business or pleasure. A standing committee is in constant attendance to supply information of all kinds to out-of-town exhibitors. Whether they desire to be enlightened on the location of theatres or plants, or whether they wish information on hotels, etc., the committee is ready to serve them. Desks and writing materials, and the services of an able stenographer are always at their disposal.

Among the recent out-of-town visitors to the new headquarters was Marion S. Pearce, the new president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. Mr. Pearce came up from Baltimore for the purpose of looking over the situation in the Empire State and of having a complete understanding with the Association members.

MR. PEARCE and Sam Trigger were in conference for some hours last Thursday, and many matters of importance were discussed. Mr. Trigger informed the new president of his plans for a harmonious and co-operative organization.

Mr. Pearce's arrival had been announced to Mr. Trigger by telegram, and a committee which had been previously appointed and was known as the Local Amalgamation Committee, waited upon the newly elected president.

This committee consisted of Philip Rosenson, chairman; Aaron A. Corn, Lee A. Ochs and William Brandt. The committee informed Mr. Pearce that they were ready to take all the steps necessary to carry out the mandate of the National Convention.

The Association addressed a letter to the Cinema Club, of the Bronx, informing that organization that it had appointed a committee of four with instructions to meet a committee of the same number representing the Cinema Club. The object of the meeting of the committees was to effect a reorganization on the basis of the resolution passed at the Dayton convention.

THE newly appointed members of the Cinema Club are: John Whitman, chairman; James Degan, Sam Harris, Moses Fleischman and John Decker.

The meeting of the two committees, scheduled for July 28, was deferred until Friday, July 31, at 11 a. m., in the new club rooms of the National organization at the Hotel Marlborough.

Arrangements are being made for a joint meeting of the two committees representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of the State of New York and New York State Branch No. 11 of the M. P. E. L. of A. This meeting will take place some time in the early part of August, and will be held in the city of New York. This will probably mean the completion of the work of reuniting and reorganizing of the motion picture exhibitors of the city and state.

EDISON ACTOR STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

Anthony Wuentz, an Edison actor and star pitcher of the studio baseball team, was struck by lightning during the terrific storm of a few days ago. As a member of the National Guard, Wuentz was on duty at Sea Girt, N. J., when he was forced to seek shelter from the driving rain inside a tent. A bolt of lightning came crashing through the tent, instantly killing one of the soldiers and rendering Wuentz unconscious.

Although suffering from the severe shock, it is reported that Wuentz will be able to resume his duties in a few weeks.

ANIMATED SONGS

¶ Motion pictures that move to the rhythm of the songs. They do not require costly mechanism. Motion pictures full of life and action that accompany the human voice. The song story is visualized—not with the old fashioned conventional slides—but with life-like motion pictures, containing continuity and all of the necessary conditions found in first-class film playlets. In fact, each song film is a photoplay in miniature.

DON'T HURRY

Haste costs money. There is no time when an exhibitor should be more careful than when purchasing material for his theatre.

The capacity of the theatre, its location, the interior arrangement, the amount of business done, the type of patrons, its earning capacity, and many other things must be taken into consideration. Writing to a number of manufacturers of any particular thing you need takes your time, and money for postage and stationery.

The best, and most economical way for you, is to fill in the form below, and mail it. Tell your wants to The Buyers' Service Department of The Motion Picture News. From its files we can tell just what manufacturers are best equipped to supply you.

And then, in a few days, you will have before you a complete line of literature, prices, terms and other valuable information. Then, at your leisure, you can compare merits, and take your own time in deciding. And all this costs nothing more than a two cent stamp.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

ECLAIR-SCIENTIA

"In Old Biskra." (Eclair. Partial reel. Mon., July 20.)—This ancient city in Northern Africa is off the main line of the world's travel, but as is so often the case, it is on a byway that leads to stranger places than many of the most traveled highways. We are taken on a delightful tour of inspection; we see the low stone houses separated hy crooked streets, where the little urchins in white robes loll and play; we meet the equipage of a lady of rank, escorted by her retainers on snow-white Arabian steeds. She is seated in Oriental magnificence upon the back of a wobbling camel.

"Exotic Butterflies." (Eclair-Scientia. Split reel. Mon., July 20.)—Various rare species of caterpillars are caught before the camera; they are snapped making their cocoons and suspending them from twigs, and then are gorgeous hutterflies in their natural colors are seen hursting the shell and alighting in pride and pomp upon a gray world. What takes nature weeks to bring forth, the camera compresses into a few seconds, hut without inaccuracy, for it is photographed just as it happens. This sort of film makes admirable material for use in schools or for lectures, to both children and grown people.

"Famous Lakes of Italy." (Eclair. Split reel. Mon., July 20.)—In this part of the reel which has also "Exotic Butterflies," we are taken for a pleasant little tramp through the lake region of Italy, and carried up a short distance on the slopes of the Alps to get a view of the lakes and the fertile plains of Lombardy, just the same view that Hannibal got in olden days, except that now the hanks of Lake Como and Lake Maggiore are embellished with handsome villas, surrounded hy Italian gardens fit to please a king.

"Chrysanthemums." (Eclair-Scientia. Split reel. Mon., July 20.)—There is not much left to he known about the chrysanthemum after this picture is shown. First we see it growing as a modest little wild flower in Japan; next converted hy the artistic Japanese into the stately, gorgeous flower that we know. The different processes by which the greenhouse man in this country achieves a larger, finer, and more brilliantly colored blossom by trimming off all but one stalk and one hud are then seen. Finally the camera snaps the finest specimens that may be had, bursting into hloom, in a few seconds hy the camera, 28,000 times as long by nature measure.

"A Trip Up the Hudson." (Eclair. Split reel. Mon., July 20.)—This follows on the same reel with "Chrysanthemums." We are carried along to West Point, and the show places along the route are pointed out to us. Every hend in the river presents more charming vistas of valley and hill, with the Palisades looming on the left always, until the castle-peaked heights of West Point come into view.

"India the Mysterious." (Eclair. Split reel. Mon., July 20.)—This has a sub-title, "The Land of the Pagodas," and it is these strange and marvellous temples that we are given a fleeting glimpse of. Some of them are enormous structures and enforce upon us the fact that this ancient land had a complete civilization years hefore Western nations came into existence. Although we are carried through at least a half dozen, the trip has to be made so fast that only half a reel is taken up. The rest pictures the "Aquatic Life of a Stickleback."

"Aquatic Life: Stickleback." (Eclair-Scientia. Split reel. Mon., July 20.)—The stickleback is a small fish about the size of the forefinger. It is very industrious in its wooing. It makes a nest for the female and persuades her to enter. After the young are hatched it carefully guards them until they are old and strong enough to take care of themselves, a fatherly act that is very unusual in fish life. The whole love affair and marriage and struggle of the stickleback to keep its home unmolested are pryed into by the cameraman and all the secrets laid open to our eyes.

Mrs. Cobb Fa..rs Sensible Censorship

General Manager of the Eclair Company Says that Wall Street Investments in Motion Pictures Show Stability of the Industry.

NO one is better known in filmdom than Agnes Egan Cobb, who on account of her experience in the various branches of the business, the exchange, the studio, the factory, the exhibiting and selling end, is eminently qualified for discharging the difficult and exacting duties of the position she now holds with the Eclair Film Company.

For a little over a year Mrs. Cobb has been engaged in directing the destinies of the Leading Players Film Corporation and the Features Ideal, the selling agencies of the Eclair, and she finds that her past experience, so varied and far reaching, is proving of untold assistance in meeting and disposing of the everyday problems coming up in her department.

While a business woman, Mrs. Cobb still finds time to devote her attention to matters purely feminine, and like all women noted for their mental qualifications as well as their impressive personality, she maintains independent views on leading questions agitating the public mind.

In a recent interview with a representative of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS Mrs. Cobb said many interesting things.

"MANY ask me, during my travels and at my work, 'Do you keep house?'

"Yes, indeed I do," and one of the cosiest little homes I know of, which I enjoy to my heart's content when I am there. A home I am very proud of. That is what makes life worth while.

"Then again, girls have often asked me, 'Wouldn't you rather remain home than stay at business and suffer the trials and struggles of this everyday working life? Don't you love to do the little things around the home and take life easy—cook, sew, read or whatever you feel like doing each day,' and my reply has always been, 'I can cook things fit for a king to eat, but I despise the kitchen.'

"I can sew, make clothes, do fancy work, anything a woman can do, but I would rather not. I do not enjoy it and it makes me nervous; but I do love to be in business solving its problems.

"With all my business ambition I am every inch a woman, and always hope to be. No, I am not a suffragette. I do want my rights; still I do not care to vote. I will leave that for my husband to do."

MRS. COBB is proud of the fact that no failure has been credited to her. This is a record, considering that she has been a business woman for some years. She declares that the permanency of the motion picture industry is demonstrated by the fact that Wall Street men are putting their money into so many companies. These shrewd money-makers are the last people in the world to make investments unless sure of the soundness of an enterprise.

Mrs. Cobb says that censorship is all right, provided that it is a matter of common sense and within the bounds of reason. But when it goes beyond these limits, she says, the motion picture, the innocent pleasure of the poor man and his family, is in jeopardy.

KLEINE FEATURE READY

From the offices of George Kleine comes the word that his big six-part subject, "The Lion of Venice," is now ready for booking. "The Lion of Venice," like Kleine's "Othello," was made at Venice upon the historic spots made famous in the original medieval story. For its productions the Council of the City of Venice stopped all traffic on the Grand Canal for an entire day and made of it a festive occasion generally.

J. A. McKinney, secretary of Warner's Features, Inc., recently hauled up from the sea thirty-five weakfish. In company witb a few friends with rod and reel he anchored his boat off Oak Island beach. One after another be pulled in the struggling fish until his arms grew tired.

Lionel G. Edel, former manager of the feature department for the General Film Exchange, in St. Louis, is now traveling representative for the World's Feature Corporation.

Warner & Company, who manage the Fairydome, 3100 Arsenal street, St. Louis, now also manage the Arlington Airdome at Union avenue and North Market street.

H. R. Fisher has installed a baseball ticker in the Fisher Tbeatre and Garden, St. Louis, for the benefit of bis patrons.

Tbe New Grand Central Theatre, Grand and Lucas avenues, St. Louis, is showing the Burton Holmes Travelettes with their regular picture program.

Comparing Detroit with Cincinnati, G. J. Trask, of the Detroit Mutual Exchange, finds conditions very favorable in Detroit. That city, with its 600,000 population, has only about fifteen more theatres than Cincinnati witb 350,000. Whereas, Cincinnati has a number of five-cent houses, even to the big features, Detroit has practically eliminated the five-cent house. And film service in Obio is higher than in Michigan, says Mr. Trask.

"The Miner's Baby" is the title of a new Western picture, written by F. McCrew Willis and produced by Sberiff Arthur Mackley, at the Reliance and Majestic Hollywood Studios. "The Miner's Baby," will be released by the Reliance, through the Mutual program.

A motor boat proposal is the feature of "A Lesson in Mechanics," a one-reel comedy being produced by W. C. Cabanne, at the Reliance and Majestic Hollywood studios. Dorothy Gish and Robert Harron are the principals in the play, which will be released by the Majestic through the Mutual program.

At the Reliance and Majestic, Hollywood, Cal., studios, Jack Adolfi is producing "Tbe Inner Conscience," a thrilling romance, in which a launch at sea plays a prominent part. Frank Bennett and Sam DeGrasse are featured in the production.

A realistic drama of mining life is shown in "The Stolen Ore," produced by the Reliance Company. Sheriff Arthur Mackley is directing the picture and also plays the lead. Eugene Pallette and Mrs. Crawford also take prominent parts.

A gripping romance, with its setting in Mexico during the recent war trouble, is told in "On the Border," being produced by Jack Adolfi at the Reliance and Majestic, Hollywood, Cal., studios.

Irene Hunt is featured as a Spanish dancing girl, Eugene Pallette plays the lead and Sam DeGrasse and Frank Bennett take prominent parts in the production.

The "Alton," a Mississippi River excursion boat, advertised that the regular trip of July 15 would be recorded in motion pictures.

The Eagle Packet Company, of St. Louis, which operates the Alton, urged the public to bring families and friends and get in tbe pictures. It is stated tbat an Eastern company made the films for part of a feature production that required a Mississippi River steamboat.

For a season of eight weeks the poor children and their parents in the congested districts will be given free exhibitions of motion pictures in one or tbe other of the parks and playgrounds.

An opinion written by Chief Justice Johnson was handed down hy the Supreme Court recently, ordering Spencer B. Hopkins, Inspector of Buildings in Providence, R. I., to issue a permit to the Allen Theatre and Realty Company to allow that concern to make proposed alterations and extensions to their theatre on Union street.

APPOINTS NEW YORK CENSORS

Commissioner of Licenses Bell recently announced the appointment of his committee to censor motion picture films, and the plan by which the new board of censors is to work.

On the committee are S. S. Eldridge, of Brooklyn; H. H. Hart, Gustavus Kirby, Dr. Bernheimer, of the Brooklyn Neighborhood Association; Mrs. Josephine Redding, Mrs. Joseph M. Price and Mrs. R. S. Blakie. This committee is to organize this week, and appoint an auxiliary committee of about one hundred members.

"The auxiliary committee will be comprised of men and women from every section of the city," Commissioner Bell explained. "Each member will be asked to look after the moral welfare of the motion picture patrons in his or her district and reports are to be made of films not considered fit for exhibition.

"As soon as one of these complaints is received it will be submitted to the censorship committee, which will view the film and report its findings. I shall then send out an inspector to report just what the picture shows, without comment. Acting on the report of the censorship committee and that of my inspector, one of my deputies and a representative of the committee will view the picture and arrive at a decision.

FILM MISSISSIPPI TOWN

Columbus, Miss., July 28.

Arrangements have been completed by which an industrial motion picture will be produced, exploiting the industrial, civic and educational advantages of Columbus, Miss. Manager E. L. Kuykendall, of the Princess Theatre, Columbus, has just closed a contract for the making of the film.

After having been run in Columbus and in various sections of Mississippi, a portion of the film will be allotted to the Mississippi Panama Exposition Commission, for use in the mammoth feature film of the Mississippi exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition.

FILMS CURE NERVOUSNESS

Louisville, Ky., July 29.

A new field of usefulness for the pictures has been found, according to the manager of one of the principal motion picture houses in this city, who recites an unusual incident figured in by a member of his immediate family who now is a resident of Chicago.

His mother has for several years been a sufferer from nervousness, he says, little relief being gained through medical treatment. She recently discovered that her condition was considerably improved after each visit to a picture show and now is a regular every-day patron of the picture theatre.

"MY OFFICIAL WIFE"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

IN this drama of unusual power one gets realistic pictures of Russian life, from the secret meetings of Nihilists to court functions presided over with all the regal dignity of a great house by the mighty ruler of a vast empire.

Finished acting of an all-star cast in a production exceptionally staged by James Young makes the play a brilliant example of the best in motion pictures.

Clara Kimball Young in the lead, Helene Marie, a beautiful Nihilist, acts with such splendid technique that she succeeds in creating a wonderful illusion. Her living presence seems to be on the stage, and the spectator forgets that he is only looking at a film. So absorbing is this feeling, one expects in the more dramatic episodes to hear her speak.

The scenes have been arranged with rare judgment for allowing her ample opportunities to interpret all feminine moods. The character of Helene is complex, and the fair Nihilist's mind has as many involutions as the rose leaves in an undeveloped bud. The actress not only caught the illusive phases of the girl's traits, but by sheer force of superacting projected the personality of the character right through the picture with as much conviction as if the scenes were enacted on the speaking stage.

Clara Kimball Young makes the film. This is said without losing sight of the excellent support she received and the credit that must be accorded the efficient stage management evident in every scene.

The producer showed no fear of using plenty of subtitles for the purpose of enlightening the audience, instead of assuming that the perfect film drama must have practically none—with the result that it was easier to follow the plot than in the case of the complicated farce, "Uncle Bill," included on the same program of the Vitagraph Theatre.

"My Official Wife" was taken from the novel of Richard Henry Savage, of that name, which enjoyed considerable popularity some years ago. The heroine is a Nihilist leader who resorts to numerous clever expedients to gain admittance to the closely guarded realms of the Czar for the purpose of re-establishing the broken line of communication between the plotters in Russia and in America.

"FANTOMAS, THE FALSE MAGISTRATE"

(Gaumont—Part 5)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THROUGH four more reels we are shown the clever work of this sharp-witted criminal, Fantomas, to escape punishment for his misdeeds, his impositions upon the public and the police in the guise of an examining magistrate, until he is finally tracked down by Inspector Juve and put in a cell, only to get away at midnight by using the keen wits with which he is blessed.

This is no ordinary criminal and his pursuers are not ordinary detectives. Therefore, to elude them, as Fantomas does in this picture, requires a mighty high order of intellect. The crude, bungling, time-worn and commonplace methods so often seen in detective pictures would be entirely out of place here. This requires the nicest calculations, the subtlest deductive reasoning and the greatest alertness for every opportunity and advantage.

We are thus carried through a maze of baffling complications and original ruses that keep the attention breathless from beginning to end and the spectator guessing what is going to happen next. There is no dearth of dramatic moments when no one can tell just who will get the best of the battle of ingenuity.

One thriller appears that will excite comment for its novelty and reckless daring. Swag in the shape of jewels has been hidden in the bell of a Gothic church. The robber climbs for it on a ladder suspended against the bell, and then Fantomas fiendishly pulls the ladder away, leaving the unfortunate swinging to the clapper in the lofty belfry.

The fifth part of "Fantomas" was released July 13.

A Modern Successor of the Orchestra

THE evolution of the motion picture from the experimental and toy stage to a plane of serious, dignified entertainment made it necessary for managers to make their musical accompaniment keep pace with the requirements of the pictures.

At first an ordinary piano seemed sufficient for this purpose, and later the necessity of an orchestra was felt by the larger houses. At this stage of motion picture growth music manufacturers saw an opening for the introduction of instruments designed to supplant orchestras and reduce the operating expenses of a theatre without entailing sacrifices for the sake of economy.

One of the latest and best instruments put on the market for rendering this desirable service is that manufactured by the American Photo Player Company, with New York office at 62 West Forty-fifth street, and factories at Berkeley, California.

The instrument is not an automatic player, but falls in the class known as the pneumatic. It can be played manually by a musician or manipulated satisfactorily by one who, though not conversant with music, has a sense of time and learns the use of the stops. Five minutes instruction by a representative of the company is sufficient to enable a prospective player to gain enough knowledge for rendering the most difficult selections of classic music.

The sound of the instrument is unusually sweet and compelling. There is a gratifying lack of mechanical tone. It enables the man at the keys to "play to the picture" instead of playing "music" which fails to harmonize with the spirit of the plot development. Every shade of musical graduation is capable of expression from the softest pianissimo to crescendo of the loudest volume.

The most critical music lover cannot sit through a performance during which the Photo Player is used to "fit the picture" without going away with a sense of complete enjoyment for the music rendered.

The advantages of this meritorious instrument will appeal to the theatre manager.

An instant change is possible from the slowest, sentimental strains to the thunderous crash of battle scenes. The music never stops. This is made possible by a clever arrangement of the rolls. One rewinds while the other is playing. The makes of all manufacturers can be used. One operator is sufficient for the manipulation of the instrument, which means a salary list considerably less than that of an orchestra. Indeed, the manufacturers have estimated that the yearly expense of an ordinary sized orchestra will pay for the Photo Player. The instrument is built to fit the pit of the orchestra.

The music produces a subtle effect on the patron, who now wants more than "just the picture" and likes to hear the pleasing tonal accompaniment of well executed music. The Photo Player has so many appealing points that those who have heard the instrument declared that the manufacturers do not exaggerate their claims in stating that it makes the music completely harmonize with the pictures, "supplying the grief, joys and triumphs of the people of the canvas."

BUSY SEARCH AT WARNER'S FOR ONE-REEL COMEDIES

P. A. Powers, president of Warner's Features, Inc., in speaking of the announcement that Warner's Features, Inc., are to incorporate one-reel comedies on their program, said recently: "We are very busy selecting subjects for our comedy program.

"Genuine comedies are very rare, but we will accept none that do not measure up to the high standard of our feature releases. Several studios are busy working on comedies that will meet our requirements. The old, worn-out themes are to be avoided and only those unusual and original in conception will be considered."

"WHEN A WOMAN LOVES"

(Eclectic Film Company)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THE likeness of the young woman who plays the leading part in this production has preceded her name to this side of the continent. The picture was filmed on the Pacific coast, and we can see how pretty she is, what girlishness, vivacity and winsomeness she displays in the part in which she is cast for the first time before the camera; but her name must remain for the time being in the list of things unknown but desired.

It is quite certain that it will not remain there for long, because with such a charming, piquant personality and superior histrionic ability she will soon be placed in the increasing galaxy of motion-picture stars.

She plays the young wife of a wealthy and much older man of business. His attention is wrapped up in his business, and he spares little time from his money-making for displaying the tender caresses that her heart craves. Her lonesomeness almost leads to her ruin when an associate of her husband's makes a call, is left alone with her, and attempts to make love. But she controls herself and sends him away.

Soon afterwards there is a mask ball; the husband will not go, so the little wife, out of unselfishness and devotion, remains behind in her room and sends her maid in her stead. The husband, who has become suspicious, spies on the same young man making love to the woman whom he thinks is his wife. Just when it seems that this mistake in identity will have fatal consequences, the two women appear at the same time, and the husband, struck with horror at the realization of what his mistake was about to lead to, seeks forgiveness from his wife, who sees that her life will be fuller from now on of the love that she desires.

The possibilities of suspense and surprise that may be seen even in this brief synopsis of the plot are used to the utmost, and give breathless interest to a story rich in human appeal.

PICTURES AID SCIENCE IN NEW ORLEANS

Special to The Motion Picture News.

New Orleans, July 28.

IT is indeed an ill wind that blows nobody good. New Orleans's visitation of the bubonic plague has brought one of the strongest endorsements the films have ever been given.

In the crusade that is being conducted under the direction of Surgeon-General Blue, of the United States Health Service, to rid the cities of dirt and rats, motion pictures are being used. The pictures show the fight that was made against the plague in San Francisco and what should be done in New Orleans.

The Item Animated Weekly has also been showing pictures of the work being done here by the government.

"OLD BRANDIS' EYES"

(Box Office Attractions—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL)

PROBABLY none of us has not wished at some time or other for the gift of seeing things just as they are; to penetrate beneath the surface of polish and veneer that civilized society puts on, and see men and women as they are.

Knowing the fascination exercised over people by this idea, the writer of the photoplay has made it the central theme and foundation of his story. Throughout the four reels, it is developed with uncommon ingenuity and skill. And by the actors' interpretation the theme loses not a whit of its strength and power. Not only is the acting a pleasure to see, and almost makes the spectator forget that he is looking at pictures and not at the live flesh and blood persons enacting these incidents for his especial benefit, but the photography plays its share in the illusion.

This remarkable gift of sight that sees into the heart is given by Old Brandis to a young artist in return for a wonderful picture which he has painted. Successively he gazes upon the different people with whom he comes in contact and sees that they are not what they appear. The thief and cutthroat, the siren, the old woman made up as young, the asinine old professor are all revealed in their true colors. Only the poor little model bears the test of this unerring sight; she is just what she seems, a loving, devoted unselfish, unscheming woman, and the artist falls head over heels in love with her.

While digging a well for the chemical discharge of the new laboratory of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at Universal City, the floor of the well gave way and a laborer was only saved from falling into a subterranean stream of water by grabbing a bucket attached to a windlass on the surface. Geological experts declare that its presence in that locality has long been recognized by those who have drilled for oil.

Robert Leonard, well-known star and director of the Rex Universal Drama Company at the Hollywood studios, has just completed a society comedy entitled "The Wall Between." It is the romance of a college youth and the girl next door who is petted and pampered by her parents and treated as a child. Robert Leonard plays the part of the college youth and Ella Hall that of the girl.

The Queen Comedy Company, with studio being erected at 61st and Moneta avenue, Los Angeles, is beginning work under the direction of A. D. Hann. One-reel, quick-action comedy will be produced.

Motion picture exhibitors of Omaha are showing their public spirit by advertising the free public library. "This building belongs to you. Use it!" is the legend accompanying a picture of the library, which, in slide form, is being thrown on the screen between reels.

The Monroe Theatre, Twenty-sixth and Farnam streets, Omaha, used to be the Klune Theatre. W. A. Monroe, proprietor, has changed the name. He bought the theatre from Andy Klune nearly three years ago.

"The Saving Flame," a romance of the seashore, is nearing completion in the Reliance-Majestic studios of the Mutual Film Corporation at Hollywood, Cal. Francelia Billington, Robert Harron and W. H. Lawrence are in the cast.

The second instalment of "A Midsummer's Love Tangle," a Beauty release, is a continuation of the first release. Both subjects, however, are complete in themselves.

In this reel Joseph Harris is introduced as the count, the favorite suitor of the judge for the hand of Trixy, his daughter.

Harry Pollard is producing "Suzanna's New Suit," a comedy by J. Edward Hungerford, of Los Angeles. There are many comical situations in which Margarita Fischer and Harry Pollard take the principal parts.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

Otis Turner is producing a two-reel picture entitled "Kid Reagan's Hands," in which Herbert Rawlinson plays the lead. Anna Little plays a young widow with a little son whose desire for a hobbyhorse brings his mother and the hero together.

A motion picture theatre, opened some time ago in an old court house building at Newberry, S. C., and closed down later, has been opened again, and is now under the management of George C. Swittenberg.

Percy Fisher, who was for several months in 1911 manager of the Lyric Theatre, at Sumter, but who has been located in Florence, S. C., for the past three years, has returned to Sumter, S. C., to manage the Rex motion picture theatre. Mr. Fisher is an experienced man in the motion picture business. He will immediately put on a line of pictures and music that will warrant the patronage of the people of Sumter, it is said.

The Dreamland Theatre, a down-town house in Syracuse, N. Y., has closed its doors and efforts to ascertain what will be done with the house are fruitless. The Tivoli Theatre, a short distance from Dreamland, has discontinued matinees for the summer months. Both houses are within a stone's throw of the site of the New Strand.

The Seymour Theatre in Syracuse, N. Y., has changed hands, and the Hippodrome was sold to Eugene H. Jones of Little Falls. This is Mr. Jones' first venture in the picture business. He contemplates making some improvements at once.

The Ford Automobile people will show films depicting the construction of on automobile in ten theatres in Syracuse and first run at the Eckel.

Marcellus, N. Y., is going to have an "Old Home Week" soon and has decided to immortalize the events by having motion pictures taken of all the important events.

Emphatic denial is made by Manager John Farran, of the Victoria Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., that there is to be any change in policy at that theatre.

It was rumored some time ago that the house was to be remodeled slightly, and go into the legitimate, and the management believes that the rumor was started by some of the rivals of the Victoria.

"THE SPOTTED PANTHER"

(Leading Players—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT is quite apparent that this picture is a comedy, although at times it breaks away from the comic trend of events and takes the shape of a drama. That it is a comedy of a different nature than the usual run of such productions is also obvious; in fact, it is a sort of burlesque on the drama that contains the dashing, debonair hero, the much mistreated heroine and the abhorrent villain.

While the subject is treated in a very clever way, certain vagueness in places seems to indicate numerous cuts in the original copy. However, those who like broad comedy will enjoy the picture and appreciate the superior burlesque qualities embodied in the three reels.

Two individual scenes stand out from among the rest; they are both fire scenes and very well executed. In one, a whole city is seen burning and the ruins of it are very impressive. The other is just the scene of a burning camp, which, however, is as well done. These two scenes, together with the finale—that of the death of the Rajah of Baghavapour—are really the only scenes that would cause the picture to be classed with dramas.

The spotted panther introduced into the story plays an obscure part, and one will be questioning himself why the picture is called "The Spotted Panther." It is, however, quite novel to see a spotted panther and his presence created added interest in the picture.

Captain Corcoran sets out to find a copy of the "Gouroula-ramatah," in the possession of the Hindus. After meeting Heolkar's daughter, Sita, and after numerous adventures with the treacherous English he procures the paper, and returns to the Rajah's court to claim the maid, but the English have set fire to the town, and the Rajah is dying. So Corcoran claims the girl and is unanimously acclaimed the next Rajah. M. Delmonde appears as Corcoran, and Miss Josette Androit as Sita. These two are the principals.

SEEKING NEW IDEAS FOR PLAYS

In the latest production of the Sterling Camera and Film Company, "In the Land of the Lost," an effort has been made to avoid the trite and banal, at the same time retaining all that is necessary to maintain the interest of an audience.

In a recent interview with Leon Wagner, of the Sterling Company, he said:

"What exhibitors need is something out of the beaten path of picture film ideas, but to obtain this result satisfactorily is one of the great problems of the producer. A theme offered by a scenario writer might have possibilities, but the idea is in a crude form and needs development by a director who knows the best way to get results."

Ventilation Cooling Heati

Heating and cooling problem revolutionized by Typhoon System.
You keep cool in front of a desk fan, not in back; apply this common sense and blow the air into your theatre.
A 48-inch Typhoon Multiblade Blower has sixteen blades, an ordinary exhaust fan has six; it is the blades that do the business.
A Typhoon Tubular Air Warmer will heat and ventilate at the same time.
The low price of effective apparatus will surprise you. Catalogue "N" gives information.

In writing to advertisers please mention "THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS"

"How clear the pictures are!"

You've often overheard that remark—and it's as strong a commendation, brings as much business as does a favorable comment on the picture story itself.

The "clearest pictures" are on Eastman film because the product is right, chemically and physically.

It is easily identifiable by the stencil "Eastman" in the margin.

The Perils of Pauline

Pauline's a record-breaker—both ways. With every scrape she gets into you have less scraping to get people into your theatre. She's a double extreme.

Why scrape yourself when Pauline is ready to scrape herself in and you out of difficulty both at the same time. She's a serial too, not the kind you eat in the morning but the kind that eats up time all day and then just whets your appetite for more—you can get more too, that's the best part of it. Every other Monday we release a new Pauline Episode, each complete in itself, each more breathless than the last.

THE SIREN

The story of a woman who senses to the full her power over men. Six reels of her headlong career from man to man, fishermen to noblemen. and even her husband, they feel the sting of her selfish thoughtlessness. Like the Siren of legend, she lures men to destruction on the reefs of their own folly and brings real tragedy into many a family merely to gratify her own vanity. But her path of destruction comes to an abrupt ending—a vivid, startling tragedy to crown the tragedies that went before.

NICK WINTER and The Lost Prince

3 Reel Comedy-Drama.

Nick's a superman, a marvel of resourcefulness, and the screen's greatest detective.

Only those who have seen him can appreciate the fertility of the man's brain in devising so many means for landing the criminals, and the equally surprising resourcefulness of the lawbreakers in planning so many traps for the undoing of the great detective. There is no other character in film-life who can do so many different things so many different ways.

WAR DRAMA THRILLS CHICAGO

"THE LITTLEST REBEL" Scores Big Success In Western Metropolis

The Photoplay Critics of the Chicago Tribune and Record Herald Tell in Part of the Great Realism that Thrills the Spectator who Witnesses the Projection of "THE LITTLEST REBEL"

CHICAGO TRIBUNE
"LITTLEST REBEL" THRILLING
By KITTY KELLY

If the Austrians and Servians and other craving war continentals could just drop into the Studebaker for a couple of hours to watch the unreeling of "The Littlest Rebel," they would get an optical dose of war horror sufficient to drive them to hang up their guns and take their plowshares and fall instantly to tilling the soil.

This picture, made out of the little prose war epic Edward Peple wrote several years ago, which also supplied heart interest for a successful play, is most effective as war propaganda in its film form, for what it lacks in direct intellectual appeal of the book and voice and personal magnetism of the stage it makes up in its broader scope of vizualization, creating a vivid and inescapable impression of the inglorious underside of brute contest between humans dignified by the name of war.

CHICAGO HERALD
"LITTLEST REBEL" EXCITING FILM PLAY
By THE HATTONS

The film drama seems to make its most vital appeal when it combines history and spectacle. We felt this keenly after witnessing "The Littlest Rebel" yesterday at the Studebaker Theatre. With characters more or less known to the audiences and broad backgrounds reflecting some of the traditional spectacle of the civil war, THIS "MOVIE" PLAY HAS AN APPEAL PARALLEL TO THAT WHICH HAS MADE "CABIRIA" UNIQUE.

And for the first time we saw a "movie" audience applaud scenes as people do when their emotions are touched in the regular theatre.

Exhibitors: Organize!

NO more timely or powerful illustration of the need for and the value of exhibitor organization can possibly be advanced than the action just taken in Bridgeport, Conn., by the managers of the motion picture theatres there.

Problems that vitally affect their prosperity are confronting the exhibitors of the Nutmeg state. They are taking steps to bring home a sense of their importance to their fellow-exhibitors in other cities of the state.

The method they propose to apply to these problems is—ORGANIZATION.

STATE censorship of motion pictures will have to be reckoned with as soon as the General Assembly convenes in Hartford.

The exhibitors are preparing to meet and fight the issue with—organization.

ADMISSION prices have been too low to enable the exhibitor to derive a legitimate profit from his business. The folly of offering a program of ten-cent quality at five cents has dawned upon them.

THIS condition of affairs the Bridgeport exhibitors are resolved to correct, and the corrective they are administering is—organization.

OTHER problems besides these are to be met. The one solution for them all, the only satisfactory answer to them all is—ORGANIZATION.

IN the conditions that confront the exhibitors of Bridgeport and of Connecticut there is a warning and a lesson which no body of exhibitors anywhere in the United States can afford to neglect.

STATE censorship of motion pictures will be a political and party issue in many states this fall. This is not a speculation. It is a fact.

The Indiana Progressives, for example, at a meeting in Evansville last month, incorporated a plank into the state platform pledging the party to state censorship of motion pictures.

THE Democratic party in Ohio is definitely committed to the support of the censorship law that was put upon the statute books of the state.

New York state, it should be remembered, is nursing a measure in one of the committees of the state legislature for the censoring of motion pictures.

IS not this cause enough for every exhibitor to ask himself:

"Will any of the parties in my state write a censorship plank into their platform this fall?"

And having asked that question, the next one must be:

"How can I and my brother exhibitors meet this peril and protect ourselves from it?"

Once more, the answer is—ORGANIZATION, STATE ORGANIZATION, NATIONAL ORGANIZATION!

BEGIN now to strengthen your state organization. Make it a real organization—active, united, comprehensive—ready and able to fight for your individual welfare.

Join the national organization, the new, reorganizing, harmonizing Exhibitors League.

PRESIDENT PEARCE and his executive committee are out for an organization of 10,000 exhibitors. They are rapidly formulating plans for a League so beneficial that you cannot afford to remain outside. Help them!

REMEMBER—You have, through your screen, the most direct and vast appeal to the public in existence to-day.

The politician knows this.

You can actually sway elections—local and state through your state organizations; national through the Exhibitors League of America.

But you can only do this, you can protect your interests only through organization.

UNITE! Co-operate! Join your state and national Leagues!

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

TURNED AWAY 1,000 IN HOT SPELL

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 5.

One exhibitor who does not believe in the hot weather bugaboo is J. E. Sherwood, manager of the Grand Theatre at Madison, Wis. Despite the fact that many of the croakers throughout the state were bewailing the fact that it was impossible to do business on account of the heat, Mr. Sherwood went right ahead and secured "One Wonderful Night," with Beverly Bayne and Francis X. Bushman in the leads, for Wednesday, July 29, and featured it heavily.

Despite the "heat" Manager Sherwood packed his house, which seats close to 1,200 and turned a full thousand away. So great was his success with the picture and so confident is he of his hot weather boosting that he has booked the picture for a return date on Monday, Aug. 10, and expects to repeat his success.

WILL OPPOSE TEXAS CENSORSHIP

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 5.

A meeting of the Texas branch of the Moving Picture League of America has been called to be held in Dallas during the State Fair in October. There are about 100 members of this organization and all parts of the state are represented.

According to T. P. Finnegan, a number of important matters will be brought up and plans will be made at this time to fight any opposition to the motion picture business that may come at the coming session of the state legislature to be held in January. Texas motion picture men are opposed to state censorship, or at least the most of them seem to be, and it is probable that resolutions relating to this will be adopted at the coming meeting.

VACATION CAUSES STRIKE

Spokane, Aug. 3.

Because Manager Sam Cohn invited one of the two union stagehands employed at the Spokane Theatre to take a few weeks' layoff, both the stage employes and both the picture operators struck.

The house plays three acts of vaudeville and three reels of pictures. The places of the operators and the stage workers have been filled by non-union men.

Form Trade Protective Body in Harrisburg

New Pennsylvania Association Will Include Exhibitors, Manufacturers, Operators and Others—Protection Against Legislation and Taxation Its Object

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 6.

WITH the aim of organizing motion picture men of all descriptions in Pennsylvania to protect the business from state or local regulation, state or local taxation, state or local censorship and all other forms of interference from outsiders, the Motion Picture Protective Association of Pennsylvania has circularized the local theatre men asking them to become affiliated with it.

The association, which must not be confused with the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Central Pennsylvania, recently formed in this city with the object of covering the territory within a radius of fifty miles of Harrisburg, has its headquarters in 818 Jarvella street, Pittsburgh. The name of L. W. Rittenhouse appears at the bottom of the circular as president and that of A. J. Hanna, as secretary.

Representatives of this association are to have a hearing by the motion picture men of this city in the Colonial Theatre next Sunday, when they will explain more fully the purpose of their organization and endeavor to induce the local men to join it.

It is understood that its main object will be to oppose legislation hostile to the motion picture business that may be introduced in the legislature this winter. Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, of Central Pennsylvania, have that for one of their objects and will consider, probably in the meeting next Sunday, whether it will be advisable to join forces with the Pittsburgh organizers in this legislative work.

The Pittsburgh association's circular to local theatre men says that a state-wide organization has been effected and that a local organization will be completed at the proposed meeting. This, however, will depend wholly on the attitude of the local theatre interests. It is promised that officers will be elected and other matters of great importance to the men in this business in this district are to be discussed. A membership of 1,000 in the state is the professed aim of the new organization.

While little appears to be known here of the new association, the motion picture men of Harrisburg indicate a disposition to give the representatives of the association a fair hearing.

In one important respect the association differs from the Central Pennsylvania League and that is that while the league confines its membership to exhibitors and manufacturers, the association, it is understood, proposes to welcome into its membership picture machine operators and all classes of motion picture theatre employees, in addition to the exhibitors and manufacturers.

Exhibitor Wins "Discrimination" Suit

Manager May Give a Patron Any Seat He Sees Fit Provided It Is as Good As the One Demanded

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 6.

JOHN J. FARRAN, manager of the Victoria Theatre, this city, has returned from Elmira, where he went to answer certain suits brought against him there as the result of an incident in another theatre controlled by his company, and managed by Archie McCallum.

Suit was brought against Farran by Frank Tress for $500 damages for refusing to permit him to sit in the orchestra circle of the Colonial Theatre in Elmira. The action was tried before Judge Hawes, in Elmira, and lasted for two days. Joseph R. Webster, of this city, appeared for Mr. Farran.

The judge charged the jury that the management had a right to seat patrons in any part of the theatre that it wished, providing the accommodation was as good as in any other part. Tress lost his suit.

IT was brought out at the trial that Tress claimed that he wanted two seats, for himself and his daughter, and that they were refused him. The defendant showed that Tress was not accompanied by his daughter when he appeared at the box office, but that he was in the company of an Elmira saloon keeper, who was under indictment for violating the excise law and keeping a disorderly house.

The management claimed that it was privileged to exclude Tress and his companion from the orchestra circle on the ground that they were undesirable persons.

This action was the third in a series instituted against Mr. Farran, as there has been much feeling between the management of the house and a certain class in Elmira.

Censors Balk at Stopping "John Barleycorn"

Jack London Film Shown for Twelve Hours at Garrick Theatre, Philadelphia, but No Arrests Are Made and Promises of Interference in the Name of the Law Does Not Materialize —Governor Tener Declines to View Picture

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Aug. 6.

IN open defiance of the official censor of motion pictures, J. Louis Breitinger, the picture "John Barleycorn" was shown at the Garrick Theatre, Philadelphia, for twelve hours on Monday, August 3.

The threatened arrest and fine which C. H. Pierce, personal representative of Bosworth, Inc., and W. E. Smith, of the Famous Players Exchange, patiently waited for all day, failed to materialize.

One or other of these two men were at the theatre from 9 o'clock in the morning until the close of the last performance at 11 p.m. During this time heralds, reprints of the cover page ad in last week's Motion Picture News, and other printed matter advertising the show was freely circulated from the front of the theatre.

Policemen passed and repassed, but still the expected move was not made.

DURING the day representatives from all interests, both pro and anti-booze, police and censor board viewed the film. In the evening Mr. Breitinger's cousin was present, as was also the Superintendent of the Philadelphia Police Department.

There could be no lack of excuse on the part of the censor as every paper in the city carried a three-and-a-half inch advertisement and prereview on either Saturday or Sunday, plainly stating that the picture would be shown on Monday, commencing at 11 a. m.

In addition to this, a letter had been written to Governor John K. Tener inviting him to view the film before it was shown to the general public. In this letter it was also emphatically stated when and where the film would be shown.

The letter in part addressed to the Governor is given below:

FAMOUS PLAYERS EXCHANGE

No. 1331 Vine Street
Philadelphia, July 29, 1914.

Hon. John K. Tener,
Governor of Pennsylvania,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Honored Sir:—I desire to extend to you an invitation to view the film "John Barleycorn," by Jack London (originally published in the "Saturday Evening Post") at a private exhibition at the Garrick Theatre in Philadelphia next Monday, August 3, at 10 o'clock in the morning.

I desire also to extend to you at the same time an opportunity to bring as many of your friends as may be agreeable to you, for the purpose of permitting you to satisfy yourself as to the purity of purpose, educative moral value and absolute cleanliness and decency in all respects of this film, which has been pronounced by ministers of every denomination and by leaders of the best moral interests wherever it has been exhibited throughout the country as the strongest sermon of its kind ever pictured.

It has been so exhibited with such approval in practically every other state in the Union except Ohio.

My reason for extending to you this invitation is as follows:

The film has been refused approval by the Chief Censor of the State of Pennsylvania, J. Louis Breitinger, who was appointed by you, his objections being chiefly to those scenes in this pictorial drama which portray the iniquities of forcing drink upon young children, with the subsequent ill effects upon the manhood of youths so subjected.

We have even been threatened with arrest if we show these pictures, as we propose to do, at the Garrick Theatre on Monday next.

Why we are called upon to shorten or eliminate these particular pictures in this drama which give it its vital moral lesson, we cannot comprehend. It is impossible for us to understand the motive that would induce an act so destructive of the essential dramatic strength of an exhibition such as this.

We are in receipt of a letter from the National Board of Censorship in this connection, representing such members on its advisory committee as Lyman Abbott, Felix Adler, Charles P. Aked, R. Fulton Cutting, David H. Greer, H. Heber Newton, Anson Phelps Stokes, Oscar S. Straus, and many others.

And to-day I received this letter from one of Mr. Breitinger's own inspectors asking to see the film. It reads:

Grand Division Sons of Temperance of New Jersey
Office of the Grand Worthy Patriarch
Camden, N. J., July 28, 1914.

Mr. Wm. E. Smith, Pres.,
Famous Players Exchange,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sirs:—We are exceedingly anxious to have some of the ministers of this city and surrounding towns whom we know to be interested in the "silent drama" see "John Barleycorn."

As one of the inspectors appointed by Mr. Breitinger, and holding Inspector's ticket No. 169, I expect to see the film Monday at the Garrick Theatre, and am quite sure that while greatly interested in the advancement of temperance, my opinion will he unbiased.

We would be glad if you can furnish us with five or ten passes for use next Monday by ministers as mentioned above, and after viewing the film I shall ask them for a written opinion of it, and will forward their written opinion to you.

Yours very truly,
BURTON L. ROCKWOOD,
Grand Worthy Patriarch Sons of Temperance.

In view of the fact that people everywhere are desiring to see this film, and that your censor has refused to pass it unless the scenes pointing this moral are eliminated, and in view of the fact that we desire to have your unbiased judgment on the same, I make you this offer to see the film one hour previous to its public showing, or, if this hour is inconvenient to you, to have you and your friends attend any one of the exhibitions which will take place on Monday next.

It certainly does not seem just to me that this great lesson should be withheld from those who are anxious to see it, at the instance of one man who seems to desire (through whatever motive) to minimize or defeat the lesson.

The question as to whether he should be the sole authority to controvert the testimony of thousands of witnesses of our best moral element all over the United States seems to me to be a grave one, and one that should not be dealt with lightly.

Trusting you may find it convenient to attend this exhibition, and that I may be apprised as early as possible of your pleasure in this matter, so that I may arrange to extend to you every opportunity for yourself and your friends to view the film, I remain,

Yours truly,
(Signed) Wm. E. Smith.
President.

GOVERNOR TENER, in order not to have to either censor or censure his own censor, sent his regrets at being unable to view the film at this time, and stated that he would be away on his vacation.

While the film by no means played to capacity business during the day, there was a steady stream past the box-office, and at 9.30 in the evening all seats on the lower floor were occupied. The price of admission was twenty-five cents in the afternoon, and twenty-five and fifty at night. This did not seem to deter anybody who wanted to see the picture.

During the morning Mr. Pierce had a camera man down from Lubin's and took several hundred feet of film showing the exterior of the Garrick and the crowds entering the theatre. This will be used in boosting the show after it starts around the circuit.

"THE LITTLEST REBEL" SCORES

That "The Littlest Rebel" has won instantaneous favor is ascertained only by the sign which greets those who reach the Studebaker Theatre, Chicago, later than eight fifteen. During the hottest week the "Windy City" has ever known, this playhouse was filled to capacity every night. The press has been liberal with their praise of this remarkable war story. "The realism, the thrills and pathos injected into the greatest of all war-time spectacles makes this a play worthy only of the good success it deserves." This is but one of the lines the news critics have used in their praise of "The Littlest Rebel."

Mimi Yvonne, this little actress has an unusually capable ability that is well worth the envy of others probably better known. She was made for the role she portrays; she could not be better fitted for it if she had actually lived the life of little Virgie, the real heroine of the story. All the horrors of war are depicted vividly, the love of a soldier-father for his child, the sentencing to death of a Confederate captain and the death of a Union officer's wife, together with the thrilling battle scenes, which go to make this photoplay one that is truly realistic.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SIGN BLANCHE WALSH

The Famous Players Film Company has engaged Blanche Walsh, to be presented in a forthcoming release of her foremost dramatic triumph, "The Straight Road," one of the most popular plays from the pen of the late Clyde Fitch.

The character of Mary O'Hara, the girl of the slums, impersonated by Blanche Walsh in the original stage production, will also be played by her in the Famous Players film dramatization of the subject and permits of ideal screen depiction.

Call on Connecticut Exhibitors to Unite

Lay Plans in Bridgeport for a State Organization to Combat Censorship Legislation and Other Perils—Advance in Prices Realized

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Bridgeport, Conn., Aug. 6.

PLANS to unite managers of motion picture theatres in this city, New Haven, Hartford, Waterbury, Meriden, Stamford, Norwalk, New London and Norwich in a state organization for mutual advancement and protection, were discussed at the meeting of the Bridgeport Motion Picture Theatre Managers Association, which was held at this place on Tuesday, August 4.

The Bridgeport managers desire to send a representative to the lobby when the General Assembly meets in Hartford in January, to watch for and oppose legislation directed at the motion picture business which may be either unnecessary or harmful.

Since the organization of the Managers Association here all the larger theatres have advanced their evening admission prices from five to ten cents.

The programs have been increased, the average being about six reels.

Los Angeles Players Plan a "Gambol"

Receipts of First Annual "Frolic" Will Go to the Treasury of the Club, and Features May Be Seen in Films

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Aug. 3.

A PHOTOPLAYERS gambol is to be the big attraction in Los Angeles within the next few weeks, according to plans made at the weekly meeting of the Photoplayers, Inc., Saturday evening, July 25, at their club rooms on Hill Street.

At this regular meeting the idea was suggested and received with cheers on all sides. Rupert Julian, formerly of the Little Theatre here, and lead in several big successes of London theatres, who is now with the Universal at the Hollywood studio, was selected as chairman of a committee to make arrangements for the first annual frolic.

Among the members of the Photoplayers are scores of former stage stars, and all present gladly promised to do their part. Charles Murray, of Murray and Mack, is with the Keystone Company, and was the first to respond to the call for assistance with a number for the program.

Others followed in such quick succession that an assistant recording secretary was needed. The program will probably be staged in four or five weeks and the net receipts will go to the treasury of the organization. It is very probable the features of the program that are adaptable will be filmed at a later date.

Rochester Solid for League Harmony

Members of Up-State Branch Working Hard for Sunday Opening, and Expect Something Important Will Break Soon

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 6.

WHAT the Rochester exhibitors are perfectly satisfied with the outcome of the recent election by the national association is shown by the attitude taken by President Wolff.

When seen by a representative of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, he said:

"Rochester exhibitors are for peace and harmony, no matter who is the national president. We believe in pulling together, and the local exhibitors may be found as one man on any question affecting the motion picture interests."

The local exhibitors were all backers of Mr. Neff, but while they are sorry to see him retire, they will stick by the national organization under the new president. The local exhibitors believe in the organization of motion picture exhibitors for the furtherance of their aims.

On the censorship question the Rochester organization was a close follower of Mr. Neff's policies.

The Sunday opening matter is being pressed by the local exhibitors, and it is whispered that something will "break" soon in that matter.

Motion Pictures Invade Buffalo Schools

Projection Machines Will Be Installed in Every School in the Lake City, Beginning September 1, Under the Auspices of "The Sunday News"—Corporation Counsel and Superintendent of Education Heartily Endorse the Plan—Among the Exhibitors of the City

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 6.

UPON the arrival of a letter from Superintendent of Education Henry P. Emerson, now spending his vacation at Middleton, Mass., commending a certain proposition in every way, and since Corporation Counsel Rann has put his stamp of approval upon it, together with State Commissioner Finley and Deputy Commissioner Finnegan, it can now be officially announced that the Buffalo "Sunday News" will place a motion picture machine in every school in Buffalo, beginning September 1.

This announcement is one of the most important made in the educational world for some time, for it marks the realization, in Buffalo at least, of Edison's life-long dream, that of bringing the motion picture into daily use for the training of the "young idea."

Arrangements have been completed with the Thomas A. Edison Company for the machines made especially for this work, together with a long list of educative subjects that will make school life a pleasant one indeed. The Buffalo "Sunday News" is the first paper in the United States to put a machine in every school in its home city.

THE films prepared are adapated to the course of study in the public schools from the first grade to the end of high school study. They are designed to illustrate such subjects as geography, natural history, the drama, science and industrial work of everyday life. These machines are indispensable in vocational work, and in a word there is no department of human knowledge, short of pure metaphysics and mathematics, that is not covered. Even thought currents will be pictured in time.

The greatest educators on both sides of the ocean are in perfect accord with respect to the value of the motion picture for illustrating studies. We are an eye-minded race in these later ages and depend more upon what we see with our eyes than the thing that is told us by another or that is read out of a book.

Every Buffalo teacher will rejoice in the opportunity of making studies in her grade more vivid, attractive and effective with the aid of the Edison apparatus than they can possibly be without it.

THE "Sunday News" will put the machine into the schools and then print coupons in the paper. The pupils of the schools will clip these coupons and when they have a certain number, yet to be agreed upon, they will be taken to the special film exchange, which will soon be designatd, and get new films.

The whole scheme is yet to be worked out by the "Sunday News," but contracts have been signed and the films reserved.

Motion pictures in school work will solve a lot of problems with which school teachers have been confronted. Dull pupils will advance much more rapidly with the motion picture method than under the old system. The monotony of the school hours will be greatly relieved and children will want to run to school instead of away from it.

IT was thought at first that there was a city ordinance prohibiting the use of these machines and films, but after a talk between John D. Wells, Sunday editor of the Buffalo "Sunday News," and Corporation Counsel Rann, a favorable decision was handed down. The "News" will have the co-operation of the entire educational department of the city of Buffalo.

Of course, this is in a way a circulation affair and the livest one that has been thought of in years. The popularity of the motion picture is increasing daily with the child as one of its enthusiastic supporters, who can now go to the motion picture theatre show without his parents at whatever age and be assured of seeing not only entertaining but educative films.

Superintendent of Education Emerson is very much pleased over the successful outcome of negotiations and looks forward with keen anticipation to the beginning of the system. Says he in a recent letter:

"Now that the Corporation Counsel has given his consent, go ahead and be assured of my hearty approval of the entire matter."

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the announcement of the "Sunday News" plan, comes the report that the architect of the new school, No. 13, Major Metzger, has already incorporated in his plans a special room and setting for the use of the projector.

It is evident that there is such a thing as the psychological moment, and when schoolhouses are beginning to be constructed with a view to possible motion picture use, it is fortunate that the "Sunday News" is ready with the proposal that it furnish the machines and provide the schools with the means of illustrating their studies in the latest and most effective manner.

It is expected that all Buffalo schools will hereafter have plans incorporated for motion picture projection rooms.

"SWAT the Fly!" That is the slogan that Manager M. B. Schlesinger, of the Academy Theatre, is "crying from the housetops" this week. And hoping that the citizens of Buffalo and the children will take up the cry he has offered the incentive. For every consignment of 50 flies delivered at the theatre, a free ticket is given to the theatre. During the past few days Mr. Schlesinger got so many flies that he does not know where he is going to put them all. And meanwhile the children eager to see "the pictures" are "swatting the flies."

Manager Edward Hayes, of the special feature department of the General Film Company, gave a private exhibition of Kathlyn Williams' latest success, "In Tune With the Wild," at the Allendale Theatre on Friday evening. Many local exhibitors were in attendance who declared the feature a winner. The Strand and Elmwood have booked this film for the week of August 3.

Manager Claude Weil, of the Premier Theatre, is presenting "Checkers" at the Premier Theatre this week. This is the first of the All Star attractions which will come to the Premier this winter, following the signing of a contract between Harry Bryan, of the All Star Film Rental Corporation, and Manager Weil.

THE new Eclectic feature, "The Reign of Terror," was given a private exhibition at the Strand Theatre last Saturday evening. The photography in this feature was voted remarkable by those who were fortunate enough to see it.

Irving A. Tallis, recently director of the Elmwood Theatre orchestra, has been succeeded by Herbert Josephy, of Allentown, Pa. Mr. Josephy is a remarkable violinist and his selections before the show each evening are favorably commented upon. He will render violin solos every Sunday evening.

The announcement that Henry Marcus, former director of Shea's theatre orchestra and manager of the Academy and Lyric theatres in this city, will direct the orchestra at the new Regent Theatre, a Mark-Brock house, at the corner of Main and Utica streets, will be met with approval of all Buffalo music lovers.

The return of Mr. Marcus to the music world after five or six years retirement from the same, will mean the best music in the city at the Regent.

Christ G. Hopf, manager of the Hopf Star Theatre, at 1219 Lovejoy street, reports good business for the summer months. The Hopf Star is one of the most beautiful theatres on the East side. Mr. Hopf books nothing but the best.

NAB JUVENILE TICKET THIEVES

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 6.

During the past year several exhibitors have had occasion to call in the police to investigate the theft of tickets from their box-offices. Boys have been in the habit of entering the theatres at night and making off with rolls of tickets, which they later sold at greatly reduced prices to other children. Two youngsters were arrested several months ago and sent to the reform school, and now four others are awaiting trial for making their way into the box-office of the Lyric Theatre, in Dixwell avenue, and stealing four hundred tickets.

WIDOW OF OIL KING ENGAGES "CABIRIA"

For this picture for a single evening Mrs. Rogers will pay more than $1,000.

"Cabiria" will be presented accompanied by an orchestra of forty pieces.

Nebraska Houses Flourish Despite Heat

Grand Island Exhibitors Are Doing as Well as Though It Were Winter; in Some Cases, Better—Music a Strong Asset

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Grand Island, Neb., Aug. 5.

DESPITE the coming of hot weather, the real sizzling kind, the attendance at the four theatres in the city does not seem in the least diminished, and in consequence each show house is putting on as strong, if not stronger program, than in the winter season.

The Empress, under the management of Frank Greene, after experiencing a very successful business with the "Adventures of Kathlyn" series, has taken on the "Perils of Pauline" as a fortnightly attraction. Mr. Greene plans to run several of the first numbers on his biggest nights, and then switch, say, from the big Sunday night crowd to Monday night. He is carrying a splendid six-piece orchestra straight through the summer.

The Princess, an adjunct of the Michelson, and under the same management, has been closed for good. For a time it was conducted as a five-cent house, but the lack of seating capacity mitigated against it from the start. Mr. Michelson, the lessee, is having the building remodeled and will use it for mercantile purposes.

"Tine" Hayman, vice-president of the Nebraska association, and manager of the Lyda Theatre, reports his business keping up in good shape during the summer months. The fine six-thousand-dollar pipe organ which was installed last spring is proving quite an asset, and is doing its full share in pulling the crowds. The Lyda on each Thursday afternoon and evening is giving the people a special feature, either by the Famous Players Film Company, the Lasky Film Company, or the All Star Company. The next production will be "The Only Son," a Lasky feature.

B. H. Iback, of Eldora, Ia., was a recent Grand Island visitor, his mission being to look over the best towns in Iowa and Nebraska for the purpose of establishing a strong chain of theatres. Grand Island looked "good to him," and in consequence there may be some changes in the theatre world here in the future.

The Majestic, which at the same time is the newest and the largest theatre in the city, is experiencing what is rather phenomenal for the summer months—a steady increase in business.

There are several causes for this condition; first, the size of the house, which makes it the most comfortable in the city; the generous seating capacity; and the abundance of fans and iced air which are furnished the patrons. In addition to the "Million Dollar Mystery," which is running fortnightly in the Majestic, the presence of two excellent vaudeville features, furnished by the Western Vaudeville Managers Association, is also a strong pulling card. This theatre is under the management of Woolstenholme & Sterne, who are also connected with several other of the prominent mercantile institutions of the city.

The Michelson, which has the reputation of being one of the handsomest, if not the handsomest, little houses in the West, has for the past several years pursued the same policy—a combination of vaudeville and motion pictures, the vaudeville sketches changing twice a week and the pictures three times a week. A steady business is reported, despite the heat and counter attractions.

Pittsburghers Will Combat Building Law

Rules Regarding Aisle and Entrance Space Regarded as Persecutory in Effect, and Organization to Fight the Measure Is in Sight

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Pittsburgh, Aug. 6.

IT is possible that the motion picture men of western Pennsylvania will organize very shortly in an effort to have the law changed relating to the aisles, entrances and exits for the various motion picture houses in this section as laid down by the Labor and Industry Bureau.

Unless the law is changed, it is possible that a number of houses will have to close their doors, for it will be impossible for them to comply with the law and have any room left for seats. According to a statement made by one of the theatre managers of this city, it would seem that the law is aimed at driving out of business all houses not built especially for theatrical purposes.

Just when the meeting will be called, and where it will be held has not been decided by those who will issue the call, but it is said that plans are being laid for the holding of it very shortly.

Fighting "Old Sol" With Feature Advertising

New Haven Exhibitors Hold Their Audiences Through the Warm Weather with Good Pictures, Premiums and Voting Contests, the Best Equipment Possible, from Screens to Music and Ventilation—Country Store the Most Lucrative of All Advertising Schemes Used in That City

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 6.

AS an antidote to what they had feared might prove an unusually dull summer because of the business depression existing in these parts, local exhibitors began, some time ago, to introduce in their theatres various unique features designed to attract a big warm-weather patronage.

Results to-day show that their enterprise has been rewarded to an extraordinary extent and that their faith in the efficacy of feature advertising was more than warranted.

While houses in other cities hereabouts have been forced to shut down, or run on part time only, New Haven theatres have been playing to large audiences all through the season, and even on the warmest days have met with surprising success.

Of all the stunts tried, none was so popular as the old, reliable "country store." New Haven has about thirty theatres, and of these it can safely be said that about half used this means to attract patronage for at least one night each week.

As though by mutual agreement, "country stores" were, and still are, held on Friday nights, and are as strong as when they were in their prime. In fact, New Haven has never known the time when the device was more in use or met with greater favor.

SURPRISE nights rank second, and are held in almost as many houses as the "country stores," though they are not nearly so capable of drawing crowds. Neighborhood houses chiefly resort to this means of seeking patronage, and are moderately successful. Wednesday is the night allotted to this feature.

Monday night is devoted principally to various contests, and is one of the nights that usually finds the houses well filled. Not so much the value of the prizes offered as the nature of the contest and the interest taken in it are the strong points. There are singing and dancing contests, guessing contests, "amateur nights," etc.

Of all the features, however, few are as heartily welcomed as those introduced for the comfort and convenience, as well as the entertainment, of the patrons.

Everything possible to eliminate the drawbacks that make the prospect of an evening in a film house far from inviting has been thought of by exhibitors, and some of the things that have been installed have more than been paid for by increased patronage.

AMONG these are improved cooling systems—some elaborate and costly, others simple and inexpensive, such as cakes of ice placed on the stage and in boxes near the aisles; monster fans and advanced methods of ventilation; ice water placed in convenient coolers or distributed in sanitary paper cups by ushers, etc.

Then come the conveniences of improved screens, removing the strain on the eyes and adding to the pleasure of the audience, etc. Finally, there are the added entertainment features—better music, costly organs and orchestrions installed; large orchestras, singing, dancing, and, in the pictures themselves, multiple-reel plays.

Most of the big "stunts" have been introduced only in the large houses, where the prices of admission are higher.

Two of these places charge a flat rate of ten cents for general admission, and fifteen cents for box seats. Seats never go begging, and on Sunday in particular might hold two and three persons at each performance, if they were strong enough and the management were satisfied.

SAVIN ROCK, of course, is the home of the features, inasmuch as most of New Haven's population, and a large part of that of other cities and towns in this state, is to be found there practically all of the time during the summer.

Three houses in that resort use more unique business boosting methods than all of the other houses in the city. The houses are the Orpheum and the Airdome, owned by the White City Amusement Company and managed by Dr. S. A. de Waltoff, and the Wilcox, owned by the Frank Wilcox Amusement Company.

To mention these two there are at first a number of comparisons to be drawn. Both houses enjoy the distinction of being the largest in the state, seating about thirteen hundred each.

Both have been running for about three years, summer and winter, and both have played in opposition to the laws forbidding Sunday shows. Both have now installed orchestra-organs, costing about $5,000 each, and both have substituted for their old screens the new Radium Gold Fibre screens, also very costly.

Both have large orchestras in addition to their organs, and both have sanitary and comfort arrangements not to be rivalled anywhere in the East.

The similarity between the two houses ends there, however, for whatever the management of the Wilcox may be able to boast in the way of initiative, it can hardly be said to have greater resources than the Orpheum backers.

FOR this reason the Orpheum puts on occasional vaudeville acts—the most recent was a minstrel show in which about forty people played; it wins favor by throwing open its house to various societies, etc., for benefit performances; it gives free open-air acrobatic exhibitions, and offers to the convenience of its patrons all of the other attractions of the White City, in which it is located.

Besides, it is now planning a new feature in the line of local pictures. Manager de Waltoff is arranging to have pictures taken in the White City, so that people may see themselves in the pictures not only as strollers, but as actors taking part in little playlets enacted in the open.

Another Orpheum feature is the usher service—a number of pretty girls, in the charge of an elderly matron—all dressed in white, presenting so cool and comfortable appearance as to suggest nothing but comfort to patrons and ready to do the bidding of anyone at a moment's notice.

One of the Wilcox features is its multiple-reel shows. Some of the best films obtainable—first runs only—are shown at the theatre, and prove of themselves a drawing card that is hard to beat. The same, though in smaller measure, is true of the Orpheum.

BECAUSE the Airdome is also in the White City, only a short distance from the Orpheum, it is forced to employ numerous devices for getting patronage. The chief one was recently inaugurated, being a reduction in price of admission to five cents.

It now offers one thing that is new to theatres hereabouts—a large dance floor that is made use of while pictures are being shown. In addition it has a smoking section, so arranged as to prevent smoke from going to other parts of the house.

There is also a stringed orchestra —violin, mandolins, banjos, etc., to which there is usually vocal accompaniment. Talented singers are engaged and excellent entertainment is provided.

In the nature of side-attractions there are the country store, the tango contest and the Sunday dinner. Money prizes are awarded in the tango contests, while the Sunday dinner is a coupon affair—coupons being given out with each ticket of admission, so that patrons are entitled to a chance on a basket of supplies given away every Saturday night.

Once in a while there are souvenirs, as recently, when handsome pocket mirrors were distributed. The Airdome was rather poorly patronized early in the season, owing to the popularity of the Orpheum. It is under new sub-management now, Edward Jones being in charge in place of Theodore Nutting, who recently resigned to go into business elsewhere.

IN the city the strong-point is the country store, one of the best of which is had weekly at Poli's Bijou Theatre. Recently a handsome saddle-horse, with full riding equipment, several pieces of furniture, etc., were given away.

The Bijou is making a strong bid for popularity also with vaudeville, while it has a feature in its Sunday motion pictures of "Creation," presented three times each Sunday, under the auspices of the International Bible Students Association. These performances are free and are well patronized. Tickets are distributed among employes of various mercantile and manufacturing establishments.

The Lyric, in Dixwell avenue, is another of the houses that uses other features in connection with the country store. Its newest stunt is a vote contest, valuable prizes being offered for the persons able to name the largest number of screen players, as well as to answer questions relating to certain performances, on blanks provided for the contest. Wednesday is surprise night at the Lyric, and money and merchandise are distributed.

Central houses need little feature advertising, though the Comique, in Church street, and the Globe, in Chapel street, have added a number of summer conveniences beside the all-year comforts of good Radium Gold-fibre screens and good music.

The Globe is undergoing alterations and is installing a $5,000 organ. It is working for a big fall trade and is planning an extensive advertising campaign.

Other smaller houses are doing much in the way of repairs and alterations, and it can safely be said that thousands of dollars have been added to the amount invested in the motion picture business in this city for improvement in business conditions. As exhibitors say, there are few places in this part of the country to equal New Haven as a motion picture city, even though people here are inclined to be a bit over-critical and hard to please.

That one or two small houses have shut down is not taken to indicate anything except that nothing but the best will be tolerated.

No Rehearing for Brodkin in "Cabiria" Suit

Justice Greenbaum Denies Plaintiff's Application for a Bond from Italia Film Company Pending Action of His Injunction Suit

MORRIS BRODKIN, of the Emby Feature Film Company, who is trying to restrain Harry R. Raver, Carlo Sciamengo, and the Itala Film Company of America from showing "Cabiria" in America, has received another set-back in court. Brodkin has applied for an injunction preventing the exhibition of "Cabiria."

This was denied and Brodkin applied for a hearing and asked that a bond be deposited by the defendants pending action in the case. Justice Greenbaum has just handed down another decision against Brodkin, this time denying his application for a rehearing and bond.

When asked his opinion of the outcome of the suit, Harry R. Raver, director general of the Itala Film Company of America, the man who is directing the American and Canadian tours of "Cabiria," said that, while the litigation was expensive, he could not foresee a possible chance of losing as the court in its decision confirmed the contention of the defendants.

This contention was supported by such men as Felix Isman, William C. Oldknow, Augustus Thomas, I. C. Oes, W. E. Greene, Hiram Abrams, C. J. Hite, C. O. Bauman, H. J. Streychmans and Wendell P. Milligan, and other authorities who gave their opinion that "Cabiria" could not be classed by the wildest stretch of imagination as a "regular" release at fourteen cents a foot, which is the claim of Brodkin in instituting this action.

PREDICTS BIG THINGS FOR OMAHA TERRITORY

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 5.

"Omaha and its territory—Kansas, the Dakotas, Nebraska and Iowa—is growing faster in the motion picture realm than any other territory I can think of just now," declared C. B. Price, new manager at the Mutual exchange here. Mr. Price came here from San Francisco. He was formerly at New York, and since then has traveled from exchange to exchange all over the country, and is in a position to speak from direct knowledge.

Since he landed in Omaha, several weeks ago, the force at the Mutual headquarters here has been reorganized and doubled. He is planning a projection room for exhibitors only and will install it soon. Carpenters are still at work completing the new headquarters offices, where the exchange has more floor space than any other exchange in Omaha.

ALCO SIGNS WESTERN CONTRACT

Al. Lichtman, president of the Alco Film Company, has signed a contract with William Sievers, secretary and general manager of the New Grand Central Theatre Company, of St. Louis, whereby the latter company will handle the Alco program exclusively in Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska and southern Illinois.

The program will consist of one high-class feature a week that will be a photo dramatization of a famous novel or play with well-known artists in the leading roles. This will be supplemented by one-reel comedies in which famous comedians will appear.

After showing the program at this theatre (which, by the way, is one of the finest in the world) the program will be booked on the exclusive plan in only the very best theatres in the territory mentioned by the New Grand Central Theatre Company.

FILM CITY FOR EXPOSITION

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 6.

The motion picture men have been busy in Columbia, Miss., during this week putting the city on the screen, and every phase of the civic, industrial and educational life of the community is represented in the 1,500 feet of film now being produced.

The work is directed by E. L. Kuykendall, manager of the local picture house, and Judge W. G. Morris, of Union City, Tenn., vice-president of the New York Industrial Film Company, has general supervision over the actual taking of the pictures. The views are to form part of the Mississippi reel of motion pictures at the Panama-Pacific exposition.

FILMS LURE PATRONS FROM PACIFIC BEACHES

Weekly Increases of Exhibitors' Business in Los Angeles Prove Screen Can Compete With Sea Breezes for Public Favor —Superba Opens in California City—Lasky on Visit to Hollywood—Sheehan Reaches Coast for Box-Office

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, August 3.

LOCAL exhibitors are weekly enjoying increases in business and in most instances they attribute the greater patronage to the fact that motion picture fans are tiring of the beach attractions and other summer features of Los Angeles and suburbs.

"The Blue Mouse," a production of the DeLuxe brand, released through the Apex film exchange, was recently shown at Woodley Broadway Theatre, and the attendance was above the average. The Woodley opens at noon each day, and Monday there were many called for tickets an hour or two before the opening time. The night attendance is good, and Monday evening, usually a blue one, saw a line almost a half block long extending from the Woodley lobby.

Across the street from the Woodley, at Tally's, Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate" is pulling big business.

"The mere mention that Pickford pictures are to be shown," Manager Tally told a NEWS correspondent, "is all that is necessary to bring out a line afternoon and evening." Mr. Tally uses forty-five 24-sheet stands, and two-inch advertisements daily in each of the five newspapers for Pickford releases. The theatre has a seating capacity of a trifle less than nine hundred.

"THE Wrath of the Gods," the Thomas C. Ince production, made at Santa Monica, had its second week run at the Clune Auditorium Monday, and interest continued. The largest Los Angeles theatre is proving very popular and the attendance is far better than Mr. Clune anticipated when he leased the house two months ago. The building is owned by the congregation of the First Baptist church and used Sunday for services of that organization.

The "Lucille Love" series, the last of which was shown at first-run theatres here last week, proved a big drawing feature at the downtown houses and is still drawing lines at suburban theatres. The series was handled by the California Film Exchange, of 746 South Olive street, Los Angeles. Manager Hawkins, of the Alhambra, where the series was first shown, planned a Lucille Love Week, beginning August 3. Monday the first three series were shown, Tuesday the third and fourth, Wednesday fifth and sixth, and so on throughout the week, ending with the last two on Sunday. This made it possible for any of the Alhambra patrons who missed any one of the fifteen two-reel series to see it at this house. The feature was widely advertised in the Los Angeles "Tribune," the paper that carried the story, and Mr. Hawkins realized big business every day and night.

THE Superba, an eight-hundred seat theatre, was opened Sunday, July 25, at 526 Broadway, under the management of J. A. Quinn. A program consisting of General Film Company releases of one and two-reel subjects is being shown, the prices being ten cents for front half of house, fifteen for ten rows back, and loges at twenty cents for the evening, and ten cents for any seat in the house up to six o'clock.

In addition to pictures, there are two songs on the program, and the music is by a ladies' orchestra of five pieces. The lobby is a very pretty one, finished in marble, and the front of the building is illuminated by hundreds of lights. On top is a sign sixty feet long and forty feet high bearing the name Superba, and a fountain of different colored lights on either end.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Box Office Attraction Film Renting Company, is in Los Angeles for the purpose of opening an exchange in this city. He arrived here Thursday, July 23, and has been busy meeting exhibitors and learning conditions of the local market. Who will be the manager of the local branch or its location has not been announced.

After the exchange is opened here it is the intention of Mr. Sheehan to establish exchanges at San Francisco, Seattle and Vancouver. The local exchange will be in operation by September 1. In all probability a location will be secured on Olive street, in the vicinity of Eighth, which is the center of the film exchanges here.

THE Sunbeam Theatre, with a seating capacity of 530 at 1408 West Pico street, has been sold by W. W. Emmons to A. S. Margison. The new owner will continue with the present program of five reels for a five-cent admission.

W. W. Dunlap, formerly manager of the Gores Theatre, at Ninth and Georgia street, Los Angeles, is now in charge of the Mission Theatre at Monrovia.

Eight o'clock is now the hour for opening the Grand Theatre at First and Main streets, Los Angeles, and if it were possible for Manager H. S. Jensen to secure new films and get his help at the theatre at an earlier hour, he would open at seven o'clock each morning. The Grand has a seating capacity of nine hundred on the first floor and a big balcony, and eight reels are shown for five cents. The theatre is located in the center of the employment agency district, and early each morning hundreds of men congregate on the corner near the theatre to see if there are any openings for them. By eight o'clock most of the men know whether they are to go to work or not, and the theatre becomes the resting place of many who do not secure employment.

JESSE LASKY, head of the feature film company which bears his name, and his sister, Mrs. Samuel Goldfish, of New York City, have arrived at the Hollywood studio of the company for a stay of ten days. This is Mr. Lasky's first visit to the West Coast studio of the company since February, shortly after it had been opened, and upon his arrival he did not see many sights that looked familiar.

In the past few months, the size of the studio has been tripled and additional improvements, including a score or more dressing-rooms for players, wardrobe, and enlarging the stage, are now being made. A building to house a papier mache department and a planing mill and woodworking shop have just been completed.

When Mr. Lasky was here the stage was 40x40 and it has now been increased to the second largest in the country, 75x210.

At the regular weekly meeting of the Photoplayers, Inc., an organization of actors and directors with a membership of more than 450, held Saturday evening, July 25, the directors announced they had received a cable from Fred Mace, now in Paris, resigning the presidency of the organization, and that Joseph De Grasse, director for the Universal, had been elected to fill the office for the remainder of the unexpired term.

William T. Taylor, director of the Balboa company, was selected as vice-president, and Bertram Bracken was named a director.

EDNA MAYO SIGNS WITH FAVORITE PLAYERS

Edna Mayo has signed a contract to play leads for the Favorite Players Film Company at their studio in California.

This is not Miss Mayo's first venture in motion pictures, as she played with the Pathé Frères Company. Miss Mayo has played important roles in the "legitimate" productions of "Help Wanted," "Excuse Me" and "Madame X."

The first release of the Favorite Players will be a photo dramatization of Charles Neville Buck's famous story "The Key to Yesterday" with Carlyle Blackwell, who will be featured in its productions of popular novels and stage successes.

SHEA TO APPEAR IN MEXICAN PLAY

Thomas E. Shea, the dramatic star who for many years was a favorite with theatre-goers, has entered the motion picture world, and will act before the camera in "The Man o' Warsman."

The drama is written around the Mexican situation, and is a powerful play of the political issues of the day.

Many notable political characters in the United States and Mexico will be impersonated, and some of the political conditions in Mexico will be portrayed in a way that will be quite a revelation.

The production of the photoplay is under the supervision of Thomas E. Shea and Orville Matthews. Many photographic novelties will be used in bringing out the thrilling and fascinating scenes. The photoplay will be released August 24.

Warner's Features Plans Weekly Program

The Company Will Soon Supply Exhibitors with All Classes of Films in One, Two, Three and More Reels

PREPARATIONS are being made by Warner's Features, Inc., to release a complete program every week.

At the offices of the concern it was learned that the new policy is the result of a widespread demand on the part of exhibitors. The feature service which the company has been supplying has led to hundreds of requests for a complete program of equal quality. Accordingly, releases of one, two, three and more reels will now be offered, covering all classes of films, from single-reel comedies to the greatest features possible.

Up to the present, Warner's Features, Inc., have confined their activities to three and six-reel feature productions, making three releases a week. In this field they have enjoyed phenomenal success, some of their releases being the most decided hits ever made in the feature business.

It is likely that the complete program will go into effect very soon, although P. A. Powers, president of the company, declared emphatically that he does not intend to rush things merely for the sake of getting the program started.

"WE propose," said Mr. Powers to have every reel as nearly perfect as human ingenuity can make it. We are selecting films with the most critical discrimination, and when our first releases on the new programs are announced they will be A-1 from the viewpoints of the book exhibitor and the public."

Warner's Features, Inc., operates through America and Europe, with thirty-two exchanges located as follows:

Atlanta, Ga.; Boston, Mass.; Syracuse, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Dallas, Tex.; Denver, Colo.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Kansas City, Mo.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Minneapolis, Minn.; New Orleans, La.; New York, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; San Francisco, Cal.; St. Louis, Mo.; Seattle, Wash.; Montreal, Canada; Toronto, Canada; Detroit, Mich.; Washington, D. C.; Des Moines, Iowa; Spokane, Wash.; London, England; Chicago, Louisville, Ky.; Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Portland, Oregon, and Portland, Maine.

Proctor Sells the Albany Theatre, the Leland

Transaction Said to Be for the Purpose of Allowing Him More Time to Devote to Other Theatrical Enterprises

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 6.

SHORTLY after the announcement of the incorporation of all of the Proctor theatres, came a notice that Proctor's Leland had been put on the market.

The announcement was made by Mr. Proctor's Albany representative, Guy Graves. This, he said, was necessary so that the theatrical man's attention could be concentrated on his other Albany theatre, The Grand.

The real story is believed to be lack of business. The Leland has been considered Albany's best home of the films, and if it is sold and any other form of amusement put there ,it will be a big loss to the film-loving Albanians.

Proctor's Leland has been the cradle of the American stage since its earliest days.

Practically all of the famous stars of the country have played there, and previous to its inauguration as a picture house, was known as the home of the stock, several of the best stock companies playing there.

Ramo Rushes to Launch European War Film

Scenes of Conflict Now Raging Abroad on Way to Film Firm by Liner—To Be Used on Screen in Potter Play

RAMO Films, Inc., announces that that it is to receive Sunday, August 9, by Steamship "New York," a complete series of photographs taken by a staff correspondent at Nancy, near the Alastian frontier of France during the German invasion of last week. The photographs will illustrate a war play written for this company by Paul M. Potter entitled "The War of Wars," a drama of the Franco-German conflict, 1914.

These films are said to be the first authentic pictures of the war which is now being fought. Special arrangements have been made for speed.

Frank Egan, Sandy Hook pilot, brother-in-law of C. Lang Cobb, Jr., arranged to meet the steamer at Sandy Hook Sunday, August 9, and rush the films to New York for the Ramo laboratory.

Other material will arrive not later than Wednesday, August 12. These prints will be ready for the public by Thursday, August 13.

First Move Made for United Empire State

Leaders See in Coming Conferences Quick Fusion Action—Executive Body of the League Will Meet at the Hotel McAlpin, in New York City, and Committee Appointed for Conference with the Former Delegates Will Discuss Preliminary Plans at the Hotel Marlborough

THE preliminary steps toward a solid and effective union of the exhibitors of the State of New York into one organization, under the National League banner, have been taken.

These, it is confidently expected by the state and national leaders, will bear fruit at the meetings of the executive committee of the state branches of the League and Association, Tuesday, August 11.

On that day, the executive body of the League branch will convene at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, to formulate plans for amalgamation.

Similar action will be taken at the same time by the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of New York State, at the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel.

WHEN the two committees have come, independently, to a conclusion on the course of action to be pursued, the two bodies will hold a joint meeting and, it is confidently expected, take immediate steps, in the name of the exhibitors of the state, for the formation of a single state organization as a part of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League.

The desire of the Empire State exhibitors for amalgamation took concrete shape at the "harmony" conference between the committee of the Cinema Club of the Bronx, the New York local of the League, and the committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York, at the Marlborough-Blenheim, Friday, July 31.

The meeting was a momentous one, and those who participated in it showed their sense of their responsibilities, and manifested at every stage of the conference a determination to permit nothing to cloud the issue—amalgamation.

The committee of both locals quickly showed their desire to perfect the fusion of the two bodies at once. To accomplish this in the most lasting manner, however, it was deemed wiser to make the movement a state-wide one for union. Local action, it was agreed, should be deferred until it could be taken simultaneously with the declaration of the two state organizations for a united exhibitors' body.

IT was therefore decided to appeal to the state executive committee at once, and urge them to lose no time in doing their part organizing the New York State into a compact arm of the League.

To expedite matters, both committees pledged themselves to arrange for the series of independent and joint meetings of the state executive on August 11. Formal announcement that their plans had succeeded and that these meetings would be held on that date was made within a week after the first "harmony" conference.

Local action was then deferred until after the state organization had registered their purpose. But in order that there might be no misunderstanding as to the disposition of the harmony committee, and to give the committees of the Bronx and Greater New York bodies something to work on as soon as the way was clear, a resolution was passed, announcing that the two locals were, in effect, one from that moment, and outlining their subsequent action from their next meeting.

This resolution was introduced by Morris Fleischman, state secretary of the New York branch of the League, and was seconded by James Deegan, of the Cinema Club committee. The resolution reads:

BE IT RESOLVED: That the New York Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York, be and are hereby combined, and that this body recommend that a committee for the purpose of drafting or changing the By-Laws be appointed from the different boroughs, the committee to be composed of three members from Manhattan, three from Brooklyn, three from the Bronx, and three from Long Island, and that this committee draft or amend the By-Laws, and submit a perfected draft for adoption, after which a general election be called in accordance with the By-Laws as adopted.

The motion was carried.

It was then moved by Mr. Harris, seconded by Mr. Deegan, "that the action of this committee be deferred until a meeting of the state executive board be called and a report rendered by them, and that this committee follow out its resolves thereafter."

This was carried unanimously.

The two "harmony" committees were made up as follows: Cinema Club, Luis Harris, James Deegan, John Becker, S. Feinblatt and Morris Fleischman.

Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York, Philip Rosenson, Samuel H. Trigger, Lee A. Ochs and Aaron A. Corn.

The importance of the meeting was demonstrated in the attendance of President Marion S. Pearce, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League; George H. Wiley, former National Secretary of the League; Fred Herrington, of Pittsburgh, and several exhibitors from Buffalo and other cities in western New York.

WHAT the procedure of the two state executive committees will be when they meet on August 11 cannot well be foreshadowed. The meetings are called for 11 o'clock in the morning, and the committees will meet simultaneously. Joint sessions will be held immediately following these conferences.

There can be little doubt, however, that decisive action looking to an immediate consolidation of the exhibitors of the Empire State will result. Every disposition is being manifested by the leaders to bring this about at the earliest possible moment, and the action of New York State in this regard, it is freely conceded, will have a great effect upon the action of the exhibitors in other parts of the country.

In view of these important meetings, the annual election of officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York, which was to have taken place August 4, was postponed until after the meeting of the state executive boards.

William A. Douque, secretary of the state association, made this announcement, at the same time that he gave out notice of the executive board meeting at the Marlborough the following Tuesday.

PROMOTER BREAKS JAIL

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 5.

FRANK NELSON, the man who a number of Rochesterians claim swindled them by inducing them to invest in a motion picture concern, broke jail here on July 25, together with two other prisoners, and was free just one week. Deputy Sheriff William Pollock captured him in Toronto on August 1 and brought him back here, to wait the disposition of his case by the grand jury. Nelson decided to waive extradition and was brought back here immediately. He will probably be indicted for jail breaking, and he is already under indictment on the charge of swindling.

WILL RELEASE BAMFORD COMICS

The Acme Motion Picture Corporation, New York, will have ready for release soon six "Bamford Comics," in single reels and split reels.

Summer Business in Excellent Shape—The Pitt, One of the Largest "Legitimate" Theatres in Pittsburgh, Failing in Stock and Vaudeville, in Line for Motion Pictures—Hommel Sends Complete Outfit to Costa Rica for Use in Manufacturing Educationals

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 6.

ALBERT A. WEILAND, head of the Weiland Film Company, will shortly join the ranks of the benedicts. He is to be married on August 12 to Miss Aurelia Margaret Reckinger, of Braddock. Following the ceremony the couple will leave for a tour which will include a visit to Bermuda.

The Grelle Feature Film Company, with offices in the Cameraphone building has purchased the latest release of the Excelsior Feature Film Company entitled "The Toll of Mammon." This is a great four-reel production featuring Octavia Handworth, supported by Gordon DeMaine, Tom Tempest, William A. Williams and a cast of well-known screen artists. It is a strong dramatic screen story, and it is said contracts have already been signed for producing it in a number of Pittsburgh theatres.

The Pitt Theatre at Indiana, Pa., has been remodeled and in addition to its enhanced appearance it now has a seating capacity of 600. Francis A. Mackert, formerly owner of the Knickerbocker in Braddock, is the new proprietor of the theatre and the Feature Film and Calcium Light Company furnished the equipment.

"The Million Dollar Mystery" is advertised thoroughly all over Indiana and is being shown at the Pitt Theatre. Mackert runs a full page advertisement in the local paper and a one-column writeup on the first page. For a poster display he runs a double-faced 24-sheet across the main street of the town. The poster is mounted in a most artistic manner and is attracting the attention of that section. He stated that business is very brisk since he opened after remodeling.

LUDWIG HOMMEL, president of Ludwig Hommel and Company, is furnishing a complete motion picture camera, with necessary film and equipment for developing and making positives; two projection machines with portable booths are also added and are to be used in publicity work in extending knowledge of telephone service in Costa Rica. Mr. Hommel was for many years connected with telephone work in Costa Rica and had charge of most of the important installations in Central America. The equipment will be sent to that section of the country.

Charles Schatz, of the Lyceum Theatre, Meadville, Pa., was in Pittsburgh recently calling upon some of the film exchanges. He is after new features and reports business in that city as being first class.

Employees of the Independent Film Exchange recently held their annual outing at Bradford Woods, a short interurban car ride out on the Butler and Harmony car line and the outing was a complete success in every respect.

William J. Lee, representing the Picture Playhouse Film Company, of New York, was recently in Pittsburgh. He was looking up a location for the establishment of an office here. He states the company expects to release one feature a week in this section.

MANAGER FRANCE, of the Feature Film and Calcium Light Company, announces that his firm will take over the complete "Lucille Love" series, which is proving such a big drawing card in local houses running the Universal schedule. In the course of a few months the company will have the films for the complete series. It has been suggested that a daily showing of one instalment with one or two additional reels for a period of 15 days would prove a profitable plan and a number of the theatre managers here seem to be in favor of the idea.

The new Court Theatre, located at Wylie and Sixth avenue, has been opened and has a capacity of 300. The Calcium company furnished the projection machines, two Power's 6-A Cameragraphs, motor-driven, also the screen and booth. G. D. Demas is the proprietor of the theatre and has made it one of the most attractive in the city.

It is possible that the Pitt Theatre, in Pittsburgh, one of the largest theatres in the city, is soon to be turned into a motion picture house. The theatre has not been a success with a stock company and vaudeville has also proved unprofitable while motion pictures run throughout the summer have filled the house right along.

Harry Megowan, who recently returned from a three weeks' booking tour of West Virginia, reports that in some parts of the state he found business remarkably good, while in other sections the proprietors were hardly making expenses.

JACK WARTANIAN, of the Auditorium Theatre, Johnstown, was recently in Pittsburgh booking feature films for his house this fall. He stated that business was exceptionally good in the Flood City.

The opening of the Fox Film Exchange in Pittsburgh has been deferred until the latter part of August. Just who will manage the concern in this city is not known.

The Hippodrome, at Keystone, W. Va., ran "On the Firing Line" and charged ten and twenty cents, whereas their price formerly was five cents. The house was filled. It is said the picture will be shown again soon.

W. C. Bachmeyer, manager of the Famous Players Film Service, of Pittsburgh, met with a painful accident recently while he was stepping off a street car at Cincinnati. A heavy ring he wears caught on the hand railing of the car as he was alighting and tore his finger to the extent that it required seven stitches to close the wound.

Mr. Kierst, of the Hippodrome Theatre, and also the United Film Company, at Charleston, W. Va., reports that business is booming in "The Million Dollar Mystery."

John Guthrie, who runs two houses in Grove City, Pa., was in the city recently and signed a contract for Universal service in one of his houses. His other house will use General Film service.

LEHRMANN PRODUCING COMEDIES FOR UNIVERSAL

Henry Pathe Lehrman, erstwhile director of the inimitable Ford Sterling and formerly Mr. Sterling's director in the Keystone company, has begun producing comedies for the Universal program at the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal.

He will fill the position of supervising director for three comedy companies, the products of which will be released under the brand name L. K. O., meaning Lehrman Company. Abraham Sterns, brother of Julius Sterns, who has had considerable experience in the business end of motion picture manufacture, has been chosen as Mr. Lehrman's business manager.

Mr. Lehrman brought with him from New York three actors, all well-known stars, who will play the leading roles in his first company. They are Billie Ritchie, English comedian; Henry Bergman, well-known character man, and Gertrude Selby, famous as a vaudeville artist.

THE WHY AND WHEREFORE OF "RIGHT" EQUIPMENT IN THE THEATRE

One hundred per cent success!

It is an interesting exhibitor problem.

Retailers the world over are striving for it. They are limited to two alternatives. First, increasing selling prices. Second, decreasing maintenance costs.

The exhibitor—retailer of films—faces an acute situation. His admission prices are fixed, both by competition and local environment. He can build up patronage. But the maximum there is soon established. He has one item which is free from competition. He is free to reduce or increase it at will. And that item is the road to the elusive goal of all ambitions—one hundred per cent success.

It is commonly known as "Overhead."

Its scope, while limited, is wide. It embraces the entire theatre. Single handed, it has cast great enterprises into the pit of bankruptcy. Cuddled and courted, it has converted narrow profit margins into twenty, fifty and even one hundred per cent dividends.

It is an item well worth the attention of every exhibitor. How can it be bridled and driven to help pull the film retailer to one hundred per cent success?

Therein lies the aim and purpose of The Buyers' Service Department of "The Motion Picture News."

At its inception the chief intent was to bring exhibitors and manufacturers into closer communion. To fit certain standards of products to theatres of equal standard was the nucleus of the plan.

Out of this was born an idea, presented here as the first annual Equipment Number.

Its purpose is singular. To aid in the reduction of "overhead" or maintenance costs is the aim.

Each chair, every carbon, each individual part of the projection machine, the decorations, box office appliances, in brief, every piece of equipment used in the theatre, represents a certain investment. Nor does the expenditure end when the purchase price is paid.

The rest is maintenance. By cutting it down, the profit margin widens.

To gather together all possible information to reduce the maintenance of each item of equipment the exhibitor uses, and present it in "The Motion Picture News" every week, is the service tendered by The Buyers' Service Department.

And the first Annual Equipment Number marks the introduction of a service designed to aid every exhibitor to come closer to the pinnacle of commercial achievement—

One hundred per cent success!

PROVEN FACTS ABOUT PROJECTION

IN writing the following lines there is no intention to give anybody a lesson, nor to employ those technical words which are not always necessary to explain things that are simple for one who is interested in understanding them.

The aim is to give those who approach a projection machine, of whatever make, a few words of advice, some of which they may already know, and others which their predecessors have experienced before them, and which will help them to avoid errors.

As happens often in other arts and professions, certain people in our own trade sometimes take pleasure in grumbling and constantly repeating that everything is altogether wrong. In their opinion, the existing projection machines are too complicated and expensive—two things which often go together—and they wonder why it should be so difficult to use a projector and why it should sometimes break down.

Two machines in a booth look, to their eyes, just as superfluous as the operator himself.

It is true that two locomotives are seldom used in order to satisfy the traveler.

It is also true that a motorcar can be driven by its proprietor after he has taken a few lessons, but these examples have no bearing on the projection machine which has to count with various other factors than itself, such as the screen, the film, the construction of the theatre, etc.

Certain complications in the projection machine are also due to the fact that they serve other purposes than projection, as, for example, fire shutters. Aside of these complications it must not be forgotten that the whole art of projection is based upon an artifice, which, as we all know, consists in favorably deceiving the eye and giving it the impression of life by means of ordinary stationary images. Projection should therefore not be compared with vehicles to which mechanical movement has simply been applied.

What Is Expected of Projectors

The projection machine is a tool and a tool that must work at any rate and give satisfaction, as the people who pay in advance fully rely on the manager and are convinced that he will endeavor to interest them by absorbing their minds during one hour or two with something different from their ordinary daily struggle for life. Therefore he must avoid the slightest mistake or neglect which would remind the public that it is all a "make up."

What is to be done in order to attain the desired result? Relatively very little.

Always to restrain expenses just simply for reasons of economy, without considering if the suggested purchase is necessary and will be appreciated by the public, for whom we work, is bad policy, and resembles the idea of a farmer who, also for reasons of economy only, placed very little seeds in his earth and was astonished at the harvest to see his neighbors gather a hundred times more than himself.

I have no desire to encourage excessive prodigality, but at the same time I am absolutely opposed to the idea that one can do as much and as good work without the tools that are necessary to another. A number of people still ignore the fact that the advance of the American industry is due greatly to her adoption of the most improved tools.

Good Tools Are Indispensable

Tools are not only useful but essential. Take, for instance, a badly repaired film, one of those which so often give the operator trouble. Nine times out of ten it has been repaired by hand without the aid of a film mender. After you have repaired the film it will soon break again and another half a dozen or so images will be missing. Every operator has received such films from the exchange and sent them back after the show in the same condition, if not worse, and therefore know this by experience.

There are no rocking chairs in the operator's booth, neither are there windows facing beautiful parks. Most operators can do without those things, but the greatest satisfaction to the operator is a full set of tools, including a perfect projector.

Give the operator what he needs and if he knows how to make use of it, your house will be the rendezvous of the crowd and the crowd that pays, because it appreciates.

Some Necessary Appliances

There are certainly things on the market which are not absolutely necessary in every booth. On the other hand, there are more modern devices and small objects which are indispensable if one wants to be up to date, I may say that it is often the interest of the exhibitor to keep his eyes open on the novelties, as some of them aside from the fact that they improve the picture, constitutc a real source of economy.

Take, for instance, the non-breakable condenser; here is a necessary part of the apparatus which is more economical although the initial price is somewhat higher than for ordinary condensers, for the reason that the manufacturers guarantee it to last a year and not to change its color during the same period.

Do you realize what that means in case of condensers?

Another example. Perhaps you have a screen which tires your patrons' eyes and you have tried everything to help it and have not succeeded. The best thing, of course, would be to purchase a better one, but if you do not wish to do so, did you ever guess that a set of golden radium condensers would be the remedy and with a rather reasonable expense?

As for the projection machine itself, there are already excellent machines on the market such as Edison, Power's, Simplex and the famous Motiograph. Another machine is said to soon be on the market. As a matter of fact, it is under way and though will be a little more expensive, it appears that you will get something for your money!

While certain manufacturers do not hesitate to be frightened by a slight increase in money, others, like Bing, are sparing no efforts to combine perfection with reasonable prices.

The Same Care for All Machines

I do not know what kind of a machine you use, but whether it is one or another, great care must be taken with it. You will thus not only get better results, but also prolongs its life.

The first thing to bear in mind is, that when a small part is worn out, it must be replaced without delay so as to avoid spoiling of other more expensive parts and which will one day result in the complete collapse of the whole machine.

Operators are sometimes discouraged when taking charge of a new model or make because it does not work as easily as the old one, when merely a little patience is necessary, until the parts have been used for a short while and they get used to the machine. But it must not be forgotten that a new machine must be lubricated very often, otherwise the bearings or other important parts "seize" and have to be replaced or repolished.

The best expedient for detecting neglect in oiling is to examine the color of the oil on used parts which is generally black, because it contains the small particles of metal detached by friction from the said parts. There is no better diagnostic.

Lubricating Hints

While speaking about oil, it reminds me of the Geneva movement. Great care must also be taken to have this constantly in an oil bath and watch the level so that the predetermined point is attained, but do not omit to renew the oil in the reservoir from time to time, before refilling or covering with fresh oil, clean all parts with mineral oil or petroleum. Do not hesitate to do the same thing with the fire-shutter movement.

Oil sounds like something very common, which we all know, a sort of greasy product which you put in wherever you find a hole. But all greasy and fat products are not oil for motion picture projectors. As a rule, sewing machine oil will also suit motion picture machines. Unfortunately, however, most of the so-called sewing machine oils are no more fit for sewing machines than for projectors.

Under any circumstances, should you doubt my word and use oil of inferior quality and thus get in trouble, I can only advise you to clean the soiled parts with petroleum and afterwards lubricate them again with real oil.

Do not be too zealous, however, and cover every part with too much oil. It will spread and sprinkle over your clothes and film. Moderation is a word yet to be put on every bottle or box of material we use, it is sometimes hard to be in need of something we have bungled with before.

Other Essential Apparatus

There are numerous instruments the usefulness of which is often misunderstood, among them are rheostats, resistances, transformers, generators, lighting apparatus, condensers, coolers, lenses, etc., all of which will have to be explained in a less imperative way and in less pretentious words than it has been done before.

The present article is more intended for the general care of the projection material than any device in particular. Although we shall have to insist that lenses constitute the most delicate part in the projection material, I know of no better advice regarding lenses than the general remarks contained in the catalogues of the very reliable American optical firm, Bausch & Lomb, and which read as follows:

> To secure the best results they (the lenses) must be kept perfectly clean and should be protected as far as possible from dust and finger marks.
> A soft, oft-washed linen cloth is the best appliance for cleaning lenses.
> Do not use any kind of polishing material, alcohol or other solvent on a lens.
> To remove finger marks, breathe upon the surface and wipe lightly, with a circular movement.
> A lens should not be exposed to the heat of the sun or of steam coil pipes, and should not be allowed to remain for a long time in a damp place.

The Mistake of Using Chamois

I call the reader's attention to the fact that many operators still persist in using chamois skin for cleaning lenses, not realizing that while chamois may constitu'e an excellent polishing medium, it scratches the delicate surface of the lens.

After we have taken the habit of looking after our lenses the film gate must also occupy our attention.

The gate must be absolutely clean. If you are not in possession of a special tool, that is no excuse for not cleaning it, as the gelatine scratched off the film will accumulate in the gate and ruin all other films.

Take your finest screwdriver, cover the blade with a piece of clean cloth and the result will be good enough till you get a more appropriate tool.

There is no determined time nor number of times for cleaning the gate; it is never too clean and you will never clean it too much. Start cleaning at the bottom of the gate, the blade of the tool being turned upwards so that when ascending the dirt will be retained on the rag, instead of falling down on the machine.

A Little Miscellaneous Advice

I do not wish to repeat things which everybody in the trade knows, but it too often happens that the film is not properly engaged in the slot of the take-up reel and is not rewound, when the operator remarks it is often too late to mend and the film is dropped on the floor among dirt of all kind. That way of running the film is not only extremely dangerous, but is one that totally ruins it. Better, herefore, make sure before you start that the spring which controls the speed of the reel is in order and that your take-up reel works in perfect harmony with your upper reel.

I suppose every man who handles a projector knows that the loops must not be forgotten and that as soon as you are through with a film to put it back in its box. These precautions are not mere formalities and must be observed for the sake of safety and in order to avoid deterioration of the film. Is it not our duty to save other people in the trade useless trouble, and are we not disappointed when our own interests are neglected by others?

It is also wise to always have in the booth a certain number of tools, even if one does not at first know how to use them. As soon as you become acquainted with a tool, the idea of its usefulness follows, and the way of using it is often suggested by its form.

If you wish to get a set of tools the following are the most useful: a hammer, a file, a screwdriver, a drill, a knife, pliers, a wire cutter, a pair of scissors, an oil can. All others should be procured according to space available in the booth and funds.

PROJECTION LENSES

Burke & James, Incorporated, of Chicago, are introducing the Voightlander Company's projecting lens, and by the many severe tests that it has been given, it has proven to be of excellent quality.

The lens is made on the Petzval system, and is of the highest quality of selected glass, thereby giving remarkably even illumination over the entire screen. The field of this lens is absolutely flat, giving critical sharp definition. These lenses are so high optically corrected that no central stops are used, whereby the full benefit of the light is obtained, it is claimed by the company.

The lenses are furnished in one quarter size mounts and will fit all of the modern projection machines.

Bausch & Lomb Lenses

From the time the company first brought microscopes years ago and made a reputation for the quality of its instruments to its entrance into the motion picture field, the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, Rochester N. Y., has won renown wherever the products of its factories are known. The name of the concern has become a household word, or rather "an office word," among practically every operator, manager or those having anything to do with projection work.

Exhibitors may get a clear idea of the facilities at the command of the firm in the statement that the Carl Zeiss concern of Jena, universally known for the scientific instruments it manufactures, is associated with the Bausch & Lomb corporation and that the unlimited resources of the German concern are at the disposal of this progressive American company.

Lenses of Erker Brothers

The Erker Brothers Optical Company, of St. Louis, has a long record of success behind it, extending over a period of thirty-five years. The company has always made it a point to handle only goods of acknowledged merit, and thus has built up a trade which has resulted in their carrying customers on their books who have been with them for a long time. This is a flattering reputation for any concern.

The extensive line the firm carries enables a customer to get practically everything he needs, with perhaps few exceptions.

The company considers each exhibitor in the light of a friend, and invites correspondence pertaining to problems confronting him which the firm with its wide experience may be able to solve for him.

All articles listed in its catalogue are constantly kept in stock, and orders are filled the moment they are received. The line includes everything from projection machines to carbon sharpeners.

OILS FOR THE PROJECTOR

THE E. R. Latchaw & Company, Marietta, Ohio, manufacturers of motion picture machine oil, consider their output a high-class article. The oil has been subjected to a high-fire test, thus making it free from acids. It will not gum, and it is possessed with the property "gravity," so that it will not fly or crawl on the machine.

Each can is guaranteed to meet all requirements as a lubricant for a projection machine. Owing to this oil being manufactured especially for motion picture machines, a very small quantity is required, which besides being cheap in itself, prolongs the utility of the machine.

SPEED CONTROLLERS

AN arc controller is useful in any motion picture theatre; for every motion picture house must employ one or more arc lamps, and the carbons of every arc lamp must be fed. The arc controller feeds the carbons uniformly and in proportion as they are consumed, and maintains a perfect arc at all times.

This device, while producing a perfect light, enables the operator to give more attention to his machine and film and the result on the screen and make quick changes without bothering about his lamp.

The arc controller consists of a small motor direct coupled to the feeding mechanism, which in turn, is connected to the feed handle of the lamp. No lamp adjustments are disturbed.

The unit is placed on the floor, or on any suitable stand behind the lamp house. It is compact; measuring over all about 6x7x17 inches.

Shipped Complete

It is shipped with the necessary gearing to replace the present feed handle of the lamp, a rod to connect the same to the controller, a "cutout" box with switch and fuses attached, and sufficient lengths of armored wire—that between the motor and "cutouts" already attached, and that for the positive and negative carbon connections and the positive service connection properly tagged.

Its cost of maintenance is negligible. The motor consumes about one-two-hundredth of the amperes used at the arc. The controller operates in an oil bath, which will remain at its proper level for about a month. The oil cups on the motor should be refilled occasionally.

Its operation is simple. The operator trims his lamp, using all of the adjustments already provided—"strikes" the arc by hand, parts the carbons a little, as usual, throws the arc controller switch, tightens a thumb screw on the lamp connection, and, the arc controller feeds the carbons until released, or until they are consumed.

The size of the arc is adjusted for at the controller and this adjustment may be changed at will; also, the lamp may be converted to hand feed at will, by simply loosening the above mentioned thumb screw.

Unvarying Voltage

The voltage across the terminals of the arc is practically unvarying at the point adjusted for; therefore, the arc remains uniform in size and shape.

The arc controller is of rugged construction and not liable to derangement, and is guaranteed by its manufacturers, the Speed Controller Company, of New York.

CONVERTERS AND GENERATORS

GOOD, brilliant motion pictures fill the house. The goodness of the pictures depends upon your selection of the films. Brilliancy of pictures is assured by the use of a Wagner Single-phase Converter, manufactured by the Wagner Manufacturing Company, St. Louis. It converts the usual alternating current supply to a steady, direct current, the best current for motion picture projection, it is declared.

The Wagner converter is easy to install, and easy to operate. It is rugged and reliable, and its first cost is its last cost.

It is a simple, reliable outfit for motion picture work and for charging vehicle batteries in the home or public garage.

Anyone can operate it

In motion picture work it is only necessary to operate a switch. For charging vehicle batteries it is a simple matter to plug into the battery socket, start the converter and adjust the current for charging the battery.

There are no fragile parts—nothing delicate. An occasional oil supply to the bearings is the only attention required.

The Cushman Motors

In the early stages of the picture show business the person wanting his own private lighting plant ran up against many snags. The gas engine has always been looked upon as the logical motive power for the generator work. The first requisite in an engine for this work is that it must be smooth and even when in operation to insure delivery of steady, constant voltage at the switchboard.

A light weight compact engine means not only convenience in handling, but economy as well, and the Cushman engine is claimed to fill this niche.

From a ready sale for Cushman engines, manufactured by the Cushman Motor Company, Lincoln, Neb., for this generator work, it was the next logical step for them to offer the complete plant, the principal sale of which is among the traveling picture show operators.

The Cushman complete lighting plant is very distinctive because of its extreme light weight and compactness and smooth, even running qualities.

Steady and Constant Voltage

The operator of Cushman plants is assured of steady, constant voltage and a white, clear light just as many hours as may be needed. The importance of this feature is one that cannot be emphasized too strongly, for the success or failure of these plants is in exact ratio to the service obtained therefrom.

The complete plants are mounted on skids, all connected up complete, ready for operation, so that it is only necessary to run the wires from the generator to the picture arc connecting up the lighting circuits and it is ready for use.

Expense a Small Item

Where the Cushman 4-hp. engine, with the 2 kw. 60 volt generator is used, the operating expense under normal conditions is a small item, varying from eighteen to twenty-five cents, depending upon conditions for a three or four hour run.

Best possible proof of the adaptability of Cushman engines for this picture show work is evidenced by the fact that many owners have from three to six Cushman engines being used for this work.

CONDENSERS AND DOWSERS

THE Golden Radium condensers of A. J. R. MacDougall, New York, are not, according to a statement of the company, guaranteed against breakage, but will give a soft gold or sunlight picture and therefore eliminate the eye strain resulting from the white light.

This firm also carries two-in-one film cement for mending films and two-in-one oil for motion picture machines, which does not gum or run over the machine and is a thorough lubricant.

Still another of their products is an automatic shutter which may be attached to any Power's machine, and in combination with the regular shutter is almost sure to prevent the film from catching fire. This is not a friction shutter, and has no springs, gears or magnets to depend on for its operation.

An Automatic Dowser

Alhambra Automatic Dowsers, made by the Alhambra Company, Canton, Ohio, are adapted for use wherever motion pictures are shown, especially where the machines are motor driven. Their distinctive features are that they automatically cut off the light from the apertures should the film break; or the take-up belt become loose or broken it also sounds the alarm just loud enough for the operator to hear.

By installing it on his machines he would reduce his fire risk 95 per cent as the majority of film fires are caused by the film breaking and getting in front of the light.

Automatic Cut-Off

It is guaranteed to automatically cut off the light should the film or take-up belt become broken or slack, and is guaranteed against defective workmanship or material for a period of two years.

It is very easily installed; any operator can install it in fifteen to twenty minutes; it requires about ten feet of wire and two dry batteries.

The cost of maintenance is about fifty to seventy-five cents per year. It requires no care except to keep it clean and a renewal of batteries about three times a year. Its money saving or rather money making advantages are many; it gives the operator more confidence and allows him to watch the results on the screen. The increase in the quality of projection will soon show the results in the box-office receipts, not only that but the saving of one reel of film would be ten times the cost of the dowser.

The Laemmle Condenser

The Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis, Minn., finds that its imported condensers are meeting with tremendous sales throughout the country. They are imported direct from the Jena, Germany, glass works, and it is claimed that the finest and purest glass is used in the lenses. The manufacturers guarantee the condensers to be the best quality, and if they are properly seasoned before put in use, are, according to the statement of the company, practically non-breakable.

The company manufactures and sells direct to the theatre manager another article of importance to an exhibitor. That is the Brightasday curtain emulsion. It consists of two sets of paint cans—the white and the black border paint. It is said that when applied it will produce the most brilliant picture on the curtain, and will light the theatre without affecting the projection. The liquid can be put on any wall.

CAMERAS FROM A TO Z

An exhaustive series of articles on motion picture cameras that will extend through several issues, will begin in the August 22d issue of "The Motion Picture News." No one in the motion picture industry is more qualified to write on this subject than H. M. Schoenbaum, the "News" expert. Watch for his authoritative articles.

SEATING AND INTERIOR DECORATION

THE best decoration and equipment go hand in hand with the most finished examples of the motion picture art. A poorly furnished theatre showing good films does business under a handicap, and an attractive house putting on indifferent photoplays is not any better off in the long run.

The day has passed when either can be neglected with safety. The exhibitor who counts on remaining in the field with the hope of developing the earning capacity of his theatre to the limit must pay equal attention to these important factors.

With the first signs of motion pictures getting beyond the experiment stage farsighted exhibitors, realizing that a new form of amusement would shortly be established on a permanent basis, prepared to attract and hold patronage through the same agencies employed by "legitimate" managers. Hence the attention to the appearance of theatre interiors and the inauguration of plans providing for comfortable surroundings.

Motion Picture Theatre Interiors

The evolution from narrow, whitewashed halls and converted stores to structures especially built for the accommodation of immense crowds in an environment vying in magnificence and luxurious ease with the alluring comfort and splendid decorative effects of old-line theatres has been the wonder of all beholders.

Very often the few minutes a patron sits waiting for the first run of the pictures determines whether he shall return to that particular house. During that short time he scans his surroundings and takes mental notes. The effect of the interior influences his attitude toward the theatre, and often the pictures. If skilful decoration creates a pleasing impression, the patron unconsciously gets in a receptive mood and goes home with a feeling of complete enjoyment. He perhaps does not realize how much the appearance of the walls, ceiling, and proscenium arch has contributed to his satisfaction. And, also, he might not stop to think that the equipment had a great deal to do with his pleasing remembrance of the evening's entertainment.

A soft-cushioned, roomy seat with a wire support underneath that really did perform its supposed functions and kept his hat from falling on the floor probably helped that man to become a regular patron without his realizing why.

Solid Comfort Necessary

If the chair rows are far enough apart to prevent late comers from treading on his pet corn in crowding by to their seats, and his wife does not have to exercise eternal vigilance to keep her hat from being swept off her lap every time somebody passes, that couple constitutes walking advertisements for the theatre whose manager has thought it worth while to consider the comfort of his clientele.

All these influences mean success or failure. Who won't want to come again to the theatre making a silent but strong appeal by a harmonious decorative scheme, restful to the eye and soothing to the senses?

The average theatre-goer has no knowledge of period styles, and perhaps cares less; he does not know the difference between a Louis XV wall decoration and an Italian Renaissance panel; but as no man is absolutely dead to a sense of color and form, his latent artistic sensibilities are capable of being aroused by the subtle appeal of a harmonious arrangement of blended tints and graceful lines.

The Acme of Theatre Decoration

The builders of the Strand Theatre, New York, the largest and probably the most tastefully decorated motion picture house in the country, recognized this universal trait and have converted it into a business asset.

That intangible something which painters call "atmosphere" in a picture makes its influence felt in interior theatre decoration to a greater extent than many might imagine. This very same "atmosphere" gives a theatre tone—good or bad—and tone, acting unconsciously on the feelings of patrons, creates the mood which either makes them like or dislike any particular place of amusement, aside from the entertainment offered for their consideration.

It will pay any exhibitor a thousandfold to engage the services of the best decorator within his means—a man who really knows something about the subject; not a fourth-rate house painter, who, because he isn't color blind and carries around a sample book of five-and-ten-cent-store wallpaper showing designs consisting of one-inch alternating green and yellow bars on a pink background, thinks that providence has blessed him with an artistic eye.

Elaborate schemes of period styles are not necessary to make motion picture theatres really decorative. Pleasing effects may be obtained by less elaborate means, provided the decorator exercises good taste. If he avoids violent color contrasts and bears in mind that simplicity is the keynote of the greatest art, he will not go astray.

Flamboyant designs and bizarre tints are fatal. Rather than that, let the exhibitor give up any attempt at beautifying his interior and stick to bare walls.

Outdoor Effects

A pleasing decorative plan, particularly appropriate during the present season, consists of outdoor effects obtained by the use of artificial plants, vines, splashing fountains and the subdued, mellow light of miniature incandescent globes hidden among leaves, with a few bold sweeps of sky tint on the ceiling, to complete the pastoral illusion.

The effect is novel and the cost by no means prohibitive. A small house could be decorated after this manner in good taste without the exhibitor feeling—in case he was unable to lay out any large sum for improving the appearance of the theatre under the direction of experts—that he was at the mercy of somebody who knew less about the matter than himself.

Firms from whom he bought his plants, fountains and lighting system, whose experience enables them in furnishing theatres to make helpful suggestions, are always willing to put their knowledge at the disposal of the small exhibitor.

In considering the comfort of his patrons, the exhibitor must bear in mind his seats particularly, as was mentioned before. Each chair must be accessible, while he is striving to give the maximum of comfort with the minimum of waste space. But for all that it would be better to forego putting in fewer chairs than the auditorium could hold rather than be obliged to make the aisles and the rows too narrow.

Making Patrons Want to Come Again

The smoking-room for the men and the rest-rooms for the women, if there are any, shoull be made as decorative and comfortable as the main part of the building.

In short, strive to make every patron feel like coming back again. You can do it by following the suggestions briefly outlined in the foregoing. For every dollar you spend in making your place attractive, there will be more than double in return.

Observe these hints in conjunction with the presentation of the best motion pictures on the market, suitable to the tastes of the particular clientele you cater to, and you will have a winning combination unable to beat.

SEATING A THEATRE

The importance of proper seating in motion picture theatres is so great that all managers should give the matter full consideration. The question has been thoroughly discussed for readers of Tœ5 Motion Picture News by an authority, L. J. Gaffney, of the American Seating Company. His views follow:

"There are a few points that every prospective builder of a motion picture theatre should have before him when contemplating the erection of a new building or the altering of an old one, that pertains particularly to the seating; since the seating capacity affects the box-office receipts, the tendency to put in the maximum seating capacity sometimes tends to detract from the comfort of the patrons.

"We give a few general facts that are obtained from actual experience and the collection of data from buildings now open.

Width of the Seats

"Width of Chairs.—The average width of chair in the ordinary picture house, where a wood back and seat chair is used, has been 18 inches. It is, however, the minimum width that should or can be used. When a wide arm-rest is placed on an 18-inch chair it is usually 2 inches wide, thus permitting but a 16-inch space for a person between the arms. It is therefore advisable to use a 19-inch chair when possible. If all 19-inch chairs cannot be put in, then as many as possible, with the balance 18 inches to fill out a row.

"When an upholstered chair is used, the width should not be less than 19 inches, and as many 20-inch chairs as possible should be provided. The arm-rests on an upholstered chair are usually 2⅝ inches wide, so that a wider chair must be provided to permit reasonable comfort.

"Spacing.—In most states the spacing from back to back of chairs is governed by law, but this pertains mostly to the large theatres. The majority of small towns do not pass ordinances to this effect, but in no case ought a prospective buyer figure the spacing of his chairs closer than 30 inches back to back at corresponding points.

"When an upholstered chair is used. a little more room ought to be provided, if possible; 32 inches from back to back is a good, comfortable spacing; in no case, however, should the chair be placed closer than 30 inches, as mentioned.

Aisles and Screen Spacing

"Aisles.—Here, again, the law in most states governs the width of aisle in large cities; but where there is no law or ordinance and the point is left to the builder, an aisle not less than 3 feet 6 inches ought to be provided. Of course, in a wide house, two or three aisles are used, but none of them should be less than 3 feet 6 inches in width, as that space allows two people to pass each other comfortably. Chairs between two aisles should not number more than thirteen, and between an aisle and the wall not more than seven. This arrangement would then not inconvenience the patrons by having too many pass them.

"Screen Spacing.—It is hard to determine exactly where the first row of chairs ought to set, but a careful study of the picture theatre shows that the back of the first row of chairs is ten feet from the screen; the tendency should be to give a little more space, rather than less. Owing to the advancement in the manufacture of films and machines, the strain on the eye is not nearly so great as heretofore, and the owner of a theatre would be perfectly safe in setting his seats on the basis mentioned above."

OTHER SEATING FIRMS AND THEIR PRODUCTS

THE Bennett Seating Company, Louisville, Ky., has been in the business of making opera chairs and theatre furniture for two generations. They are thoroughly familiar with all the ins and outs of chair manufacturing.

Opera chairs can be furnished in any style and price desired, to fit any incline, and finished in any color from the common opera chair finish to the fine finish of pianos.

Chairs Easily Assembled

The chairs which this concern makes have standards with from 12 pounds to 17 pounds of iron in them, and thus are made strong and durable. The hinges used are of the company's own design. Other improvements of their own invention have been made from time to time. There are only two pieces of casting used in an end standard, and three pieces in a center standard. These parts, together with one bolt and two spring steel washers, make a complete standard. The fewer parts there are, the less likelihood there is of the seats getting out of work.

The chairs of this company are very easy to assemble, and it is not necessary to have a mechanic to do the work. The holes are bored correct, so all that must be done is to slip eight bolts into the holes and then to tighten the nuts. Only steel bolts with nickel heads are used. The chairs are guaranteed, and the cost of maintenance is practically nothing.

Andrews' Thousand Styles

The A. H. Andrews Company, Chicago, manufacturers of theatre chairs, makes about 1,000 styles. The line of this company is unusually extensive, and during the long period in which it has been in business since 1865 the firm has gained a world-wide reputation for the quality of the chairs made in its factories.

It has branches in all the principal cities of the United States, and has facilities for making shipments at the shortest possible notice.

Non-Breakable Seats

The Steel Furniture Company, Grand Rapids, Mich., and New York, manufactures a high-class non-breakable, sanitary motion picture theatre chair in numerous styles. The company furnishes free seating estimates, and carries a full line of second-hand seats at low cost.

Steel Opera Chairs

The Wisconsin Seating Company, New London, Wis., makes a specialty of steel and iron theatre seats which are strongly built and will withstand ordinary usage. The prices are reasonable and the quality high.

The company maintains agencies in New York, Seattle and Los Angeles.

The Hardesty Plan

If you were asked the following questions when contemplating the purchase of chairs, wouldn't you decide to investigate the merits of those manufactured by the company putting the queries to you? "Do you want a life-saving chair; do you want one scientifically built; a double or standard chair; one that is sanitary; one that saves space?"

In asking these questions the Hardesty Manufacturing Company, Canal Dover, Ohio, feels able to satisfy a manager's requirements for theatre chairs which must come up to a high standard. The firm, well known wherever chairs are needed, operates one of the largest factories in the country and sells direct to the manager.

ARTIFICIAL FLOWERS AS AN ORNAMENTAL MEDIUM

IN addition to the best pictures and pleasing musical accompaniment is the house which appeals to the eye by its artistic decorations that has the biggest crowds.

The day is past when an exhibitor can throw open the doors of a theatre which fails to convey by all devices of skilful decoration the sensation of pleasing comfort. The subtle effect of environment acts on every person going to a picture house. Consequently, managers of foresight pay as much attention to interior display as other details.

So well recognized is this fact that conditions in the motion picture field have given rise to a class of firms which make a specialty of supplying theatres with complete decorative schemes. One of the most prominent firms in this field is the Schroeder Art Flower Manufacturing Company, of Cleveland.

Floral Effects

It makes a specialty of installing artificial flowers, vines and plants and decorative schemes with electrical effects.

The line includes palm trees, stage or screen set pieces, illuminated hanging baskets filled with natural colored flowers and leaves, decorative branches for use in lattice work and general decorations; floral table baskets filled with small flowers and ferns; window boxes; incandescent decorative flower shades; bay trees; electrical stage or screen flowers.

The screen flowers are equipped with one-candle power miniature wistaria lamps so secreted in the flower that there is no direct illumination. The flowers' natural green foliage is intermingled.

The incandescent decorative flower shades, made of fireproof cloth and in natural tints, comprise a large number of flowers: wistaria, pond lilies, poinsettias, American Beauty roses, carnations, poppies, hyacinths, clematis, crimson rambler, wild roses, magnolias and sunflowers.

The use of all these decorations, particularly in the summer months, give a theatre a refreshing appearance wholly lacking in their absence.

The Schroeder company is always ready to develop the ideas of managers who know only in a general way what they would like in their theatres, and have already given evidence of their ability to satisfy.

THE ELECTRIC FOUNTAIN

AN added attraction to the decorations of a motion picture theatre is an electric fountain placed in the center of the apron and just back of the footlight line.

Electric fountains have ceased to be novelties seen only in a few theatres. Managers are looking upon them as almost a necessary part of the decorative scheme of an up-to-date theatre. The apparatus manufactured by the Electric Fountain Company, New York, will prove a drawing card in any motion picture theatre.

Their fountains are all complete in themselves; no water connections are necessary; they work by means of a motor and pump, concealed in the base and use the same water over and over again. The water may be perfumed.

In the center of the fountain is a glass disc and under this glass are a number of electric lights, different colors. These lights work by means of flashers and as the water is thrown in the air, you get different colors, white, green, red, purple, etc. The water is regulated; you can throw it any height. One stream in the center and a number of streams in a circle, giving a good water display.

Many Orders Placed

These fountains are complete and can be shipped at once ready for immediate use. You can install without any trouble whatsoever. Size of this fountain is six feet long, four feet wide; facing the audience twelve inches above the stage; back of the fountain is thirty-eight inches. The motor, pump, lights, valves, etc., set below the stage, extend about twelve inches.

Among the theatres which have placed orders with the concern for electric fountains are: Riverside Theatre, New York; Washington Heights Theatre, New York; Family Theatre, New York; Fox's Theatre, New Britain, Conn.; Fox's Theatre, Theatre, Newark, N. J.; Strand Theatre, Buffalo, New York; Poli's Theatre, New Haven, Conn.; Grand Theatre, Denver, Col.; American Music Hall, New York; New York Theatre, New York; Colonial Theatre, Chicago, Ill.; Loew's Herald Square Theatre, New York, and many other theatres.

The company will build to order any kind of a fountain desired to harmonize with surrounding decorations. Fountains can be placed in the lobby or main entrance as well as on the stage. They make an attractive decoration wherever placed.

SCREENS AND WHAT TO KNOW ABOUT THEM

A PROJECTION screen is a window through which the public wants to see as many and as different interesting things as possible. A window must be clean and a projection screen, in order to give the public the impression of a clean window, must be perfect.

Many screens may be considered perfect, it all depends upon the construction and arrangement of the theatre wherein the screen is placed.

If your theatre is long and narrow, all screens will suit your purpose. The only screens to eliminate, however, would be white fabric and plaster walls, for the reason that a great number of the light rays projected on the surface of these screens are reflected in all possible directions; in other words, to the right, the left, the ceiling and the floor, where they are lost.

The result is that the lost rays diminish the brilliancy of the image on the screen, which, not being bright enough to be seen by those who occupy the rear seats, must be made brighter by increasing the intensity of the illuminator in the projection machine.

Arguments for the Modern Screens

If it were only for the expense in current and carbons, it would already be worth the trouble to improve the screen, but there are other reasons in favor of modern screens, because the increase of current raises the temperature of the arc and results in reducing the life of the film and also injures the health of the operator, who feels that the booth is already warm enough.

In view of the fact that most of the theaters have abandoned the old system of projection through a translucent medium and that the public and operator are now on the same side of the screen, the latter must have high reflecting power, but not necessarily the metallic, which often hurts the eye and which must be avoided.

Practically, the projection screen should be divided into three main classes:

(1) the screen for the old-fashioned theatre in which the operator and the public are separated by the screen;

(2) the screen for the ordinary theatre transformed into a motion picture show;

(3) the screen for the modern house, which was built mainly for motion pictures.

Translucent and Opaque Screens

The first mentioned screen is generally made of material called translucent, say prepared white fabric or corrugated or roughened gelatine, celluloid or acetyl-cellulose, or simply a sheet of glass, such as sold by the Mirror Screen Company under the wrong denomination of "glass transparent screen for rear projection." The screen in question is really translucent and not transparent, because if it were transparent the public would see the operator and his machine through it, but no images emanating from the projector.

The second screen, the one to suit the old theatres which are utilized for motion pictures and which have arranged the operator's booth behind the public, must be opaque; that is to say, thick enough to prevent the rays of light carrying the images to pass on the other side, where they would not be seen by the public. Such screens should preferably be of a wide angle, otherwise the picture could hardly be seen from all seats, owing to the horse-shoe shape of the old theatres.

By a wide-angle screen, I mean one that is not too brilliant and the reflecting surface of which is not hidden by any other thick transparent or translucent surface. The plaster wall, for instance, if it were practical, would constitute a wide angle screen because of the unequal size and form of the various small particles of material embodied in the white layer, which cause the rays of light to be scattered in all directions and angles.

Wide-Angled Screens

The plaster wall not being an ideal screen for reasons already explained in detail in our May 2 issue of this year, improved substitutes have been placed on the market which give excellent results. We shall not take up all the existing screens here, for lack of space first, and also because a great number of them are not easily obtained in the United States.

Among those which are on the American market, the best wide angle screens are without the slightest doubt the "Radium Gold Fibre Screen" and the "Day and Night Screen." Both these screens are opaque and possess a first-class reflecting surface which never affects the eye.

The third class is composed of screens which, in my opinion, are particularly suitable for the modern motion picture theatre and need not be of the very wide angle type.

Although the already-mentioned "Radium Gold Fibre" and "Day and Night" screens could serve the purpose, the screen that will prove to suit the modern narrow picture theatre best is indisputably one of the kind known as the "Mirror Screen," it gives the maximum light, never hurts the eye and also gives the impression of reality which it is hard to obtain with other systems, though the "Radium Gold Fibre Screen" has also solved the problem of giving black and white images a very natural appearance, by giving the screen a color as near to sunlight as possible.

There are differences between the three screens just cited, the existence and also the results of which are seldom suspected by the profane, but which the purchaser of a screen ought to know. If you have a "Day and Night" or "Radium Gold Fibre," you must avoid varnish or metallic paint in the immediate vicinity of the screen, otherwise it will reflect a great part of the light theron and hurt the eye. The "Mirror Screens" are not so much affected by varnished or partially metallized walls, for the reason that the reflecting surface is protected by the roughened glass, which diffuses the hurtful light coming from another source than the lens of the projector.

Faulty Construction to Blame

When modern screens give no result the fault is due to their defective arrangement in the theatre and sometimes also the construction of the theatre itself, which, in most cases, has been built for quite different purposes than projection.

Some of the recently built theatres are based upon the same errors as the old ones and, besides dimensions and decoration, no practical changes have been made.

In order to obtain the maximum from the screen, the latter should never face the entrance nor exit in a direct way so that the outward light can strike the screen directly. This can be avoided by reversing the position of the screen in relation to the projector and by turning round the chairs; in other words, put the projector in place of the screen and the screen in place of the projector.

Too Much Light in the Theatre

There is altogether too much light in most of picture theatres and always in the wrong places, probably because those who put them did not realize the relation between the lamps and the screen.

It is absolutely unnecessary to have so much light to see a picture on the screen. It is obvious, on the contrary, that by suppressing some of the useless light in the moving picture theatre, the contrast would cause the screen to increase the brightness of the image, with less expense in current. But how will the patron find his seat in a darkened house? will be asked.

Every time the question of finding the seat arises the screen suffers a terrible blow, but why have not the theatre managers thought of arranging, in the lobby, a luminous device showing the numbers of vacant seats? The current actually spent for illuminating the useless electric lamps in the theatre could be more usefully employed by electrically connecting every chair with the board in the lobby bearing all numbers, so that when a person leaves his seat the contact is immediately established and the number of the vacant seat shown.

The board showing all the numbers of the seats could be arranged to represent the precise location of every seat in relation to the screen so that all the searching would be done in the lobby instead of in the dark and nobody would disturb or be disturbed to the detriment of all.

The searchlights now employed could also be suppressed and even by reducing the amperage of the projection arc the screen would show a better picture.

What to Know About a Screen

Here are a few questions to be asked the screen manufacturer before purchasing a screen:

1. Is your screen more efficient than the ordinary plaster wall?
2. Does it hurt the eye?
3. Is it brittle under ordinary conditions?
4. Do you guarantee me against breakage?
5. Should an accident occur, for instance a crack, will you take charge of the repair and will it be made free of charge?
6. When once repaired will the place where the accident occurred be easily noticeable?
7. How long do you guarantee your screen?
8. How is your screen to be cleaned?
9. Are there any particular precautions to be taken for installing your screen?
10. Whom will I have to address in case of dissatisfaction or trouble?

PROPER HEATING AND VENTILATION

THERE are innumerable types of theatres, each of which may be treated in many different ways as to heating and ventilating. The careful designer will, however, find that each problem may be fully suited by but very few methods and through expert knowledge he will soon determine that among all types of systems, heaters, control, etc, one above all will be particularly and peculiarly adaptable to the building he may have at hand to care for.

In general, there are three methods of heating, namely, hot air, hot water and steam.

The hot air system is where the fire is contained within a large cast iron furnace, and fresh air is conducted through a large inlet duct from outdoors to the metal casing about the fire pot and thence led through other conductors to the various parts of the auditorium.

On account of the uncertainty as to the amount of air thus delivered, it is advisable to have installed an exhaust fan of such capacity that there would be a constant change of air in proper volume according to the attendance.

Hot Air Installation

If the hot air furnace is installed, it is well to make delivery of the fresh warm air at various openings in or near the ceilings and have the exhaust air withdrawn from various outlets along the floor.

The greater the number of these openings, the better will be the general distribution and the better the results.

In this way, the warm air enters the room at the top and in cooling descends to the floor, being on the way inhaled and exhaled and then withdrawn through the exhaust as foul air, taking with it dust that may arise from the floor through the moving about of the people.

Such an installation is the least expensive of all methods, but is only adaptable to the very small house and should never be attempted in any place of over three hundred seats.

A combination of a hot air and a steam system may well be practised in houses from three hundred to a thousand seats. The former may be installed as heretofore outlined, and a separate steam system may be placed with direct radiation in the most exposed portions of the house.

These would generally be in all entrances, toilets, stage, dressing-rooms and near exits.

Hot Water Systems

The hot water system is where the heater, mains and radiators are filled with water and so connected that as soon as a fire is started in the heater the water rises to the highest part of the system and by circulation is displaced by colder water.

As long as the water in the boiler is slightly warmer than in the upper parts of the system there will always be a constant circulation.

Such a product is highly satisfactory for almost any type of building rather than a theatre. The large volume of water to be heated causes too much time to be taken to get up sufficient heat.

In theatres, the desire is to get up and leave down the heat in the shortest period of time.

Its radiators must be one-third larger than those employed in steam heat, and this extra size is objectionable in that it takes up larger area, generally where space is valuable and often not plentiful.

The extra size of radiators is also a blot in the decorative scheme, where they happen to so enter.

The greatest objection to the hot-water system is the danger of the most exposed sections freezing and bursting in the extreme cold weather, especially when the heat is let down at night and over the week end, when the house is closed,

The greatest danger exists near exits, entrances, and in indirect heat stacks.

Hot water systems are known to have been frozen in exposed parts even with the full heat in other parts, with the result of great damage when the sections thaw out.

For these reasons the writer cannot recommended hot-water heat for theatres. It is also the most costly of all systems to install.

Steam Second in Cost

Steam is king in this instance. It is less costly to install than all except hot air systems. Its radiators, piping and heaters are of the least possible size. It is simple and easily automatically controlled.

In all steam systems the water of condensation is returned to the boiler below the water line, and one or more circuit lines in the cellar are provided. Off of the circuits the steam risers are run, and these risers, in a one-pipe system, also serve to bring the water of condensation back to the boiler.

As the cellar circuit mains have a fall from the top of the boiler to the return below the water line, the water of condensation falls to the bottom of the main and flows on that level through the piping to the boiler.

In a two-pipe system there are separate steam mains and returns, and this is made necessary under the certain conditions, such as where large coils are used.

It is sometimes required to use in the same installation a two-pipe system for certain sections of the work, while a one-pipe lay-out answers for other sections.

There are many variations of steam heating systems, most of which are still controlled by patent rights. They have their advantages, are generally more costly to install, but are also as a rule less costly to maintain.

As each of these may be elaborately illustrated and explained, special articles will cover them later.

Types of Boilers

A boiler built to generate steam may be used in any of the various systems. There are hundreds of different makes of such heaters, many more or less following the same style and construction. They may be classified as those built of cast iron and those of steel or wrought iron.

The cast iron may be divided into the round, the narrow and deep, and the wide and shallow types. The round cast iron boilers should not be used in theatres. They are not built in large enough sizes and the fuel consumption is too large in proportion to the heat derived on account of the draught being too direct. The wide and shallow type is almost open to the same objections, but it has one advantage—it can be cared for by a boy, the firing and ashes being all in the front. Among such boilers may be mentioned the Model Heating Company's, the Thatcher Furnace Company's, Progress Boilers and the Richardson & Boynton Company's.

In the selection of a boiler much judgment used as in deciding upon the system, as first cost and maintenance costs are great factors.

The low first cost boiler is generally the more watsteful in coal consumption and generally requires a larger size or more costly coal than others that may burn pea or buckwheat coal.

The narrow and deep cast iron boiler is the most efficient of this type, because of its longest fire travel, but in large installations on account of the deep fire-pots and ash-pits, is a man's job to care for them. There are many makers of this style of boilers among which might be mentioned, the American Radiator Company, Thatcher Furnace Company, United States Radiator Company.

The Tubular Boiler

The steel and iron tubular boilers have the advantage of a long fire travel to the chimney through numerous small tubes, thus transferring most all of the heat units to the water. One can easily see how much easier it is to transfer these heat units through thin metal tubes than through heavy cast iron sections of the heaters previously mentioned.

There are various types of tubular boilers, all of which may be arranged to use the cheap coal, such as buckwheat and pea, and all are highly efficient. They are also quick steamers.

The brick-set, high-pressure type, and the self-contained locomotive type are made by many boiler makers. The Kewanee Boiler Company and the Coatsville Boiler Company are perhaps the most prominent makers in the East of the latter style. These two types of boilers require a very long boiler-room, for not only are the boilers themselves very long, but enough space must be left for either the front or the rear of the setting to allow the tubes to be withdrawn and replaced when occasion might so require.

The Spencer Heating Company's return tubular boiler has been found by the writer as highly satisfactory for theatre work. It is a return tubular boiler, it burns cheap coal, and is self-feeding. The Fitsgibbon Boiler Company's boiler is another distinct type, well constructed, and highly efficient, but also more costly.

No matter which heat is provided, it is not only highly essential but absolutely necessary to provide a thorough system of ventilation.

There must be provided equally distributed about the house twenty-five cubic feet of fresh air every minute for every patron, and an equal amount of foul air must be withdrawn from the room.

Facts on Fresh Air

This fresh air should be taken from as far above the streets or other possible causes of contamination as it is practicable. Thence it should be led to over heater stacks of such size that the air be delivered to the room at a little over seventy degrees Fahrenheit. This of course is made possible with the aid of an induction force fan driven by an electric motor or other power.

That the air will have its proper circulation, and that the ventilation will be more positive, a system of exhaust ducts and fans should also be installed. One large exhaust fan can be arranged to do the entire work, but sometimes it is found more economical and feasible to install two or three smaller fans.

When heat is no longer needed, ventilation must nevertheless be kept up, as people will sooner feel the depression from humid warm air than they will from foul air. Though the number of windows, doors, and ventilators generally provided are considerable and give much relief, it is nevertheless important that the force draught system of ventilation be also used in conjunction with the natural ventilation, as not too much fresh air can be provided and distributed if we are to expect a good warm weather attendance.

NATHAN MYERS.

THE ELECTRIC FAN AS A BUSINESS ASSET

IT is claimed by many sanitary and ventilation engineers of high authority that the best way to cool a motion picture theatre during the hot months is by drawing fresh air from above the roof and blowing it into the auditorium.

One of the best known advocates of this system is the Typhoon Fan Company, New York City, which declares that ordinary exhaust fans located in the ceiling for the purpose of clarifying the atmosphere only draw hot and dusty air in from the street. While only a little air is necessary for ventilation purposes, the usual methods in use do not keep the room cool, the Typhoon Company states.

Keeps Auditorium Cool

The system favored by this company consists of blowing the air down through the roof and from underneath or on each side of the stage. The whole room is then kept at an even low temperature.

The same fan can be used with the addition of a Typhoon tubular air warmer for maintaining a uniform degree of warmth in winter.

Recently a twelve-foot Typhoon multiblade blower was especially made by the company for exhibiting purposes at the New York and Dayton conventions.

It attracted general attention at both shows on account of its size and immense capacity for cooling. It is now installed in the Drury Lane Theatre, New York City, and undoubtedly makes this one of the coolest theatres in the country.

This theatre was recently built and provided with an open roof, but owing to the better results obtained by this method of cooling, the roof has been closed in.

Fidelity Fans and Motors

The Fidelity Electric Company, Inc., of Lancaster, Pa., offers to the motion picture exhibitor an assortment of fans not only for cooling the patrons of the theatre, but also for ventilating the theatre and driving out the impure air. The advantages of an electric fan in the theatre are well known, most especially in the summer time, when, if an exhibitor advertises that his theatre is cooled by fans, he is bound to have twice the patronage of one that doesn't.

The fan consumes as much current as an ordinary 16-c.p. lamp, and needs no attention for one year. At this time it is well to return it to the manufacturers, who will repair it better than the local electrician can.

In adition to the fans, the Fidelity Electric Company manufacture a small motor for operating motion picture machines.

Sprague Cooling Devices

The Sprague Electrical Works, of the General Electric Company, carries a very extensive line of direct connected exhaust fans manufactured for the use of motion picture houses. All theatre owners realize the importance of keeping the auditorium filled with pure air, and therefore sooner or later buy fans to keep the atmosphere in constant circulation.

Users of the Sprague outfits have expressed complete satisfaction over their machines, and every customer has meant a friend of this particular make. The prices are reasonable and the prompt attention given to inquiries makes dealing with the company a pleasant and satisfactory transaction.

The portable Ozonators of the company need no special methods to keep them in working condition other than cleaning once or twice in three weeks.

Other Ventilating Systems

The importance of ventilation in theatres is well recognized by all managers. Bad air results in poor attendance because people will not submit to remaining in a stuffy auditorium even to see the best picture. They might stick it out once inside, but they will not go back again, particularly if it is known that nearby is another theatre thoroughly ventilated.

Among the ventilating systems considered excellent for theatre purposes is the Sturtevant, manufactured by the B. F. Sturtevant Company, Hyde Park, Mass. The apparatus either blows in fresh air or exhausts the bad air. The Ready-to-Run set is adapted to small theatres where a certain amount of air is required by law to be furnished according to the seating capacity. They are also adaptable to motion picture machine booths and ticket offices.

The I. L. G. Electric Ventilating Company, Chicago, makes a very extensive line of ventilating systems especially designed for theatres of all kinds. The apparatus manufactured by this company has the reputation of high quality.

It gives excellent results and is fully guaranteed. The manufacturers state that the cost of maintenance is nothing for two years, and then the machines will probably need but slight attention. They are easily adapted to the architecture of any house.

AIRIFIERS, PERFUME CONES AND SCREENS

THE Ozone Pure Airifier, made by the company of the same name in Chicago, is most highly endorsed by all who have it in use, whether in motion picture theatres or other instances. The following letter of commendation received from the proprietor of the Empire Family Theatre, Glens Falls, N. Y., well describes its merits:

Ozone Pure Airifier Company,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

The two Ozone Airifiers which I have had under rental contract for nearly two months have proven entirely satisfactory, and I have decided to purchase same.

While the ventilation of my theatre is better than the average, the Ozone has made a great improvement, and there is never any stuffiness or objectionable odor. My patrons are pleased with the change and have complimented me on making the place so fresh and agreeable.

I am so well pleased that I would not want to be without the machines, and am sending an order for one for my home.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) JOE MILLER.

Disinfectant Flower Cones

THE products of the General Disinfectant Company, who distribute through C. R. Baird Company, of New York, the Calhuff Supply Company of Philadelphia, and three other houses in Dallas, Tex.; Portland, Ore.; and Newburgh, N. Y., are used in every state in the Union and are for sale at 287 film exchanges.

The most highly used produce of this concern is the Flower Cone, which, although it will not kill every germ alive, will turn a theatre into a literal flower garden without the odor becoming obtrusive. About sixteen different perfumes are available, and after the use of one gallon in the cones, the cost of maintenance becomes less. Since November 1 this concern has sold over 5,500 cones.

Hygienic Vapor Screens

pany, Greensburg, Pa., is designed for the purpose of permeating the air of a theatre with disinfectant oils or sweet scented redolents. By its use a theatre may not only be rendered sanitary, but a pleasant odor dispensed throughout the auditorium.

In addition to this, a manager may keep his house deodorized by filling the container on Saturday night with liquid formaldehyde, shutting the doors, and giving the place a thorough fumigation.

The Westinghouse Products

The Westinghouse Electric Company manufacture a variety of articles designed to facilitate the ventilation of a motion picture theatre, among which may be mentioned their theatre fans, made in eight-inch, twelve-inch and sixteen-inch sizes, ceiling fans, thirty-two inch and fifty-six inch sizes; and ozonizers.

The Westinghouse long, burning flame carbon arc lamp makes an attractive illuminating agent for the street entrance of the film theatre.

An appliance that will be particularly welcome in the ticket booth of most theatres in cold weather is the Westinghouse electric radiator which can be operated by a simple connection with the lighting service of the house.

The Westinghouse rectifier, used to change alternating to direct current, should not be overlooked in an appredicative examination of this concern's products.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF THE LOBBY

"WELL, what do you think of him?" asked the general manager of one of the large film manufacturing concerns after an applicant for an important position had withdrawn from the office.

"I like his looks," answered the head of the department where a position was to be filled. "He is neatly dressed, his clothing is free from dust and soiling, his shoes were shined, and in all, he strikes me as being a good man. If he pays attention to his physical appearance, it is safe to assume that he has been equally solicitous of his mental and moral training.

"I have found it reasonably safe to judge a man as I would a theatre. If a man is neatly attired and clean-looking, he is worthy of attention. If a theatre lobby is artistically arranged, with the decorations up-to-date and properly placed, I go in with the expectation of seeing a good show.

"An exhibitor who appreciates the selling value of the physical appearance of his theatre lobby, is enough of a business man to know that the interior must be just as attractive, and his pictures of the best, before he can profit."

Selling Value of Displays

The department head's method of judgment is not new. Business men, engaged either in retail or wholesale lines, long have appreciated the extreme selling value of displays. The proper kind of display, by its attractiveness and appeal to one or more of the senses in each person, creates a desire.

First in importance in the matter of a proper lobby display is sight. To make a profitable appeal to this sense it is necessary to have the entire general effect of the lobby fixtures so arranged that they will attract and hold the attention, momentarily at least, by their novelty of arrangement, their artistic appearance, and their beauty.

"That constitutes the first step in selling an admission from the lobby. After the attention of a passerby has been attracted, there must be something of sufficient strength in the display, and of enough importance, to evolve the attention from one of momentary curiosity to that of genuine interest.

This result can be obtained through the posters. Every exhibitor knows what manner of pictures are most in favor with his patrons, or with people in the vicinity of his theatre. A three-sheet, prominently placed, is sufficient incentive to the prospective patron to give further thought to the idea of going in to see the show, providing that it contains an illustration or printed matter that is in accord with his desire for certain styles of film. An understanding of the general disposition of patrons and prospective patrons will solve for the exhibitor the problem of what sort of paper to display.

Then comes the appeal to the next sense—that of feeling. Some exhibitors have worked out their own solutions to this rather difficult accomplishment. On warm days people look for cool spots. In the winter time they want to be where it is warm.

"The poster appeal, changing momentary curiosity into genuine interest, paves the way for the next step in using the lobby as a selling agency by drawing the prospective from off the sidewalk and nearer to the entrance. In a letter to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS some time ago a central Western exhibitor explained his way of appealing to the sense of feeling:

"I have two large exhaust fans, one at each side of the lobby, and directly above the entrance and exit doors. They are concealed from view by a very thin wire covering, overlaid with cloth, painted the exact color of the construction material in the rear wall of the lobby. These fans connect with the basement through chutes, each one about eighteen inches in diameter. A local tinsmith installed the arrangement.

"On warm days during the summer I can have cool air blown into the lobby, making a contrast with the humidity of the streets that has brought hundreds of dimes into the box-office. In the winter I have a repair man from a furnace house change the chutes from the ammonia vats to the furnace boilers. The warm air in the lobby, and floating out onto the sidewalk has chased the shivers from many cold backs, and I have profited accordingly."

What Courtesy Can Do

It is also possible for the exhibitor to appeal to the sense of feeling by suggestions for the comfort and courteous treatment of patrons inside the theatre. A neatly attired, pleasant-faced door man; a smile from the girl in the box-office, and a one-sheet, printed in large type advising that the chairs are restful, the projection clear and untiring, have combined to tax the capacity of cash drawers.

Some practical policies as auxiliaries to the power of the lobby display are these:

The sense of hearing has received its appeal in many instances by exit and entrance doors slightly ajar. The strains of some popular air floating out to the street from the orchestra pit, or a sound outburst of applause have coaxed many admissions from persons stopping to look at a three or six sheet.

A sales argument directed to the sense of tasting has proven profitable for some theatres. Warm weather brings forth ushers armed with sanitary paper cups, filled to the brims with cold, deliciously scented lemonade or orange juice. The winter seasons find the same ushers passing wire trays up and down the aisles and distributing hot chocolate in the paper containers. The cost is very small, and when compared with the advertising results, it is almost a nonenity. This forms good material for display type on a one-sheet in the lobby.

But the entire appeal rests upon one thing—the ability of the exhibitor to so arrange his lobby that it will compel the attention. The entire equipment for the displays must be in harmony. Brass work is perhaps the most attractive. Highly polished and shining, it lends a tone of quality and reserve to the theatre that will appeal to all classes. It is just as essential for a manager to study lobby effects as it is for him to watch what goes onto the screen.

ART IN LOBBY FRAMES

AN attractive lobby is one of the first requisites to the success of a motion picture theatre.

It may well be taken as an axiom of the industry that an attractive lobby display, comprehending beauty, neatness and careful arrangement, is as necessary an adjunct in the building of patronage as a good film program.

The lobby is to the theatre what the show window is to the department store or shop and is so regarded by the motion picture fan, who carries around with him a sub-conscious appreciation of what is good and bad and usually makes his sub-conscious decision in reference to the theatre by this first impression which is afforded through the lobby.

Carrying the simile further, it might be said that the lobby is as important to the theatre as the fascinating smile is to the actress.

The clever soubrette must rely greatly on the charms which lie in her expressive eye and her friendly smile, but beyond the parted lips there must be even more.

She must possess beautiful teeth, or all the effect of her ravishing smile and her dreamy eyes will be lost to the audience.

Creating a Good Impression

And so it is with the theatre lobby. To create the first and last good impression on the sub-conscious mind of the picture fan, the lobby, though spacious and beautiful, must have the proper furnishings.

Posters pasted or tacked upon walls and pillars in slipshod fashion would appear as incongruous and distasteful to the average theatregoer as a set of discolored and irregular teeth in the mouth of an otherwise beautiful actress would be to the audience.

And so we have the Newman Manufacturing Company, of Cincinnati and New York, and Chicago, whose earnest endeavor is to supply "the teeth of the lobby."

The firm, which has its factory in Cincinnati, is known throughout the United States and Canada. It supplies for the motion picture trade metal poster frames of all descriptions, easels, sign holders, metal railings and ticket-choppers of wood and brass.

Brass and Nickel Frames

The advantage of bright frames of brass or nickelplate over the old style wooden frames for attractiveness will be readily appreciated by the progressive exhibitor.

The ugliness of the poster, which lies entirely in its flimsiness, is made to disappear under the glass and between the edges of the metal frame.

The products of the Newman company are useful to all classes of theatres, their object being to beautify the surroundings and at the same time economize space. This latter object is attained in various ways.

Some of the frames, which come in all sizes, are equipped with hooks by which they may be hung on the walls. Others are made to be supported on easels which are portable and in some cases equipped with collapsible legs.

Aside from the poster frames, the firm manufactures as a series of interchangeable tile-letter sign frames, revolving signs and poster frames, and frames equipped to hold electric light globes.

Using Frames to Best Advantage

To utilize these poster frames to the best advantage, the exhibitor whose theatre is of average size should have at least three one-sheet poster-frames on easels with two three-sheet and one six-sheet frames.

Where the lobby is large enough, it is advisable for the exhibitor to display three one-sheet frames containing pictures of "to-morrow's" program.

The Newman company guarantees its products to be the best made in the country. The metal is clinched into the moldings and will wear for years.

The most popular frames are of brass, but the company will also furnish frames of laquered brass, gunmetal, German silver and statuary bronze at a cost of ten per cent more than brass. These do not require polishing, which fact reduces the cost of maintenance to almost nothing.

The money-saving advantage of the metal frames is considerable. By their use the posters are kept in perfect condition and may be returned in the same condition received, for which credit is readily given by the exchanges.

The brass railings and cages for the ticket selling booth, with similar furnishings in metal for interior purposes as supplied by this firm, bear the same relation to the attractiveness of the interior and exterior of the theatre as do the frames.

Striking Brass Frames

With the growing importance of lobby display for motion picture theatres a demand was created for striking picture frames. Those manufactured of brass by A. J. Miller and Company, Bellefontaine, Ohio, are proving quite a success as money getters.

The company had an excellent display of frames on exhibition at the Dayton convention. The particular kind of frames made by this house are getting splendid results, and the company reports a good business for the beginning of the fall season.

THE MENGER & RING VARIETIES

MENGER & Ring, manufacturers of theatrical display frames, have a large assortment of all varieties varying from the frame manufactured to accommodate still prints to the largest size conceivable. And not only do they carry all sizes, but all styles among which may be selected the correct style to correspond with any theatre. They make a specialty of fitting up lobbies with their frames to correspond with the interior and exterior decorations of the house.

The placement of the frames, whether large or small, is always considered. Naturally the first thing is to place them where they will be noticed by everyone, then again where they will not be in the way, not have them standing in front of the cashier's booth, for instance, or in any other way blocking the entrance to the theatre

Low Cost of Upkeep

The frames furnished by this concern are cheap in regard to the quality, and are exceptionally attractive. The cost of maintenance is practically nominal, as after they are once put in place, the future cost amounts to nothing. All the care they need is an occasional dusting or polish which costs so little that it is unnecessary to figure it.

But such facts as the placing and caring of the frames are known to every competent exhibitor. The color scheme and the appropriateness of the frames as regards the house is the main question, and the one that Menger & Ring make a specialty of for all houses whether they be large or small, or wherever they are located. Frames for stills, posters, paintings and every imaginable variety of advertising matter are carried, and they will gladly furnish your theatre with the desired articles.

PHOTOS AS A FACTOR

CONSISTENCY in any business is the shortest road to prosperity. If an office supply dealer was to fill his show windows with dress goods and cloaks, he would strike a discordant note that would cost him his trade. The exhibition of his choicest desks, chairs, filing cabinets, card indexes and other equipment is the introduction to his store.

The exhibitor is essentially a picture man. Pictures are his stock in trade. Following out a policy of consistency, his display must be pictures. But it is almost a science to determine just what style of pictures to use.

The results of considerable experimentation by the Wyanoak Publishing Company, of 136 West Fifty-second street, New York City, form an interesting and profitable subject for exhibitors. The experimental work was conducted to determine the relative value of certain styles of pictures and subjects as lobby display in relation to theatre patrons.

The Power of Pictures

Many people have their favorites among the stars of filmdom, and do not care to patronize a theatre unless they are first assured that their particular actor or actress is going to be shown in pictures. Again, many of the refined and highly educated class deem posters repulsive, when showing a particularly sensational scene, or apparently catering to morbid curiosity.

"It may seem strange," said Mr. A. H. Byrd, of the company, "but in a great number of cases we have found that photographs of stars, or photographic reproductions of certain scenes in pictures, have the same drawing power as three sheets, or even six sheets.

"We made a test recently in a big house up in Harlem. On Wednesday the proprietor put out his usual amount of paper, adding to it several ones and three sheets. There was no increase in the number of persons who stepped into the lobby to study it more closely.

"On Thursday, the next day, we decorated the lobby with photographs of stars, and reproductions of 'still' pictures taken from the films in the day's show. The pictures of the players were in two sizes, twenty-two by twenty-eight inches, and eleven by fourteen inches. The same sizes prevailed in the scenic reproductions.

"While the novelty of the change may have been responsible for some of the added interest, it is certain that the very attractiveness of the display was largely responsible for the fact that several hundred people spent from five to fifteen minutes looking at it. Of these, a great many purchased admission tickets."

Posters do Not Conflict

However, posters will not detract from the value of a photographic display. The secret of making them conform lies in arranging them in proper relation to each other. One form of artistic arrangement is to place the photographs of the most popular stars about the walls of the lobby, while the posters are displayed in easel frames. Again, photographs can be used to immense advantage in the theatre itself, making up a wall display that does much to relieve the unbroken monotony of paint or fresco.

Photographs depreciate as rapidly as posters unless they are properly cared for. Frames of a color harmonizing with the finish of the photos give good protection against weather and dust. A plate glass covering adds much to their attractiveness. A local decorator is competent to effect the best possible artistic arrangement of a display of photographs.

THE IMPORTANCE OF UNIFORMS

A WELL-GROOMED attendant in front of any motion picture theatre not only adds to the attractiveness of the house but instills confidence in the general public and gives promise of a clean, bright house and show.

The uniforms made by the Ford Uniform Company, of New York, are famous for style and snap, and will cause any usher or doorman to take pride in his personal appearance, which adds to the efficiency of the theatre.

These uniforms are hand-tailored and made for hard service. The measure blank which they furnish to out-of-town customers, enables anyone to take the measure. Ford uniforms are moderate in price. A catalogue, samples and estimates will be furnished upon request.

Uniforms for Ushers

The Fecheimer Brothers Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, uniform tailors, offer a high grade of uniforms and headgear for doorkeepers, ushers and all employees of the motion picture theatre. They guarantee all their uniforms for durability and general satisfaction.

Samples and prices can be obtained direct from them. The cost of maintenance amounts to a brushing every day, and an occasional pressing. They will ordinarily give one year's hard service. The name of the theatre may be embroidered on the coats and headgear.

LOBBY FLOORING

THE product manufactured by the Cemento Flooring Company, New York, is particularly adapted to motion picture theatres. It is claimed that the material put out by this firm will not crack and has the quality of "practically lasting forever." It presents a handsome appearance and can be used for any design or color.

It is suitable for all lobbies, vestibules, hallways and can be used to excellent advantage in main entrances. Any local mason will select the styles desired. All it needs is a thorough washing occasionally, followed by an application of parafine to give it finish. Water will not affect it, and it can be relied upon to remain the same after the cement is properly set.

THE REVOLUTION IN PHOTOPLAY MUSIC

'TIS not very long ago that Florence Turner, then leading lady for the Vitagraph Company, was wont to go to a little "movie show" in the vicinity of her home in Brooklyn, N. Y., to see herself in the pictures. After explaining to some of her friends how it helped her in her work to see and hear how the film affected the audience, she went on to say why she preferred this place above others in the neighborhood.

"The piano player does not play a funeral march for a comedy, or 'Yankee Doodle' for a wedding," said Miss Turner. "He follows the action on the screen and does not distract one's mind from the pictures."

This happened only a few years ago when exhibitors believed that the pictures alone constituted the show, and that as long as there was a piano or piano and drum banging away it was all sufficient. How times have changed since then!

General Improvement

To-day better theatres, better films, better projection, better everything, including music, is the cry. With the advent of the feature film the exhibitor cast about for suitable music. The public was getting critical. New theatres and old seating from 900 to 3,000 were rapidly coming to the fore, whose programs were devoted entirely to pictures, and the days of piano and drum orchestra seemed numbered.

But manufacturers of musical instruments were quick to see their opportunity, and immediately centered their attention on the making of instruments especially intended for use in motion picture theatres.

The result is a number of so-called "one-man orchestras" are on the market. These are really a combination of organ and piano with chimes, orchestra bells, drums and drummers' traps and sound effects all combined in one instrument and played by one person seated at a keyboard.

These instruments differ in size and arrangement, but in them every instrument used in band or orchestra has been successfully depicted by an equivalent pipe stop or percussion effect, and many ancient instruments now obsolete have been revived.

New Tones Possible

In addition, they contain some tones, highly orchestral in the sense that they are of strongly marked character, that never have been, and cannot be, produced from any orchestral or band instrument, viz., the Vox Humana, the quaintly piquant quintadena, etc. Thus even the human voice, either single or chorus, can be brought out.

While including chimes, harp, piano, all kinds of sound effects, horses' hoofs, auto horn, locomotive whistles and bell, steamboat whistles and xylophone, practically any musical selection can be accompanied by any desired "trap effect" and played from the keyboard, all under the control of one performer and one mind. These instruments are in special cases equipped with a solo self-player or a separate manual for solo or both. Yet they are so wonderfully effective as to beggar written description; they must be heard.

Since the basis of this "one-man orchestra" is the pipe organ, special selections by competent performers are frequently a part of the program and prove a great attraction. While it is not logical to suppose that these instruments will immediately, or even eventually take the place of all orchestras in the theatres, nevertheless they are being rapidly installed.

Wide Demand of Instruments

Exhibitors who want their pictures "played up to" and having indifferent success with an orchestra leader and his different pieces, have placed these instruments in their theatres and are enthusiastic in their praises. It is not to be wondered at that one of these one-man instruments should replace an orchestra when this one-man performer can follow the story or plot in the film, can change immediately from dramatic to comedy music, can furnish sound effects by pressing a button or pressing a pedal, and probably, most important of all, to some exhibitors this same instrument can be paid for in a year or two by his saving on his salary list.

Another thing: most of these instruments can be played automatically with music rolls as well as manually.

PIPE ORGAN THE BASIS OF THE MOLLER

REALIZING the enormous possibilities of this field, no one has gone further in the development of the pipe organ for use with the motion picture than the Moller Organ Works of Hagerstown, Md. The Pipe Orchestra manufactured by this firm has reached as high a degree of perfection as the picture film itself. With what is probably the largest plant of its kind in the world, and forty years of experience in building pipe organs, they have produced an instrument that will meet every possibility of a large orchestra.

An instrument embodying every orchestral effect, yet under the control of one mind, so that by improvisation the performer can closely follow the story as it appears on the screen, quickly adjusting the music to suit the act and have at his command all the effects necessary to make the picture realistic. All of their instruments are built under separate contract to suit the particular conditions of the building and the space available for harmony with architecture and equipment of the building.

In many cases the organ is not visible at all, being placed under the stage, as in the case of the Fourteenth Street Theatre, New York, or in the upper boxes, as in the New York Hippodrome. The only part that can be seen is the console or keyboard.

WURLITZER A COMPLETE ORCHESTRA

PROBABLY the best known and most complete line of instruments is made by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, of Cincinnati, O. Their factory is at North Tonawanda, N. Y.

Piano and Organ Combination

Their catalog shows a number of styles and models, from the small G to their Unit machine, Style L. These instruments are a combination of piano and organ with drummer's traps, drums, whistles, bells, etc., and range from Style G, with piano and mandolin attachment, violin and flute pipes with tremolo stop, snare and bass drums, triangle, tambourine, horse trot, tom-tom, fire gong and telephone bell, to their Style L containing many of the actual orchestral instrumentations. Prominent among these will be found violins, violas, violoncellos, flutes, piccolos, piano, oboes, chimes, tubas, clarinets, xylophone, castanets, triangle, crash, tambourine, cymbals, bass drum, snare drums, glockenspiel, autohorn, steamboat whistle, horse trot, electric bell, etc.

In the pipe organ department are: Tuba bass, 16-foot; tuba bass, 8-foot; tuba bass, 32-foot; clarinet, 16-foot; oboe horn, 8-foot; violin, 8-foot; violin bass, 8-foot; flute bass, 8-foot; piccolo treble, 4-foot; violin treble, 8-foot; flute treble, 8-foot; cathedral chimes and Vox Humana (human voice).

Those in between are styles R-H-K-J.

All of these instruments are equipped with two manuals or keyboards, the upper one for solo playing, the lower for piano or piano and organ combined.

Played Automatically

They can be played automatically also by means of perforated rolls similar to those used in a player piano. In the hands of a good pianist these instruments are capable of rendering the highest musical expression, but even an ordinary pianist with a little practice can produce wonderful results. Any piano player can play them with a little practice.

The Wurlitzers also make a large machine not listed in the catalogue, called the Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra.

This instrument is already installed in a number of theatres. The Vitagraph Theatre, New York, is the most recent to adopt it. Taking advantage of the controllable quality of the electrical current—the swiftest, surest and most dependable force known to man—it produces in response to the operator's touch on the keyboard effects which in the writer's judgment are attainable in part only by the most perfectly trained symphony orchestra. And it will play ragtime if you want it, indeed, anything from a cornet solo to an overture spontaneously rendered, not excluding the humble brass band effect.

The Unit Orchestra, even of medium size, represents not only thirty or forty instruments, but fully twice as many. Instead of one clarionet able to produce but a single note at a time, we find clarionets capable of playing full chords at all parts of the compass.

Under One Person's Control

A similar advantage is found in the case of the brass, the strings, the flutes, cones, etc. In the Unit Orchestra everything is brought nicely under the control of a single musician. On one keyboard the wood wind stops are grouped; on another keyboard all members of the string family are available; on another keyboard the brass; on another the basses, and so on. Each one of these families is under expressive control. It furnishes all the trap effects better than any trap drummer and runs the whole gamut of musical effects even to a harp solo.

FOTOPLAYER ANOTHER SUPERB INSTRUMENT

THE Fotoplayer was originally designed and now is built expressly for motion picture theatres. It consists of a player piano, pressure reed organ and six stops, oboe, diapason, principal, melodia, echo, clarinet, tremolo, pipes for orchestral effects, violin, cornet, cello, flute pipes, orchestra bells, bass drum, pistol shot, cymbal tom tom, thunderroll, snare drum, door bell, fire gong, locomotive bell, cathedral chime, tambourine, castanets, horse trot, auto horn, sleigh bells, steamboat and locomotive whistle, and wind siren.

The Fotoplayer may be delivered manually or with the ordinary eighty-eight note player piano roll. One of the especial features is the double-tracker device by which the operators can change instantly from one selection of music to another, thus suiting the music to the picture.

Changes Are Easy

The music may be started and stopped at any part of the roll desired, thus permitting playing parts of selections when whole number is not desired. The operator changes from one roll to another without any perceptible break in the music.

BARTOLA ORIGINALLY MADE FOR PICTURES

THIS instrument, manufactured by the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, at Oshkosh, Wis., was primarily intended for use in motion picture theatres and consists of a pipe organ having the following stops: violin, flute, vox humana, clarinet, cornet and orchestral trombone with tremolo in one cabinet, with xylophone, marinba, bass drum, snare drum, crash cymbal, tom tom, auto horn and storm effect in another cabinet and cathedral chimes in a rack.

These instruments are electrically connected with auxiliary keyboards similar to piano keyboards, which are mounted on stands placed on each side of piano and so situated that they can be swung along side or just over the piano keyboard. These keyboards can be played together, dispensing with the piano or either played in combination with the piano. One of its advantages is that the purchaser can attach this instrument to his own piano and thus avoid the expense of the piano part in a piano-organ combination.

Comes in Six Styles

There are six styles of Bartola, each containing a different number of instruments, so as to furnish a proper size for all places, large or small. Being manually played, there is nothing mechanical or automatic about this instrument. It cannot be played without an operator, and any pianist can play it, producing the pipe-organ effect or the representation of an orchestra playing on the different instruments.

MARQUETTE HAS TEN-PIECE ORCHESTRA

THE Marquette Piano Company manufactures various styles, but their Photoplayer is intended especially for the motion-picture house. In addition to various attachments generally used with trap-drum effects, it has a representation of a ten-piece orchestra.

The instrument may be played automatically or by hand, and a pipe-organ effect may be had by hand from the same keyboard used in playing the piano. It has two large rolls, each containing ten selections, and one can remain idle or rewound while other roll is playing. In this way the operator may set one roll at proper piece for use in succeeding picture.

It has a good tone and with the proper performance of an efficient operator, a great many different effects may be had. Of course the efficiency will depend a vast deal upon the operator in this case.

Made in New Art Style

The Photo-Player is made in new art style, mission oak finish, and comes in one style and finish only. The style J Orchestra, which represents an orchestra of ten pieces, only without special attachments, would be too high to install in the ordinary theatre pit, but can be placed where space would permit at the side of auditorium.

THE MOTION PICTURE PLAYER FINDS FAVOR

THIS instrument, manufactured by the J. C. Seeburg Piano Company, of Chicago, is another piano-organ combination that is meeting with favor from exhibitors. The piano or organ can each be played separately or both together by any pianist, and can also be played automatically by means of music rolls.

The rolls for this machine contain ten selections and are made especially for this instrument. Any and all conceivable drummers' traps and noise-making machines are in this machine, even to a bird call and baby cry, and are operated by buttons placed on each side of the keyboard and by pedals operated by the feet. There is also a xylophone in this instrument, which can be played separately as a solo instrument or in combination with others.

Agencies Furnish Orchestra Players

While on the subject it might not be amiss to mention that a number of theatrical agencies which have hitherto furnished orchestras, pianists, singers, drummers, etc., to the picture houses as needed, have opened a new department devoted to the furnishing of operators for these "one-man orchestras." These operators are artists who have learned to play the different instruments in the showrooms of the different manufacturers and are registered with the agents. Probably the best known agencies which can fill out-of-town as well as local calls are Bloch & Barmore, 145 West 45th Street, New York, and Len Spencer, in West 42nd Street.

PILCHER'S AND WELTE'S ORGANS POPULAR

SOME exhibitors preferring just the organ music for their pictures are installing the Henry Pilcher's Sons, Louisville, Ky., pipe organs; others are getting the Philharmonic organs of J. M. Welte & Sons. The latter manufacture an organ that reproduces the playing of the greatest organists of the world automatically. They also manufacture an organ orchestrion that reproduces an orchestra as well as an organ.

DEAGAN'S BELLS AND THE DRUMONA

ANOTHER class of exhibitors just want the old reliable piano with drummers' traps. For them the ideal combination would be Lapin's Drumona or Dramagraph and Deagan's electric bells.

The Drumona orchestral cabinet contains drums and traps all placed so that the pianist can have the use of either foot or one hand can produce any effect that the best trap drummer would be put to shame.

The Dramagraph is an instrument to be operated by the drummer and can produce any sound from a saw mill to a typewriter, water trains, wagons, baby crying, chimes, horses, rain, thunder, etc. All these and a hundred other effects are at the command of the drummer simply by pushing a button, turning a crank or pressing a pedal.

Wide Range of Instruments

The Deagan bells are operated from a keyboard by either the drummer or pianist and constitute an attractive feature for any exhibitor. Among the fastest sellers and those which may be classed as fixtures, are the following: Musical saucer bells, cathedral chimes, electric duaphone, steel marinbaphone and organ and aluminum chimes. Many houses which feel the need of attracting attention have put the Deagan electric bells or chimes in the lobby of their theatres and the latter are operated either from the ticket booth or from the orchestra pit as desired.

DRUMS FOR PICTURE HOUSES

ONE of the largest plants devoted exclusively to the manufacture of drummers' instruments and accessories for use in motion picture theatres, is the Leedy Manufacturing Company, Indianapolis.

Before they leave the factory all instruments are carefully tested to see that they are in first-class condition.

This procedure has insured complete satisfaction on the part of all buyers doing business with the Leedy concern. The prices are low commensurate with the quality of the article the company feels must be maintained to keep up its reputation for turning out a high-class product.

Leedy's Full Line

Other instruments manufactured by the Leedy people are the Harpaphone, which is noted for its combination of the pure, sweet tone of the Italian harp and the resonance qualities of the marimbaphone; the concert grand xylophone; tubular cathedral chimes; castanets; tom toms; anvils, locomotive bell imitation, reel rattle and whistles.

The drums manufactured by the Leedy concern are of exceptional quality. The Allinone is possessed of unusual volume and is designed for drummers needing an instrument for producing unusual effects. The rest of the line includes orchestra snares, bass drums, ordinary brass, tympani, kettle and cylindrical.

The Excelsior Drum Works, Camden, N. J., manufactured an extensive line of drums particularly suitable to motion picture needs, and have become known among theatres for a class of goods which measure up to the exacting standards set by the manufacturers of high-class instruments.

ILLUMINATION IN THE MODERN THEATRE

THERE is a fault that confronts thousands of small theatres in the United States and Canada, which, if not corrected, will be one of the reasons of their extinction. This is bad illumination.

About ninety per cent of the small motion picture theatres of to-day are long and narrow, and the majority of these are so dark that when coming from a well-lighted street, the effect on the eyes is about the same as looking in the headlight of an automobile on a dark night. The eyes accustom themselves shortly to the brightness of the picture, and the darkness of the room. The eye strain, however, is still there.

Effects of Eye Strain

Eye strain produces nervousness, headache, stomach trouble, and makes one restless and irritable. This restlessness and nervousness produce dissatisfaction among the audiences of motion picture theatres improperly lighted, without the real fault being apparent. In fact, people will patronize certain theatres without themselves knowing the reason they do so, except that they feel more comfortable, and enjoy the pictures and music without being oppressed.

This comfort is always found in properly illuminated theatres, where there is no eye strain, and the opposite effect experienced in dark, gloomy theatres, where the underground feeling is so apparent.

Indirect lighting fixtures properly manufactured will correct all improper illuminated theatres. This is not merely an assertion, but a fact.

Indirect lighting fixtures produce a soft, luminous atmosphere that is both pleasing and mysterious. The rays of light from lamps, in place of reflecting their light direct, are enclosed in semi-opaque bowls of different designs, and reflected to ceiling, and there diffused to the auditorium as beautiful, soft, useful light that is not harsh or dazzling.

By this method pictures can be projected in a well-lighted auditorium without any eyestrain, and the pictures on screen will stand out with remarkable clearness.

Well-lighted Auditoriums

No other recommendation of its superiority is needed when one recognizes the many advantages to be derived from a well-lighted auditorium during the projection of pictures. It brings out the architectural beauty, enables the seating of patrons without confusion, and besides many other advantages, gives a feeling of security and safety.

The General Specialty Company, St. Louis, manufactures a complete line of indirect lighting fixtures, and is always willing to advise and figure any illuminating job. They have discovered that the correct lighting of auditoriums of motion picture theatres can only be accomplished by an even distribution of light rays. That is, to have at the seat level an equal distribution of light.

Produces Even Effect

In recent experiments they have proven that their Luna White reflecting surface produces this effect. This Luna White reflecting surface is so white that it makes all other whites appear gray, and its advantage is not so much in its power as a reflector, or economy of electric current, but in its being able to produce an evenness of light rays, which is so necessary for correct picture projection.

The General Specialty Company also manufactures brackets, semi-direct lighting fixtures, and exit lights of all kinds, and would be pleased to send circulars on request.

The X-Ray Reflector Method

The question of indirect lighting has so many advocates among exhibitors that many firms have concentrated all their efforts on the production of elaborate systems based on this principle.

The National X-Ray Reflector Company, Chicago, recently issued an illustrated booklet giving in detail information which would enable a manager to estimate the probable cost of the installation of such a plant. It includes electrical tables and methods of calculation. The company has designated their lighting plan as "Illumination by the eye comfort system."

The booklet will be sent on request.

LIGHTING SYSTEMS

FOR motion picture theatres in smaller cities, where the equipment of the electric generating stations is not satisfactory, as often happens, there is a variation of from five to fifteen per cent in the voltage. The Charles A. Strelinger Company, Detroit, declares that direct current with good regulation at a proper voltage, if the price is within reason, is all right for the average exhibitor, but that is is impossible to obtain direct current in some towns.

To meet this condition the company has put on the market an electric lighting set of sixty volts. It consists of a two-cylinder, ten-horsepower upright, four-cycle balanced engine for gas, gasoline or kerosene. The company feels that this outfit meets the first consideration of reliability.

The machine will not fail at a critical moment. It is well known that a manager can lose in a single week a great deal of money if he has the least trouble with his power. But the installation of a Brush outfit will, according to the manufacturers, assure the owner of a perfect lighting system at the lowest possible cost commensurate with good service.

Vol. X August 15, 1914 No. 6

The War Cloud and Its Silver Lining

HOW will the European war affect the motion picture industry? is heard on every hand, among manufacturers, exchange managers and exhibitors. The question seems to imply pessimism, but in reality there is no cause for alarm.

Indeed, the outlook for a continuation of good business is promising, based on the very conditions which at first blush appear to warrant the belief in a set back to film drama.

A prolonged conflict on the other side will stimulate our manufactures and give this country unlimited opportunities to dispose of all kinds of products. With Europe's wheels of commerce suddenly brought to a standstill and the hands of her sturdy planters stayed in tilling of the soil to take up arms against their neighbors, the United States must feed and clothe the teeming millions now no longer engaged in profitable labor.

WHAT the nations cannot do for themselves at Present we must—and the cultivation of the arts of peace will bring us its own reward. Naturally, the idea of profiting by the afflictions and misfortunes of others is abhorrent to the generous feelings of Americans.

Nevertheless, sentiment cannot remove or modify the economic conditions suddenly thrust upon us by the swift changes abroad during the last fortnight.

WITH everything booming—factories running night and day, the enormous shipments of foodstuffs and provisions, this country will enjoy an era of prosperity unequalled since the artificial stimulus to trade experienced directly after the Civil War and the Spanish-American imbroglio. The prosperous times created by war are short lived. But while they last everyone profits by the extra stress on the world's labor. Hence the average man will earn more, and in his increased affluence will spend liberally. In this mood he seeks amusements.

IF the war compels us to cease importing foreign pictures the domestic market will receive greater stimulus. No doubt there will be a demand for films having "war" settings.

Of course, there is a probability that the cost of amusements will not increase to any great extent, particularly motion pictures. Only time will tell what shall be the outcome of this titanic struggle. European importation of films if suddenly reduced to practically nothing may assist the home market. It is said that there has been a glut of photo play production in this country. If so, the lack of imports will enable us to absorb the surplus.

As to the increased cost to exhibitor and patron alike, perhaps this very plethora, coming when it does, will steady prices.

War pictures are sure to be in active demand. Used as regular features in an ordinary program, the necessary stimulus to local patronage may be obtained without any corresponding increase in booking expense.

Another angle of the situation presents itself for consideration: the after effect on American industries generally of the huge disturbance. A boom always follows warlike operations. But as prosperity thus created is not the result of normal trade development, a reaction is bound to set in later. Economic production then has to be curtailed.

Such a period of depression, however, is too far distant for this country to worry about.

Paradoxical as it may seem, yet the truth remains that while all other kinds of business, particularly the amusement field, will probably feel the effects of that remote period of depression, the motion picture industry will not suffer.

THE reason is very simple. People will be amused no matter the condition of their circumstances. If compelled to retrench expenses on account of the high cost of living, they will economize on food and other things to squeeze out the price of a few cheap theatre tickets. As motion pictures give the public the ideal combination of finished art and low admission prices, nobody will feel too poor to be entertained by film drama.

But for the present, with commercial activity looming large on the horizon, no one need look so far ahead.

SAFETY AND FIRE PREVENTION

"SAFETY first!"

Exhibitors will find a quantity of good advertising material in the new national slogan. And they will find hundreds of men and women in every city who will aid them to capitalize it.

The recent crusade, not yet at the zenith of its popularity, is particularly applicable to every motion picture theatre. Few other commercial undertakings have been so much criticised, and so unmercifully attacked by public officials, as motion picture theatres. Public buildings of every description have burned down without arousing crusades.

Motion picture theatres have been the scenes of small fires, confined, in the majority of instances, to the operating booth, and instantly press, public and municipal and state officials have set upon all exhibitors within their legal jurisdiction, hounding them to vast expenditures for fire prevention equipment not adapted to theatres.

There is a big advantage in having a theatre provided with exits that work, and with an asbestos lined booth, a trained corps of employees who know just what to do in the event of a fire, and other measures of equal importance. But "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." No matter if a small fire is almost instantly quelled, a doubt is raised in the minds of patrons. They have seen that, somehow, something was lacking, or the fire would not have occurred.

It is to the best interests of every exhibitor to provide his theatre with ample protection against fire. Preventative equipment now on the market includes accessories for the operating booth, such as chemical extinguishers, automatic shutters for the machines, fire blankets, and sprinkler systems. For other parts of the theatre are provided exit doors, opening automatically when the heat reaches a few degrees above normal temperature, and those that fly open at the slightest touch; seats that fold up through springs when a patron arises, and various other forms of appliances.

While many of these are assets, the most necessary expenditures for an exhibitor are those by which he purchases the things that will tend to prevent fires, or, at least, to keep any conflagration within a very small radius.

Make It Pay for Itself

It is possible to make every bit of this equipment actually pay for itself. The first inclination in the mind of practically every individual is for personal safety when confronted with danger of any description.

This can be traded upon to a profit through the advertising of safety appliances in a theatre.

Give positive assurance to anyone that he or she will be perfectly safe in a theatre, and that, in the vent of any unexpected incident, the house is amply provided with safety exits and other devices, and a large part of the personal fear in patronizing a theatre is removed.

FIREPROOF BOOTHS FOR THEATRES

PROMINENT among the products of the H. W. Johns-Manville Company for motion picture theatres, are the J-M Transite Asbestos wood and Asbestos cloth booths, J-M Transite Asbestos wood in sheets and moulded shapes, J-M Asbestos and Vitribestos curtains, J-M roofing and siding materials, Frink and J-M Linolite lighting fixtures, and other supplies and euipment.

J-M booths are made in three styles: permanent or stationary, semi-portable and portable. The material from which the stationary and semi-portable types are made is J-M Transite Asbestos wood, a combination of asbestos fibre and cementing compounds. This material is absolutely fireproof, indestructible, and will not warp or shrink. Water does not disintegrate it, even if turned on while the "wood" is hot.

It is a non-conductor of electricity, eliminating any possibility of "charging" or "grounding." Further, it is a very effective insulator against sound, and prevents the transmission to the auditorium of noise incident to the operation of the machine. J-M Transite wood can be painted or finished in almost any manner desired.

Fine Portable Booths

The portable booths consist of an iron pipe framework covered with J-M Asbestos cloth. J-M Asbestos booths conform to all the requirements of the insurance authorities and the inspection departments in states wherever laws have been passed compelling the use of fireproof booths. They also have the approval of the National Board of Fire Insurance Underwriters and the New England Insurance Exchange.

J-M Transite Asbestos wood is also furnished in sheets, moulded shape forms, and can be used in the construction of fireproof storage cabinets, boxes, closets, etc. Amongst the Johns-Manville products of recognized values are their asbestos theatre curtains. More fire disasters have undoubtedly been prevented by asbestos theatre curtains than by any other single protective device, and there are probably more J-M theatre curtains in use than all other makes combined.

These curtains are made in two types—pure Asbestos cloth, with or without interwoven brass wire reinforcement, and the J. M Vitribestos type, consisting of a structural metal frame covered on the stage side with J-M Vitribestos fireproof sheets one inch thick, and sheet steel on the auditorium side. J-M Vitribestos construction entirely meets the requirements in many states that theatres be equipped with a fireproof curtain made in the form of a movable fire wall.

J-M Success fire extinguisher is approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters. The chemicals used in the J-M Success are the same as used by fire departments.

Throws 50-foot Stream

The J-M Success throws a 50-foot chemical stream that is forty times as effective as water. It effectually extinguishes film, benzine, naphtha, and other fires on which water has little or no effect.

J-M Asbestos roofing and Asbestoside are the ready-roofing and siding materials for the motion picture theatre. These materials are made of asbestos—hence are fireproof, and permanently waterproof. They are easily applied and never require coating or painting.

This system not only provides the most artistic illumination, but is more economical than other methods in the use of current.

THE SAFETY EXIT DOOR LATCH

NO more welcome device can be invented than those aiming at the prevention of loss of life by fire. Laws have been passed requiring that all buildings in which audiences assemble shall have ready exits in case of fire or panic, and the doors equipped with positive and quick safety devices.

In line with these regulations, Henry Frank, Jr., New York City, is manufacturing a gravity panic door latch to take care of all such emergencies. The distinctive features of this latch are that it catches at three points, and therefore can be locked from either side, and that it works by its own weight, having no springs or like mechanism to get out of order. There is a push bar across the inside of the door, which gives whenever there is any pressure against it, and releases the catches.

Rapid Exit of Crowd

There is no danger of a panic-stricken crowd being hemmed in and not being able to let themselves out on account of the jam against the door. The very jam in the case of this latch causes its release and the opening of the doors.

The three-point feature is of the greatest importance in shutting off fire in one part of a building from another part.

If the door were fastened at the top and bottom only, the door would probably warp and bend on account of the great heat exerted against one side, and would pull and give way. But with the additional fastening in the middle, no matter how great the heat may be, it will hold fast until it burns up.

The Von Duprin System

The Von Duprin self-releasing fire exit latches, for which the Vonnegut Hardware Co. is the general distributor can be operated by a child, it is so simple. No instruction is necessary. It is considered a positive safeguard for theatre exit doors. The device is made extra heavy to withstand the hardest kind of usage.

At the same time, there are no exposed parts which might tear clothes or hurt the fingers of those seeking hurried exits to the street in case of fire or panic. These devices are well beyond the experimental stage and will not fail to operate at the critical moment.

WHERE CARELESSNESS IS FATAL

EFFICIENCY experts have succeeded in persuading hundreds of employers that every motion an employee makes in the discharge of a specific duty is a direct loss to the company unless it be reduced to the simplest and most economical and time saving form.

The box-office of a theatre is the heart of the exhibitor's business. An operator may make a slight error in focusing, a musician may strike the wrong note, or an usher may neglect a scrap of paper in an aisle, without immediately affecting the bank balance of his employer.

But let the cashier make the slightest error in changing a five dollar bill, or fail to give the correct amount of change to a patron, and the figures in the credit column of the exhibitor's bank book will fluctuate like a mercury in the lake regions.

Where Inefficiency is Disastrous

There is no other department of theatre management which requires so great a degree of efficiency as the box-office. The brightest and most quick-thinking of cashiers will make errors if they are not provided with every convenience for their prevention.

It is behind the glass window in the centre of the lobby that the pulse of the business is most keenly felt. A man presents a dollar bill, asking for two ten-cent admissions, and three five-cent tickets. The cashier, in the rush and scramble of keeping the waiting line moving, returns a half dollar and two nickels. Immediately the purchaser lets out a yell.

"Watch out, they'll short change you," is the cry up and down the line. And all the while the cashier earnestly believes that one of those two nickels accompanying the half dollar across the return tray was a dime. She has no means of determining whether she has made an error. To adjust matters, a third nickel is paid out.

Guard Against Errors

To make change quickly and accurately, and at the same time issue admission tickets of one or more denominations requires concentration. The least thing gone wrong, a stack of dimes accidentally overturned, the tickets improperly perforated, a faulty piece of mechanism in the disbursing machine, or any one of a hundred and more other probable happenings, will give errors an opportunity to creep in. An error will require less than a second to become a menace that may take hours to straighten out.

Efficiency is "Webster" for common sense. The business man who displays common sense in protecting his business unconsciously practices efficiency. And that means system, simple as possible, but effective.

There are, at present, many box-office appliances on the market, all tending to promote efficiency behind the plate glass window, and protect the exhibitor against error. The purchase and installation is comparatively easy. The biggest item that enters into consideration is the proper use and maintenance of the equipment after it has been installed. Where mechanical appliances are used they should be cleaned and oiled at least twice a month. Each roll of tickets should be subjected to inspection, a thing requiring a couple of minutes by the cashier. If a change drawer is used it should have its several compartments distinctly labeled.

THE CASH REGISTER IN THE BOX-OFFICE

THE enterprise of the National Cash Register Company is proverbial. From the first machine it placed on the market some years ago it has kept pace with the demands of all lines of business. In accord with this spirit it immediately invented and marketed a device for motion picture theatres the moment its real advantages were recognized.

Its ticket-issuing register for motion picture houses and airdomes have become indispensable for managers who are on the lookout for devices which will facilitate their business.

The advantages of this particular machine are manifold, but a brief mention of some of them will show at once how necessary it is for every motion picture exhibitor to have one in his ticket booth.

Will Prevent Losses

Its use is designed to prevent losses which might otherwise occur if there were no means of checking receipts automatically.

Tickets are handled by employes; money is saved on the cost of tickets; it means convenience for both patron and cashier; it eliminates congestion and provides a speedy system for handling a crowd; a balance is instantly struck at the last sale of tickets; the possibility of manipulation of cash and tickets is entirely removed; the same register can issue five different tickets; the cashier has only to press the keys of the register and make change; the money must be recorded on the machine before it is possible to hand the patron a ticket; there is no chance of collecting and reselling tickets, inasmuch as each one must come through the ticket chute.

The use of the machine enables the manager to get tickets at a cost of 3½ cents a thousand as compared with the eight and ten cents charged for preprinted tickets, according to the statement of the company.

Another Automatic Seller

For simplicity, accuracy and rapidity in handling of business at the ticket booth, the machine sold by the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, New York and St. Louis, has been attracting the attention of the buyers in the motion picture field. The machines are capable of issuing from one to five at a time, and each ticket is registered automatically as it is sold. The method is certainly better than the one in use from time immemorial, that of laying the tickets on the counter and taking chances of their being blown away by the wind.

The machine of this company has a record of 11,281 sold and registered in one day, according to the statement made by the manufacturers. They have a letter from the Empress Theatre, Omaha, which shows this record.

Because of its automatic features the machine is absolutely accurate. Thus dangers of miscounts and mistakes are entirely eliminated. Sales can be checked up instantly at any time during the day. The exhibitor does not have to wait until closing time to find out how his accounts stand.

A PAY-AS-YOU-ENTER DEVICE

THE Recording and Computing Machines Company, of Dayton, Ohio, are offering an article to the exhibitor which tends to do away with the use of tickets for the motion picture theatre. It is a device similar to the pay boxes used on the pay-as-you-enter cars, in which the patrons drop the correct amount of admission.

The attendant simply turns a crank which records each admission fee on the counter. It is impossible to make a mistake, and as the mechanism is practically indestructible the investment will be a practical one.

TURNSTILES AND TICKET CHOPPERS

REGISTERING turnstiles of many different types and designs are being sold by the Electric Service Supplies Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

Type A is substantially constructed so as to withstand the severe service incident to recording large numbers of people. They have heavy cast iron bases with arms made of 1¼-inch seamless steel tubing, finished in black japan. Means are provided for locking the stile when not in use. Type B turnstiles differ from the Type A, in that they are fitted with drop arms forming a more complete protection to the entrance.

Either of the above types may be equipped with plain register or printing register. On the plain register the figures are visible through the register case. Printing registers graphically record the number of patrons entering the theatre on specially prepared record slips of carbon paper. With this printing attachment records can be taken from the machine at any time, all chances of error are eliminated and the exhibitor is furnished a turnstile record in a convenient form for filing.

Types of Ticket Choppers

Many different types of ticket choppers to meet every requirement of service are being sold by the same company.

The Type K ticket chopper or canceling machine, is constructed of heavy oak body, having substantial polished brass trimmings and top consisting entirely of heavy plate glass and polished brass framing. Type J ticket choppers differ from the Type K in that the top has plate glass on two sides only. Both types are arranged with brass hinges to enable the removal of any foreign matter which may be unintentionally dropped into the machine.

Tickets are canceled by passing between two rolls operated by means of a foot lever or hand wheel. These rolls perforate the tickets with clean-cut holes, dropping them into a canvas bag inside the cabinet. The tickets are left with a smooth surface and are not mutilated, thus enabling them to be stacked and counted, if desired. Any number of ordinary roll tickets from one to twelve may be passed through the machine at one time.

THEATRE TICKETS

THE Keller Printing Company, of New York, received the prize award at the World's Fair in 1893 for ticket printing and printed all the tickets for the World's Fair, numbering many millions.

It has sought to do a conservative and legitimate trade among solid houses. It guarantees good packing, correct numbering and promptness in delivery. Besides the usual order of tickets they are ready to print especial varieties and cater to the wants of each individual exhibitor.

LEADING TYPES OF LENSES

MALTESE brand lenses, sold by Semon Bache & Company, New York, are guaranteed against discoloring of any detrimental tint. They may, after continual usage, develop a slight straw color, but this does not interfere with the effectiveness of the lenses. Heretofore the so-called crystal white lenses turned violet, it is stated, then purple and then black and sometimes red. The use of the Maltese brand optical glass has solved this problem, the manufacturers declare.

Semon Bache & Company have established a uniform standard with the use of the Maltese brand optical molten mass, and of each and every glass, insuring uniformity of the individual lens year in and year out.

All the surfaces are ground and polished, not simply moulded or fire polished, thus insuring optically true surfaces. All shapes and all focuses of lenses are supplied by this company.

THE SUPPLY HOUSE AND THE EXHIBITOR

"WHERE to buy" is one of the biggest factors which faces the exhibitors to-day. Whether to buy from the manufacturer or from the jobber.

In the motion picture field, as in most new businesses which have not had time to settle down, the tendency has been to buy direct from the producer. There is no reason for this except custom.

The dealer or jobber, known in this business as the equipment man, is in some cases better fitted to sell the exhibitor than the manufacturer. One reason is that the equipment man usually handles all of the standard articles of each kind. For instance, the substantial equipment man will handle three or four projection machines. He has no particular one to push, and, as a consequence, his advice can be obtained without prejudice.

As far as price is concerned, the dealer can at times make as attractive a price as the manufacturer, as he is allowed by that manufacturer a trade discount which cannot be secured by the exhibitor.

The manufacturer's business is to produce a machine which will meet with the requirements of the trade. The business of the equipment man is to sell. In order to do this successfully he must be able to decide what his customer wants, and to provide it. Selling equipment is his business, and it is claimed by some dealers that as his bread and butter depends on his ability to provide what is wanted, he will generally do better than the man to whom retail sales are merely an incident in his usual routine.

ATSCO'S WIDE RANGE

ATSCO, Inc., New York, has become so well known through its Gold Fibre screen that some exhibitors might have forgotten that it conducts an enormous supply business, covering a wide range of accessories from projectors to souvenirs.

Among the former carried by this firm are the Edison, Motiograph, Phantoscope, Simplex, Royal, Edengraph, and the Cameron.

The company has a full line of sheet metal booths, current-saving devices, lenses, chandeliers for indirect lighting, outside lighting fixtures, exhaust fans, carbons, automatic selling apparatus, turnstiles, opera chairs, lobby frames, brass goods, metal ceiling, decorative plants, musical instruments, fire extinguishers, and scores of other articles essential to a full equipment in a first-class motion picture theatre.

SHARLOW SPECIALTIES

ONE of the most important houses in its line is the Sharlow Brothers Company, 440 West Forty-second street, New York City, which manufactures film reels, film cans, cabinets, metal tables, racks, and shelves for exchanges, motion picture booths, lamp houses, magazine boxes, switch covers for the machine manufacturer, and metal slide carriers.

The metal film reel is made from the best sheet steel obtainable. They run with an even and very smooth motion. The company also manufactures first-class reels having wooden hubs, which are reinforced with metal bushing. This gives the article long life, and has met with high favor with all who have used it.

The portable sheet metal booths have been made with an idea of supplying the trade with a safe and sensible enclosure for operators' machines. It is made with interchangeable panels, and can be taken apart or set up in a few minutes without any trouble. The manufacturers claim that it is impossible for fire to escape from the booth, thus making its use absolutely safe with no danger of fire to the theatre.

The asbestos booths also handled by the company are among the leading enclosures of this type on the market. They are so made that a man putting them up does not have to be a skilled mechanic.

A REPAIRING EXPERT

HENRY MESTRUM, successor to C. B. Kleine, New York, the manufacturing projection supply house, has made a reputation among the trade for the efficient manner in which it does quick repairing of motion picture machines and cameras.

Exhibitors have found that machines sent to the firm for repair have been put in order in a surprisingly short time, and that the work was performed by the most efficient mechanics obtained. The company has built up this lasting standing by employing the best methods in dealing with the customers.

The repair factory is equipped with a complete outfit of the latest lathes and other apparatus for reconstruction and finishing processes.

A SUBSTANTIAL FIRM

ONE of the largest motion picture supply houses is the Picture Theatre Equipment Company, New York. This concern handles booths, condensers of all makes, ticket choppers, reels, reel cases, booth cabinets, and carries constantly in stock a full line of the principal projection machines like the Powers, Motiograph, Simplex and Edison.

CHICAGO SUPPLY HOUSES

The E. E. Fulton Company, Chicago, wholesale and retail dealers in a wide variety of articles used in the motion picture industry, is widely known for the quality of the articles it handles. Exhibitors who have made purchases from the company form the "come again" habit, pleased with the courteous treatment as well as the satisfaction given them by the articles sold them.

REBUILT MACHINES THEIR SPECIALTY

A COMPLETE line of rebuilt machines is carried by the Amusement Supply Company, Chicago, which has gained a reputation for the concern, known wherever projection machines are in use. The company also has in stock new machines of the principal makers.

In its repair work the Amusement Supply Company uses only genuine parts, a feature in reconstruction work which is a consideration for all those who have any repairs to be made on their projection apparatus. All work done by the company is guaranteed, and the assurance of the concern that the work is the best obtainable through the employment of only expert mechanics.

A VIRILE SOUTHERN FIRM

THE N. & T. Supply Company, Norfolk, Va., which carries a complete line of accessories for exhibitors, is now pushing the Edison Model D machine and handling the Curtainyline, a coating designed to improve motion pictures when applied to muslin or canvas curtains.

The other articles carried in stock by the company consists of a full line of Bio carbons, stock tickets, FV condensers, 2-in-1 film cement, announcement slides, gas outfits, rewinders, reels, wire, lenses, oxone, limes, ether, pastils, poster slips, machine parts, burners, slide ink, and numerous other things necessary to the manager of a theatre.

The firm carries a full and complete line of the articles handled by it, and is ready to fill orders on the shortest possible notice.

CALEHUFF AMONG THE LEADERS

THE Calehuff Supply Company, Philadelphia, one of the largest concerns of its kind, carries a line of exhibitors' accessories so extensive that it includes practically everything needed by a motion picture theatre. It has constantly in stock brass and wood frames, ticket choppers, asbestos booths, Fort Wayne compensarcs, fire extinguishers, fire boxes, carbons, cement, trap drum effects, spot lights, Wagner converters, chairs, pianos, condensers, tickets, carrying cases, slide ink, exit signs, automatic ticket registers, flame arc lamps, mercury arc rectifiers, and a host of other articles.

The company prides itself upon being able to fill all orders promptly, and the goods it furnishes are all backed by a guarantee as to quality.

The numerous exhibitors who have dealt with the Calehuff people constitute a large army of satisfied customers.

OTHER IMPORTANT FIRMS

LEWIS M. SWAAB, distributor of Powers and Simplex machines, located at Philadelphia, Pa., also carries a large line of other articles indispensable to the motion picture exhibitor. Besides these two brands of machines he offers for sale Caille Brothers ticket choppers, Kliegel Brothers spot lights, Presto poster frames, Chloror Naptholeum disinfectant, Dixon's Graphitoleo for lubricating purposes, Paxon's sweeping compound, Mortimer film cleaners, lenses of every focus, condensers and rheostats of any voltage.

Among the other numerous supply houses whose goods give entire satisfaction are: the Oliver Motion Picture Supply Company, Cleveland; Williams, Brown & Earl, Philadelphia; American Motion Picture Supply League, New York City; the Decorators' Supply Company, Chicago; the Lears Theatre Supply Company, St. Louis; the Photoplay Company, Inc., Chicago; the George W. Hoke Supply Company, Chicago; the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, Cincinnati, and the Consolidated Theatre & Supply Company, of Dallas, Tex., and Atlanta, Ga., whose Dallas branch is headed by Ned Depinet.

EXPRESSING EMOTION WITH GLOVES

EDWARD Brennan, the man of mystery in "Our Mutual Girl," serial has practiced criminal law on the Pacific Coast; he was a soldier in Porto Rico and in South Africa; he was a member of President Roosevelt's board that arbitrated the friar land dispute in the Philippines, and he is an actor.

"Here's the difficulty of this mystery business," Brennan (his name in "Our Mutual Girl" is Howard Dunbar) said recently: "If a man who has to play such a part could utilize the conventional 'drop them papers or you're a dead man' kind of stuff it would be easy. But when you have to maintain dignity and poise, be at once a man under suspicion of underworld connections and prove you have Fifth avenue acquaintanceships and clothes—it's a regular job.

"I found out early in my experience in "Our Mutual Girl" that I could not use the usual tricks of eyebrow or supercilious smile or foot tapping that for years have been good form on stage and screen.

"It suddenly flashed upon me that a great deal of expression was obtainable in the use of my gloves.

"I learned how to twist my gloves in my fingers to show tenseness or to slap my thigh gently with them to show satisfaction or to remove them slowly and in quasi fits and starts to show doubt and hesitation."

Brennan was born in Rochester, N. Y., on June 29, 1876, and is a graduate of the University of Notre Dame, where he was quarterback.

Universal Signs Seven Screen Favorites

Harry Myles, Rosemary Theby, Anne Luther and Brinsley Shaw Quit Lubin—George Lessey and Jay Williams Leave Edison

THE Universal Company has added to its studio forces seven well-known film players and producers. Following the disbandment of five Lubin companies, announcement is made of the signing of four Lubin film artists by the Universal, Harry C. Meyers, Rosemary Theby, Brinsley Sheridan Shaw and Anne Luther.

The Universal has also acquired C. J. Williams, George A. Lessey and Ben Wilson, late of the Edison Company.

The new company will begin work in a fortnight, and for the present will be attached to the Imp studios in New York City, under the supervision of Manager Julius Stern. Harry C. Meyers, who has directed himself the past ten months with the Lubin company, will act as director of the new company, which will devote itself to society dramas and refined comedies.

Last, but not least, on the list is John Ince, of the 200 candlesticks and other things of which Benny so delighted to write. He is now with Colonel Joe Smiley's bunch, from which he graduated last year after the filming of the "Battle of Shiloh" picture, parts of which he directed. Mary Keene, who played sub leads, has returned to the "legit" by force of necessity. Justina Huff and Lilie Leslie continue to play leads for Smiley with William Cohill in sub leads and John Smiley as character man.

Gaston Bell, who has been leading man with Barry O'Neil's company for more than a year, has received his unconditional release.

The negatives of all future Lubin work will be stored in newly constructed vaults at Betzwood.

John E. Ince, the Lubin director, is a brother of Thomas H. Ince and

THREE OF UNIVERSAL'S NEW SCREEN FAVORITES

THE Lubin "Patsy Bolivar" company was among those disbanded. Jack and Carrol Holloway say that they expect to join one of the Universal companies soon. Clarence Elmer is out of the Lubin organization altogether.

The Lloyd B. Carleton "De Luxe," another Lubin company, is also disbanded. Carleton is leaving for parts yet unknown. Arthur S. Clifton, assistant director, and Edward J. Peil, leading man, have also vamoosed. Ormi Hawley, leading woman, and Eleanor Barry, character leads, have been transferred to George W. Terwilliger's outfit, and left Monday with Earl Metcalf, Kempton Greene and Ex-director Edgar Jones for Newport. Louise Huff, who played leads for Jones, her husband, accompanied them.

Ralph Ince, directors of the New York Motion Picture Company and the Vitagraph, respectively. He also has histrionic ability. His first appearance before the camera was in the Lubin Philadelphia studio about a year and a half ago. While in the "legitimate" Mr. Ince was a member of such companies as "The Great Divide," "Ben Hur," and "Resurrection." As a director of the voiceless drama his work in "The Prince of Victory," a sensational spectacle, indicated studio generalship of a high order.

A travesty on "Camille," in which Bess Meredyth will play the part of Sarah Heartburn, is to be the next Joker comedy, produced under the direction of J. G. Blythstone.

"THE MILLION-DOLLAR MYSTERY"

(Thanhouser—Seventh Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT is not very often, even in the most realistic pictures, that one sees an automobile with four passengers plunge off the end of a levee into the water, without any substitution of dummies or change of scene, and when such an event does occur as in this episode of the Thanhouser serial, the sensation created will be a stirring one, and will impress itself on the minds of all who witness it.

FLO DISCOVERS THE CONSPIRATOR

This scene comes at the end of an exciting chase in which four of the conspirators are pursuing Jim and Flo. Both parties are in automobiles. Jim sees that the conspirators' high power car is easily overtaking his conveyance and shoots back at them, disabling the steering gear, which results in the plunge in the water. This is by far the best thriller that has appeared in the series up to date. Great credit is due the four men who took this plunge, and their feat will most surely be appreciated by all, even those who do not follow the serial.

It is high time to remark that this episode, entitled "The Doom of the Auto Bandits," like the others, is practically complete in itself. It is an encounter between the conspirators and Florence and her standbys, and even if the observer has not seen the other episodes he will enjoy seeing this one.

Other things not as sensational, but no less entertaining than the automobile incident, are pictured in these two reels. Jim proposes and is accepted by Florence, which adds a touch of romance to the picture. Later, while Florence is riding in the forest, she is captured by the conspirators and taken to a hut in the woods. There they intend to keep her prisoner, but they forgot to figure on Jim, who arrives at the cabin, overpowers the guard after an exciting tussle, and escapes with Florence. Then comes the chase and its ending already described.

Just to show how well this series of pictures is being appreciated by the public it is well to say that at one of Loew's houses where this episode was shown it was greeted with a hearty round of applause.

"THE TRAP"

(American—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY C. J. VERHALEN

AN exceptionally appealing photoplay has been built by the American Film Manufacturing Company in their two-reel production of "The Trap." The story has strong situations, and is interpreted by a capable cast of players, which includes William Garwood, Vivian Rich, Harry Von Meter, Jack Richardson and Louise Lester.

Love, deception, remorse and a big human sacrifice is the thread on which the story is built. As the film unwinds the tale grows stronger and closes in a big, splendid human finale.

In the hills of Kentucky old Buck Sage with his sons and daughter operate a moonshine distillery. The brother punishes his cousin for his roughness to his sister Nan. The cousin turns informer. Wilson Allen, of the secret service, is sent on the case. Through a ruse he gains the confidence of the family, and pretends love to the daughter, who shows him the still. The brothers discover that he is a secret service man and with the assistance of Nan plan to kill him. Her love for him, however, will not permit her to allow the murder. As she goes to warn him she passes the spot where Allen was to be shot. In the dusk her brother mistakes her for the secret service man and she forfeits her life. Allen returns to his chief and resigns.

"ALL LOVE EXCELLING"

(Eclectic—Three Reels
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

WE go back in this picture to a time immediately preceding our Civil War, when Saratoga Springs was the most fashionable watering place in America, and was the gathering place not only of wealthy and well-born Americans, but of members of the European nobility, especially those connected with the diplomatic service in Washington. The picture of the Saratoga of those days is true to life, and there is no exaggeration in the courtliness and gallantry of the men and the beauty and fascination of the women of ante-bellum days.

The cast that delineates these courtly gentlemen and gracious ladies is well chosen. Jack Standing is Lord Edward Litchfield. Eleanore Woodruff plays Beth, who sacrifices her love for the young lord on account of his father's opposition. Crane Wilbur makes a good Duc de St. Claire, who also loves Beth. Margaret Risser is Valerie, the Duc's niece; George Leary, Lord Edward's son; Gertrude Cameron is Mildred Sperry, who becomes Lady Litchfield, and Edward Jose is the old lord. All of these players put real feeling and understanding into their characterizations. Eleanor Woodruff is splendid as the unselfish girl, who gives up her lover at his father's request, and becomes afterwards a Sister of Mercy, nursing the wounded soldiers in the Crimea.

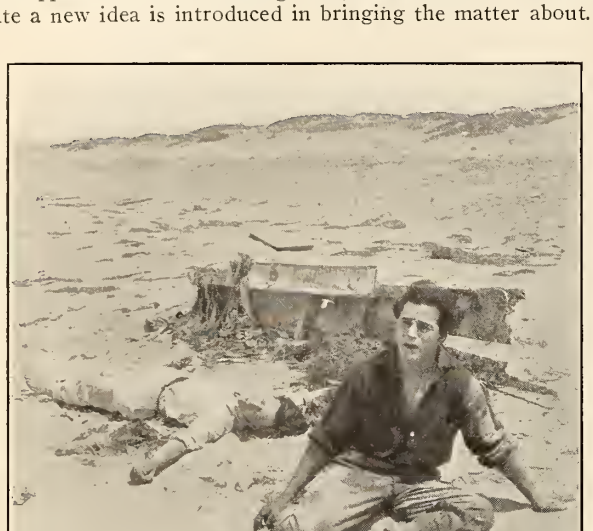
But we can't help asking, "Why should she have given him up?"



The woman that Lord Edward married has no higher social position nor a greater fortune than Beth, at least we are not informed as to this, and we are left entirely in the dark as to the reasons why Mildred Sperry should have met with the old lord's approval when Beth did not. If she had given way to a young woman of noble birth, or to an heiress of great fortune all would have been eminently clear, but she didn't. This is a weakness in the story that might be noticed by some; it is not a vital weakness and interferes but slightly with our enjoyment of a sweet and appealing story of love and self-sacrifice.

"THE TREY O' HEARTS"

(Gold Seal—Third Chapter)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS "The Sea Venture," the title of this separate instalment of "The Trey o' Hearts" indicates, the big scene takes place on the briny deep, and to add a few thrills, quite a little of the action occurs in the water. No serial picture would be complete without its shipwreck scene. The one that appears in this startling story is one of the best, as quite a new idea is introduced in bringing the matter about.

LAW AND HIS CAPTAIN ARE CAST AWAY

Alan Law and Judith Twine are on the former's yacht. Law thinks that Judith is Rose, as she has impersonated her sister. She opens the cock of the gasoline feed pipe and before the captain discovers the trick the hold of the ship is flooded by gasoline. Law, realizing which of the sisters he had on board, sets her adrift in a rowboat. A schooner, which she had chartered to follow her, picks her up. When on board her own vessel she sets a motorboat on fire and heads it toward Law's yacht. He and the captain jump overboard, while the yacht is consumed in flames after it is struck by the power boat.

Tom Walsh takes the part of the captain, and he and Law, after buffetting with the rough sea, finally reach an island, and there we leave them.

There has not been the slightest inkling up to the present time of the nature of the conclusion. And even at the end of an instalment one is wholly in the dark as to what the next will offer in the way of thrills and excitement.

There are many things which stamp this picture as an impressive serial. The imagination of the author, the reckless daring of the leading actors, the ability of the producer, together with the publicity that the serial is now receiving through the papers of all the large cities, make it certain that "The Trey o' Hearts" will meet with universal approval.

"SHORTY AND THE FORTUNE-TELLER"

(Broncho—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SHORTY HAMILTON still creates the heartiest laughs in this series. The first reel of the chapter is side-splitting from the start to the end. Shorty is told by a fortune-teller that he will some day be rich and possess a title. Thinking that this is true he starts to practise city manners. His actions and some of his words that appear in the subtitles such as "Avaunt! Lay no vulgar mits upon me," addressed to his associates, will call forth roars of laughter.

In the second reel he captures a group of stage robbers and restores a little girl to her older sister. She is very grateful, so grateful that she throws her arms about Shorty's neck, to his great embarrassment. But the fortune-teller told him that he was to meet a "beautiful lady," and Shorty thinks he has.

"THE SIREN"

(Eclectic—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

MISS MISTIN GUETTE is the Siren, and she plays the part with just the right amount of impudent seductiveness and captivating heartlessness to make her ensnaring of so many sensible men entirely probable. She is a young woman with a beautiful face and a fine figure, two absolute necessities for the heroine of this photoplay. But she has more than mere physical charms; she has that indefinable something that is called personality, and she makes this felt through the films, subtly but unmistakably.

Supporting Miss Guette are Henri Krauss and Paul Capellani. The former has appeared in Sarah Bernhardt's company and was a well-trained actor before he began to appear before the camera. Since that time he has enacted many important roles in film dramas, the best known of which was Jean Valjean in the elaborate production of "Les Miserables." His experience and technical training in his art are easily evident in his careful and finished delineation of the character of Dr. Williams, the husband whom the Siren deserted. He is not merely a figure that passes across the film here and there at intervals in the story; he is a clearly outlined character; and we are made almost as certainly aware of his character as of his personal appearance, so finely is the part enacted by Mr. Krauss. He is a man of deep and tender feelings, once they have been aroused, but he has at the same time excellent self-control. He is generous, high-minded, devoted, but resolute and unwavering when the time comes for action. All of this we learn though not a word is spoken of him or by him. The actions of the man can not tell us all of this; it is the expression of his face and his gestures that reveal his inmost feelings and thoughts. It has often been said that the French talk as well with their hands as with their tongues; this accomplishment stands them in good stead in the photodrama.

The story can be guessed from the title. It is about the successive love affairs of a young woman, who in her provincial home yearns for the pleasures of Parisian life. She goes to the city, becomes the leader of a gay set, has many admirers and lovers, each one of whom she drops for the next one that comes along. In a seacoast villa, she meets a young fisherman, disrupts his engagement with his fiancee, and is killed by the mother of the fisherman she has ensnared.

Live News of the Week

"The Call of the North," with Robert Edeson in the principal role, is the main film attraction at the Strand Theatre the week of August 9. This photoplay was written by George Broadhurst and is a version of Stewart Edward White's famous novel "The Conjuror's House."

Marjorie Bonner, who played with George Sidney in "Busy Izzy," is now creating quite a following among motion picture patrons in her interpretation of the lead in the "Master Cracksman."

MARJORIE BONNER

John A. Nicols, a New Orleans boy, said to be the youngest branch manager of the oldest motion picture producers in the world, Pathé Frères, has just signed a contract with Josiah Pearce & Sons to handle the feature productions of Pathé and Eclectic.

Clarence Badger, scenario writer for the Allen Curtis Joker Comedy Company, Universal, was married on July 16, at San Diego, to Miss Lillian Schoene, of Hollywood, Cal. Their parents were chums in childhood and planned that their children should wed. After their marriage in San Diego they spent a short honeymoon along the Mexican border.

"Dan," the latest All Star feature, in which Lew Dockstader plays the lead, has been booked by numerous exchanges. They report a growing demand for the picture. George H. Irving, the director of the production, recently gave a private exhibition of the film in the projection room of the All Star Feature Corporation at which twenty-seven persons, especially invited, viewed the release. They were unanimous in praise of its vivid picture of the Civil War.

Eleanor O'Keefe, who was with Tom D. Cochrance during the first two years of the Imp company, has been acquired by David Horsley and has already taken up important duties at the Bayonne studio.

Miss O'Keefe will for the present assist in organizing the publicity and advertising department, and will later become assistant to Mr. Horsley.

Mme. Keeny Lipzin is playing lead in "A Great Mistake," the first release of the Renowned Players Feature Film Company. She has been tremendously successful in "Camille" and Gondon's play throughout the United States and the Continent.

MME. KEENY LIPZIN

The New York Theatre changes its policy on August 10, from booking a combination program of motion pictures and vaudeville, to that of booking regular attractions, either in the form of spectacular motion pictures, or large musical productions.

The first attraction that will be offered under the new policy is "The $5,000,000 Counterfeiting Plot," in which W. J. Burns appears throughout the 600 scenes.

Serious purpose and careful study have made Miriam Nesbitt one of the foremost dramatic actresses appearing in photoplays. She attended school in Chicago, where she was born, and went to Mary Sharpe College, Winston, Tenn., thence to the Wheatcroft Dramatic School.

MIRIAM NESBITT

In 1910 Miss Nesbitt joined the Edison Company. Two summers as the star of the Edison English players gave Miss Nesbitt an excellent opportunity to display her genius in "The Necklace of Ranteses," "Stanton's Last Fling," "A Daughter of Romany," "The Antique Brooch," "The Foreman's Treachery" and "The Coastguard's Sister."

David Horsley has installed a $5,000 linotype machine in the title department of the Centaur Film Company, at Bayonne, N. J.

This machine, said to be the first of its kind to be adapted to motion picture work, has four magazines and carries eight faces of type, ranging as high as forty-eight point.

In addition to the linotype machine is a complete job press.

Harry A. Samwick, president of the Exclusive Features, Inc., New York, preferring to be on this side looking over, than on the other side trying to get back, has abandoned his proposed trip to Europe. He was to sail this week on the "Aquitania," taking with him the negative of "New York Society Life and the Underworld," and other American features.

THE TRUTH ABOUT SCREENS

The "Mirror Screen" is made from the finest quality of white crystal plate glass. This insures a plane surface without bumps or clouds or uneven places. It insures a surface that is easy to focus on, on that account.

The back side of it is silvered with pure silver and is, in fact, a very highly reflecting mirror of the finest quality. As a mirror is the highest reflector in the world, naturally we can, with a "Mirror Screen," reflect more light than any other screen.

However, the mirror alone would not make the screen as the image of light of the moving picture would not become visible on a mirror and does not become visible upon the elements of any surface that has shine or polish on it. Therefore the face of the "Mirror Screen" is made dull and snow-white. The snow-white surface insures true color value in its reflection and the dullness insures that the light is all reflected by diffuse reflection.

The "Mirror Screen" is made in nine different finishes. For the long narrow house we give the screen a Satin Finish which concentrates the reflected light at a long narrow viewing angle giving a most wonderful high efficiency in reflection. For a wide house we prismize the surface so that it is distributed at wider angles.

But the principle thing—where the "Mirror Screen" stands alone—is the fact that on account of the mirror it has depth and perspective; and it is the only surface that gives the full benefit of the light and yet reflects light by diffuse reflection. A shiny, metallized surface reflects two lights. It reflects regular reflection and diffuse reflection and just as soon as you use very much light a haze and veil becomes evident, especially if the screen is very shiny.

On a white wall or on a "Mirror Screen," on account of these surfaces reflecting alone diffuse reflection, you can use all the light you desire. You can use 1,000 amperes and you will never have any haze, veil, out of focus or eye strain. It is a simple, natural law, the same as the law of gravitation.

Shine and polish are very hard upon the eyes. This is due to simple optical laws. So a metallized curtain is very hard upon the eyes, so much so that scientists and opticians are taking action. The Journal of the American Medical Association in the April number, said that the "Mirror Screen" is the only screen that is really and truly easy on the eyes because your picture is visible, there being plenty of illumination reflected; and, furthermore, because the light is all reflected by diffuse reflection, there being no shine or polish on the surface.

The "Mirror Screen" is easy to install because it is ready the moment the lid is taken off. When you consider the amount of trouble to put up a metallized curtain, the installation of the "Mirror Screen" is really easier. Furthermore, we assume the risk if necessary until the screen is placed on the stage and will send a man to do the work.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Within the Noose." (Lubin. Fri., July 31.)—A fairly entertaining Western drama of the girl, the cowboy, and the dad who objects to their marriage. But the extreme bravery of the cowboy in saving the daughter from a highwayman and in capturing some bank robbers, together with the persistent love of the girl under the greatest difficulties, makes even this obstinate dad relent.

"When the Cook Fell Ill." (Selig. Fri., July 31.)—The cook eats too much canned corn and falls ill with ptomaine poisoning. A bottle of whiskey cures the poisoning, but causes another trouble. Many amusing incidents are introduced in the vain efforts of friends to stop the poor cook's stomach ache until the doctor can arrive. The latter has to be towed into camp by a lasso.

"Private Bunny." (Vitagraph. Fri., July 31.)—The fascination of brass buttons penetrates Mr. Bunny's little village and takes his girl, Flora, away from him. A plan presents itself to this renowned gallant. He joins the army and returns a hero, i. e., you have his own words for it. But a corporal arrives at the inopportune moment and carries him off to prison, a deserter from the army.

"A Bit of Human Driftwood." (Biograph. Two reels. Thurs., July 30.)—One of those impossible sort of stories that we see only in motion pictures in which a worthless father becomes a famous surgeon, restores by a skilful operation a young singer's sight, falls in love with her, not knowing she is his daughter, discovers her poor mother's locket around her neck just in time to hurry home, turn on the gas and thus put himself out of this miserable existence.

"Snakeville's Home Guard." (Essanay. Thurs., July 30.)—Slippery Slim is made the "kernel" of the newly organized company of warriors. He loses his shoulderstraps for cowardice. Then a singular thing happens. He captures the enemy single-handed after they have pursued him through briars and rocks, and turns the tables on the rest of the company. Sophie then falls into his arms.

"The Greater Motive." (Vitagraph. Thurs., July 30.)—A sympathetic portrayal of the tender side of the prize ring. A young fellow has fought his way to the championship, forgetting his sweetheart in the first flush of victory. She marries another, who fights the champion to win a purse to give his sick wife an ocean voyage. The champion has heard inadvertently why the young man is fighting and allows him to win through kindness of heart. It makes a very moving story.

"Three Men and a Woman." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., July 30.)—Here the eternal triangle has become four-sided and this charming lady has the good fortune, before the play is over, to consider it ill fortune to be loved by three men. But the husband, after doubts and fears, retains her whole heart. Earl Metcalfe puts a little too much insolence and breeziness into John Temple, the "society swell"; he must have had better manners or he would not have been tolerated in the polite company, in which he appears as a dazzling light.

"Officer Kate." (Vitagraph. Wed., July 29.)—The pitiful story of what happens in a household when the mother joins the police force and leaves the father to wash the babies, feed them and send them off to school. Mrs. Kate Simpkins is a holy terror as a "policeman" and arrests everything in sight, but her career as a guardian of the law is brought to a sudden finish, when the husband engages a sweet-faced maid to do the housework.

"A Canine Rival." (Edison. Mon., July 27.)—One of the Wood B. Wedd series. William Wadsworth, Arthur Hausman and Gladys Hulette are the principals. Wood B. is given the care of the young lady's dog while she is away. It is lost and after a lot of trouble it is found. But the girl returns with another husband and once more Wood B. is left without a wife. The story is amusing.

"Farmer Rodney's Daughter." (Edison. Sat., Aug. 1.)—The old hut appealing story of the girl who marries against her father's wishes and is ostracized from the family. After many years the sight of his grandchild reconciles the old man. Bigelow Cooper, Mabel Trunnelle and Herbert Prior are the main characters.

"The Squatter's Gal." (Essanay. Sat., Aug. 1.)—This is a Broncho Billy play in which G. M. Anderson does not enact a cowboy part, but is the manager of a ranch. The squatter is forced off his property, but the squatter's daughter wins his heart, and we know that she will not be without a home for long.

"The Lad from Old Ireland." (Kalem. Sat., Aug. 1.)—This is the reissue of a picture released about four years ago. The Irish scenes were made in County Cork, the Kalem actors traveling six thousand miles in order that the setting might be in the old country. The manly lad who sets out from Ireland, comes to this country, makes his way, and then returns for the sweetheart that he left behind, will touch a tender spot in the hearts of all who have the least bit of Irish blood in their veins.

"The Violin of M'sieur." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 1.)—An admirably acted play, with Clara Kimball Young in the leading part, built around the ever beautiful theme of a father's search for his lost daughter. The picture will undoubtedly strike a responsive chord wherever it is shown on account of the simplicity and directness with which the pathetic plight of the loving father is presented.

"Love vs. Pride." (Selig. Sat., Aug. 1.)—An especially attractive picture to all who are fond of society dramas. It is at the same time a scathing rebuke of those marriages that are made for money without love. The unhappiness of the woman who deliberately chooses the wealthy man, much older than herself, in preference to the young man whom she really loved, is set against the happiness of the woman who follows the dictates of her heart and marries the discarded young but poor man.

"The Man Who Paid." (Biograph. Sat., Aug. 1.)—A disagreeable theme is made the framework of a convincing play through the clever work of the principals and the care with which the production is presented. Every detail of setting and of acting is carefully correct, and the structure of the play allows no superfluous scenes.

"She Gave Him a Rose." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 1.)—He is a lovesick swain who is in the habit of serenading by night, she is a dainty little maiden who is about as badly smitten as he is. A burglar climbs the balcony and receives the rose that was intended for the troubadour. But the latter recovers his dear property when the burglar is arrested, and presses it to his lips as the picture ends, which is so much better then the monotonous way of pressing the girl's lips to his own. Shown with "The Rise of the Johnsons."

"The Rise of the Johnsons." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 1.)—The same reel that gave us the serenading lover, now flashes forth those inimitable darkey comedians, John and Matty Edwards. Playing dead saves them from the duns of landlord and grocer, but this is not all of their good luck. Bob Johnson brings home the bacon from a crap game because he was sharp enough to elude the police when the place was raided. Then he and his wife splurge with the gains.

"The New York Police Department Carnival." (Edison. Tues., Aug. 1.)—New York's army of policemen makes a splendid showing in this picture of drills and games recently held at Brighton Beach. Besides races and field events, there were exhibitions of rescue work, handling of obstreperous prisoners, and daring stops by mounted police of runaway horses.

"Etienne of the Glad Heart." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 3.)—A tense drama of the great North, where personal force is the only law known and obeyed. The story concerns a beautiful girl who has been led astray by a stranger, and tells how she is rescued from his cruelty by her faithful sweetheart, Etienne, to whom she had been engaged.

"Detective and Matchmaker." (Vitagraph. Mon., Aug. 3.)—The horsesense of this detective and matchmaker is really phenomenal, for he is only a beautiful bay horse. But he helps in the capture of a robber, and saves his master from a hazardous marriage with an adventuress, and points the way to a proper match.

"Her Trip to New York." (Essanay. Tues., Aug. 4.)—A young bride makes herself sick thinking about the trip that she was going to make to New York on her honeymoon, but her husband forgets all about it in his absorption in business. The physician reveals to him what is ailing his young wife, and he promises her to provide the cure.

"Warfare in the Skies." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 4.)—Aeroplanes as vehicles of war have been talked about but have had little opportunity to prove their value. In this picture there is really fighting in the air and dropping of bombs upon the enemy's fortifications, all of which make stirring business. At the crucial moment, the hero drops a bomb upon the squad of soldiers that are taking aim to shoot the heroine as a spy.

"The Ordeal." (Selig. Tues., Aug. 4.)—A young surgeon redeems himself from the stain of cowardice by manfully concluding an operation with the flames almost engulfing him. His sweetheart, a nurse, stands by and helps him. His former sweetheart realizes his worth from his act, although she has broken her engagement to him because he did not rescue a child from drowning. Franklyn Hall is the surgeon, Hazel Henderson the former sweetheart, and Miss Greeson the nurse.

"The Fatal Card." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 4.)—Just imagine what happens when a respectable judge gets swamped in a poker game and promises his savior that all he has to do is to present the Jack of Spades and he will do anything for him. A lot of Jacks turn up, that is what happens, and the Judge is almost ruined keeping his word. On the same reel with "He Woke Up in Time."

"He Woke Up in Time." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 4.)—Turning from "The Fatal Card," the same reel flashes a picture of a dream that comes to a tramp as he lies sleeping on a park bench. He dreams that he finds a treasure chest, pours money into the hands of everyone he meets, gets mixed up in a duel with a duke, and wakes up to find that the thrusts of his opponent are the punches of the cop's billy.

"A Tango Spree." (Edison. Mon., Aug. 3. The new dances get hold of an entire family except father and they have a merry time of it. The sight of his wife dancing the tango and the maxixe is too much for the old man and he has to join in, too.

"The Meal Ticket." (Biograph. Mon., Aug. 3.)—A girl is the meal ticket of a family, which includes a trifling father and brother. Her slender wages as a chorus girl are greedily consumed by these two. But when she falls sick, brother goes to work and then the father, so that she may be reconciled to her lover, whom they have driven off.

"Picturesque Gagry." (Pathé. Split reel. Mon., Aug. 3.)—On the same reel with "The Russian Zoo." The ruins of this southern Russian town are very imposing, and together with the customs and military tactics of the soldiers make an interesting half-reel.

"The Russian Zoo." (Pathé. Split reel. Mon., Aug. 3.)—On the same reel with "Picturesque Gagry." Situated in Oskania-Nova this zoo, which contains almost every animal and bird that exists, is a worthy subject for a picture. An interesting spectacle shows camels drawing plows.

"Training Army Dogn." (Pathé. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 4.)—On the same reel with "A Basque Wedding." This half-reel is similar to an earlier release by the same company. It shows the methods the Swedes use in training airedale terriers for use in the army.

"A Basque Wedding." (Pathé. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 4.)—Rather an uninteresting topic, especially when it follows "Training Army Dogs." This town is situated on the Bay of Biscay, and all the events are shown that occur before and after a wedding of the natives.

"Get Out and Get Under." (Eclectic. One reel. Mon., Aug. 10.)—The amusing consequences that come from a forgotten railroad ticket. Wife forgets the ticket, and the result is that she catches husband taking the stenographer for a little spin in the automobile. But when she gets through with him, it is practically certain that he will not try such stunts anymore.

"When War Threatens." (George Kleine. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 4.)—Plenty of good strong scenes help unwind this story of love and warfare. The foreign spy who has the inside track to the hand of the admiral's daughter is finally frustrated by the lieutenant's good friend, who succeeds in disciphering a code telegram and otherwise lays plans which are the undoing of the villain. An interesting thread of love twines through the warfare activities.

"The Chief of Police." (Kalem. Tues., Aug. 4.)—How it sometimes happens that an innocent man may be sent to prison, and by that fact, his life almost ruined, is shown in this picture. It will make a special appeal, aside from the human story, to all who are interested in sociological problems.

"Don't Monkey With the Buzz Saw." (Kalem. Fri., Aug. 7.)—A delightful Marshal Nielan-Ruth Roland comedy, somewhat on the rich, rare and racy variety. The husband, dominated by the wife and the mother-in-law, invokes the aid of a professor of hypnotism and goes off to have his fling of fun while the women folks soundly slumber. But they catch him in the end, and take him home by the ear and the hair.

"Grey Eagle's Revenge." (Kalem. Sat., Aug. 8.)—The white man's treatment of the Indian has not always been just what it should be, and it is good to see a picture, not of fighting with the redskin, but of kindness and conciliation. Sentiment is introduced in the Chaplain's love for the Indian maid.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"A Race for Life." (Sterling. Mon., Aug. 3.)—A burlesque on the average railroad drama, with the heroine tied to the track, the engine approaching with the villain, and the auto racing by its side containing the hero. Of course, the latter wins. The Sterling Kids appear in this comedy. The engine and the car are miniature also, which adds to the humorous effect.

"Universal Ike, Jr.'s Legacy." (Universal Ike. Tues., Aug. 4.)—Ike and his sweetheart, with her enraged parents and the sheriff stop at a city hotel, after the two runaways have been captured. The events that occur in the night are humorous enough to cause this reel to rank with the better comedies.

"The Price Paid." (Eclair-Universal. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 12.)—Those who enjoy an exceptionally sad story told on the screen will most certainly appreciate this picture. It is tragic from beginning to end. Brown, the commissioner of waterworks, comes under the corrupt influence of a group of politicians and allows a crooked deal to go through. Ever after the water of the city is impure. As a result, Brown's daughter has an attack of typhoid fever and is blind for life. The daughter of the political boss dies. Bob Frazer, Hal Wilson, Robert Myles and Lucy K. Ville play the leads.

"A Dramatic Mistake." (Sterling. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—Ford Sterling at his best. Here he appears as Kismet Smears, a great tragedian. He gets a job and starts to rehearse his part in the tragedy on his wife, which leads to a general mix-up between the police and the members of the household. A chase and a hose fight end the picture. A laugh in every foot.

"When the Heart Calls." (Imp. Two reels. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—An old story, but even so it will catch the public. Disowned by his father because he married a chorus girl, Billy, after hard work, becomes a successful farmer. The sight of his two grandchildren bring about the timely reconciliation of the old man. Beautiful scenes. William Shay, Violet Mersereau, William Carleton and Mrs. Allen Walker play the leads.

"Moonlight." (Eclair. Sun., Aug. 9.)—Stanley Walpole, Belle Adair, Alec Francis and Helen Marten are the principals. A pretty drama, which although it does not ring true will make an impression for its beauty alone. A young man studying for the priesthood finds love too strong to resist. His father, intent on beating him, remembers his own romantic marriage.

"For Love or Money." (Nestor. Fri., Aug. 14.)—Four flirts decide that the first one to get a kiss from the girl they cannot flirt with is entitled to a pool of $100. It so happens that although all four give kisses, the one that has not tried it is the only one to receive one in return. Victoria Forde et al directed by Al Christie.

"Her Twin Brother." (Joker. Wed., Aug. 12.)—Ernest Shields, who played the butler in the "Lucille Love" series, appears in this comedy. If one can judge from this picture he is just as good a comedian as he is a character actor. Bess Meredyth plays the other lead. Bess goes to the seashore disguised as a man; she falls in love with a real man, returns home and comes back this time as a girl. The romance ends happily. This picture is one continual laugh.

"A 38-Calber Friendship." (Nestor, Wed., Aug. 12.)—An appealing story of two friends. One has cause to doubt the sincerity of the other, but his suspicions prove to be unfounded. The action takes place in the West. All will enjoy the picture.

"On Rugged Shores." (Nestor. Fri., Aug. 14.)—Eddie Lyons and Victoria Forde and Lee Moran play the leads. Not a comedy but a drama. The honest son is thought to have been smuggling, but it turns out that it was his brother. The scenes were appropriately taken near the sea.

"A Frontier Romance." (Frontier. Sun., Aug. 9.)—An unusual drama played by Arthur Allardt, Dolly Larkin and Joe Franz. Arthur is a motion picture actor and loves the leading lady. She, however, is married, but has been deserted by her husband, who has turned highwayman. Later he reforms and returns to her. There is a clever but unnecessary scene in which Arthur is acting as a robber for the camera and is mistaken for Joe.

"The Barnstormers." (Powers. Fri., Aug. 14.)—Rather a disconnected comedy-drama with Edna Maison and Ray Gallagher in the leading parts. The stranded theatrical troupe try in various ways to raise money, but even when the picture is over they have accomplished nothing. In places the picture is exceedingly humorous.

"The Midnight Visitor." (Rex. Sun., Aug. 9.)—A very cleverly acted drama which contains much realism. It is totally different from the usual run. Rupert Julian is featured. A husband goes to the club against his sick wife's wishes. Apparently he returns home and finds that a burglar has been to the house and killed his wife. He awakens from his dream at the club and returning home in reality finds the midnight visitor is a baby.

"What Happened to Shultz." (Joker. Sat., Aug. 15.)—An unusual and high-class offering. Played by Max Asher, Louise Fazenda and Bob Vernon. Hubby is drunk every evening. His wife's brother devises a plan to cure him. He removes the glass in the mirror, dresses himself up as his brother-in-law, and when the latter comes in drunk and looks in the mirror he imitates him for a while and then performs other grotesque antics. Max thinks he is dreadfully ill and promises never to drink again. All will enjoy this very clever comedy.

"The Coastguard's Bride." (Victor. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 7.)—An average drama with Irene Wallace and Walter Miller playing the leads. The loneliness of her husband's station becomes unbearable to the bride of the coastguard, and she leaves him. At the nearest town she unknowingly enters a place of ill repute, but is rescued by her husband, who had followed her. A hermit is introduced in several scenes; his presence is unnecessary. The photography is poor in a few places.

"Simple Faith." (Victor. Mon., Aug. 10.)—Jack Byrne is responsible for the scenario of this pretty and absorbing drama which is ably enacted by Irene Wallace, Albert Hutchinson and Walter Miller. The scene of the action is a coast town and all the principals are fishermen. The unsuccessful suitor tries to ruin the love affair of his rival but finally relents and saves the other's life.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Widow." (American. Wed., Aug. 5.)—Winnifred Greenwood and Ed Coxen are the principals. The widow finds solace in philanthropic work, thus helping the minister. This drama contains little action and will be appreciated more by the serious-minded.

"All on Account of a Jug." (American. Fri., July 31.)—A fair comedy with George Field and Ida Lewis in the leading parts. Henpecked Heine revolts and is thought to have committed suicide. But after a long search by the whole town he is found in a boat, very much in wine. He receives a severe beating from his wife, and goes back to work.

"Izzy and His Rival." (Reliance. Wed., Aug. 5.)—Izzy attempts to procure a sum of money and also win his girl by placing a dummy in the road where automobilists will run over it, then substituting himself and claiming damages. It works once, but his rival discovers the trick and he is arrested. Max Davidson and W. A. Lawrence are the only characters of importance.

"Bill Takes a Lady to Lunch." (Komic. Sun., Aug. 2.)—This, the third of the "Bill" series is every bit as good as its predecessors. Bill loses his heart to the stenographer next door, and takes her to lunch, but before he is through much occurs that disturbs him and sets the audience laughing heartily. Tammany Young continues as Bill, the main character.

"The Butterfly Bug." (Thanhouser. Sun., Aug. 2.)—Professor Notty attempts to sort out his bugs and flowers, but his house is so noisy. and he is bothered so persistently by a small boy using a mirror and the sun as his aid, that he is unsuccessful. This is an inferior comedy, but the principals, Harry Blakemore, Fan Bourke and Leland Benham do well.

"Ringing the Changes." (Royal. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 8.)—On the same reel with "Miss Gladeyeslip's Vacation." This comedy is of foreign make and not as good as the American made Royals. Jack gets into a lot of trouble due to Algie impersonating his aunt.

"Miss Gladeyeslip's Vacation." (Royal. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 8.)—On the same reel with "Ringing the Changes." Gladys has all the men in town crazy over her, which is about all this comedy amounts to.

"The Target of Destiny." (Princess. Fri., July 31.)—The rich young man's parents are adverse to his marriage to a country girl until she proves her worth by saving their little child at the risk of her own life, by rushing on the target range where the child has strayed, and protecting her. A pretty drama with Muriel Ostriche and Boyd Marshal and a good company.

"Those Happy Days." (Keystone. Thurs., July 23.)—A sidesplitting slapstick picture with Roscoe Arbuckle playing the leads. This time he is the victim of a rival's tale-telling. The police force are prominent and many of the laughs are produced by their actions in the water.

"Soldiers of Misfortune." (Keystone. Mon., July 27.)—Two soldiers are rivals in love. One puts a piece of strong cheese in the other's pocket, which results in everybody leaving him. He discovers the fiendish trick and a duel results. Both the participants are killed by cannon balls in the finale.

"The Great Toe Mystery." (Keystone. Sat., July 25.)—A reel full of laughs portraying the experiences of a flirtatious shoe clerk. The dumbwaiter is used to humorous advantage and the usual burlesque police force is introduced.

"Laughing Gas." (Keystone. Tues., July 9.)—Charles Chaplian appears as a dentist's assistant in this comedy. Whenever he appears one can expect excellent slapstick work, and in this he excels. Besides getting into a fight with two of his masters' patients and getting generally in the way he doesn't do anything except create roars of laughter.

"Mabel's New Job." (Keystone. Thurs., July 16.)—Mabel Normand, as a servant girl, forsakes her old love and becomes enamoured of the new boarder, which leads to all sorts of complications ending with a sidesplitting mixup in which the harbor police are prominent.

"A Sky Pirate." (Keystone. Sat., July 18.)—One of the best of the recent comedies with Roscoe Arbuckle playing the charming heiress. Part of the action takes place in an aeroplane supposed to be high in the air. In the end both the heiress and the villain fall from the air craft. A laugh throughout.

"A Fatal Sweet Tooth." (Keystone. Mon., July 20.)—Most of the laughs furnished by this reel come from the antics of three bears, who often appear in Mutual comedies. They chase all the town up trees, into the water, etc. No coherent story is present, but the comedy is a fine entertainer.

"The Stigma." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 15.)—The neglected doctor's wife runs away with the matinee idol. Years later both parties meet in Alaska. The actor is frozen to death in a severe storm. The doctor forgives his wife and the two are reunited. A few inconsistencies of time and place appear, but as a whole the offering will be well received.

"A Bahamian Pineapple." (Princess. Split reel. Fri., July 24.)—On the same reel with "Harvesting Ice." The various processes which the pineapple goes through from the field until it is canned are shown in this reel. It is exceptionally interesting, well photographed, and makes a fine educational.

"Harvesting Ice." (Princess. Split reel. Fri., July 24.)—On the same reel with "A Bahamian Pineapple." This subject is not a familiar one to those residing in the city and will be appreciated by them. Some picturesque views as well as the industrials have been obtained.

"In Peril's Path." (Thanhouser. Fri., Aug. 14.)—A pretty drama that will please any audience based on the saying "Return good for evil." The young son of the widowed postmistress saves her successor from death, while the latter is intoxicated. The man realizes his utter worthlessness and refuses the office.

"The Idiot." (Majestic. Tues., Aug. 4.)—An exceptionally clever character portrayal by Robert Harron. He impersonates the idiot of a farmer's family and arouses immediate sympathy by his actions. In the finale he rescues his mother from a fire. He returns to the house to rescue his pet bird and succeeds, but dies from the burns suffered because of his heroism.

"The Telltale Scar." (Thanhouser. Sun., Aug. 9.)—Pietro, a barber, is the means of apprehending and capturing a notorious criminal. A hot scrimmage occurs. The picture is simple yet exceptionally absorbing.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 29." (Reliance. Mon., Aug. 3.)—The feature of this reel is Margaret flying in the great airship "America," after she has been introduced to Lieutenant Porte, who is to make a voyage across the Atlantic in it and Glenn H. Curtis, the builder. Previous to this she visited the Rubinstein Club, in session at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, New York.

"A Suspended Ceremony." (Beauty. Tues., Aug. 4.)—Rather a colorless comedy with Margarita Fischer, Harry Pollard, Joseph Harris and Kathie Fischer in the principal parts. Father's choice is unsuccessful, due to the pranks of Trixie's little brother. The favored one meets with no better success, as while the marriage ceremony is being held in a sailboat the craft upsets.

"Animated Weekly, No. 125." (Universal. Wed., July 29.)—A picture of George Meehan, winner of the swimming contest from the Battery to Sandy Hook, N. Y., is timely. The parade of the Elks in Denver is a pretty sight. A picture of the victorious Harvard crew at Henly and a fatal auto-polo accident at Portland, Ore., finish the news. Hy Mayer's cartoons are better than ever. All the events are clearly photographed.

"Pathé's Weekly, No. 48." (Pathé. Mon., Aug. 10.)—Always on the alert to get pictures of the latest happenings in the world, Pathé's Weekly foresees the war clouds gathering over Europe, and sends its cameras out to snap the principal figures in the great struggle. The venerable Emperor of Austria-Hungary, Franz Joseph, is the first monarch photographed; then we have King Peter of Servia and the Crown Prince, Alexander; then the Czar reviewing his troops; King George V; President Poincare, and finally the commanding person, Emperor Wilhelm II.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 46." (Selig. Mon., Aug. 3.)—Dictator Huerta occupies the central place in this week's issue. We see him and his family embarking on the steamship "Dresden" for their flight from Mexico. These are the first motion pictures that have ever been taken of the dictator. There are pictures, also, of the New Jersey militia maneuvres, the unveiling of the statue of Abraham Lincoln in Christiania, Norway, and the daring swim of Henry Elionsky across Hell Gate, with his hands and feet handcuffed.

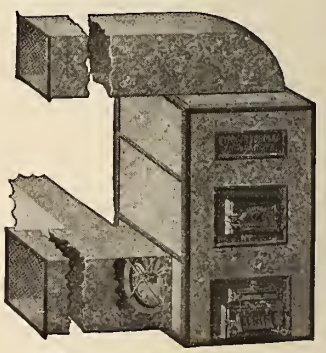
COOLING—VENTILATION—HEATING

"TYPHOON BLOW-IN SYSTEM" HAS REVOLUTIONIZED THE VENTILATING PROBLEM

All International Motion picture Expositions were cooled by Typhoons. Typhoons made it possible to hold Expositions in June or July, and the Expositions made the Typhoons famous.

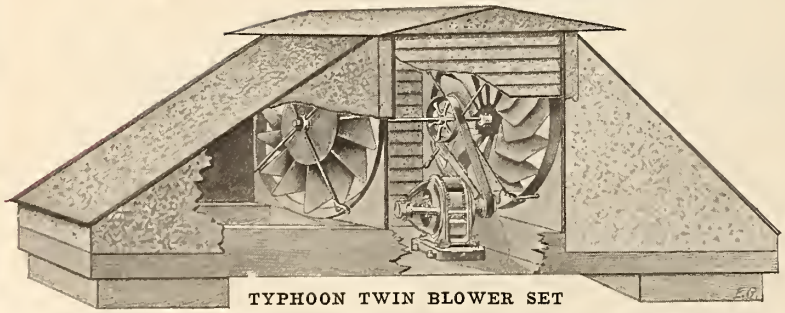
TYPHOON MULTIBLADE BLOWERS
"Patented"
Made in sizes from 12 inches to 12 feet



You keep cool in front of a desk fan, not in back; apply this common sense and blow the air into your theatre.

A 48-inch Typhoon Multiblade Blower has sixteen blades, an ordinary exhaust fan has six; it is the blades that do the business.

Blowing directly against ordinary exhaust fans, the typhoon Blowers will force air right through them.

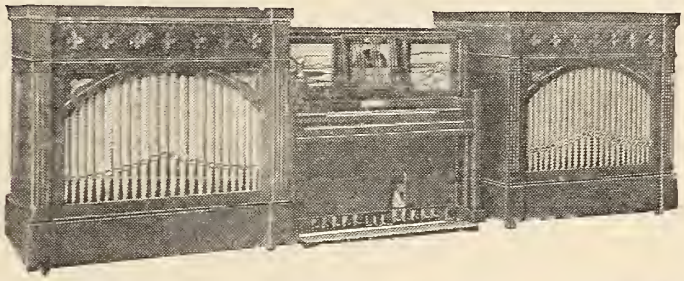


Typhoon Blowers can be reversed and exhaust the air as well.

The low price of effective apparatus will surprise you. Catalogue "N" gives information.

TYPHOON TUBULAR AIR WARMER

The air is heated directly by being blown through the air warmer.
No boiler sections to crack.
No pipes to freeze and burst.
No air valves to adjust.
No leaky steam pipes.
No experience to operate.



TYPHOON TWIN BLOWER SET

Arranged with galvanized iron casing to blow air down from the roof. The motor can be reversed by switch and the air exhausted if desired.

Types of Up-to-Date Lobby Display

Text and Title Made as Important as Photographs in the Posters Put Out by Warner's Features, Inc.

AN enterprising exhibitor who takes note of the smaller details, recently made a few remarks about lobby displays.

"I have the feeling," he said, "that most lobby displays lack one thing—and that is a good strong showing of the name and character of the film. They consist, as a rule, of a set of striking scenes, with the feature title very much subordinated.

"Unquestionably, these pictures are good advertising; but very often I have had people, after looking at them, go to the box-office and ask the name of the play and what it was about. Scenes are not always self-explanatory.

"No good showman would think for a minute of putting out big lithos that did not have the title in very conspicuous letters. He does not depend on the pictures alone. But the tendency in lobby displays is to depend on nothing but pictures.

"I consider it advisable to supplement the photos I receive for the lobby with a strong lettered card, giving the titles and a few words as to the character of the play."

As an indication of how this exhibitor's ideas can be incorporated in lobby displays, two recent photo-gelatines put out by Warner's Features, Inc., may be cited as examples.

The Warner's lobby display consists of six handsome photo-gelatine cards, varying in size from 11x14 inches, to 22x28 inches.

The Marion Leonard card, showing the star in gypsy costume as she appears in the film, was noted recently in the lobby of the New York Theatre on Broadway, during a run at that house of "The Romany Rye."

A TYPICAL WARNER LOBBY POSTER

The card featuring "The Medicine Bag," another typical Warner's re-release, was also displayed at the New York Theatre, where this interesting Western film was exhibited.

ESTHA WILLIAMS IN ORIGINAL ROLE

When the Select Photo Play Producing Company arranged with Arthur C. Aiston for "At the Old Cross Roads" it was specially stipulated in the contract that Estha Williams should be seen in the role of Parepa, which she created and played with such success during eight of the fourteen seasons' tours.

ESTHA WILLIAMS

Gaining her first stage experience when a girl in the California Theatre, San Francisco Stock Company, she was brought East by Edward Harrigan, going from his company to play ingenue leads with Maude Granger and Jeffreys Lewis.

She was then seen in "Tennessee's Pardner" in which she made one of her biggest hits.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF WARNER DISPLAY

Drama That Thrills With War Spirit

"With Serb and Austrian," Based on Current Events, Represents Prominent European Characters Now in the Public Eye

"WITH Serb and Austrian" is the timely title of the four-reel production now ready for shipment by the Austro-Servian Feature Company, of 220 West Forty-second street, New York.

Ralph Stuart is Prince Rudolph, son of Emperor Franz Joseph, of Austria-Hungary, and Clara Joel, now leading woman in one of the road productions of "Within the Law," is in the part of Princess Vera, daughter of King Peter, of Servia, adding to the histrionic value of the photoplay.

The story deals with the diplomatic strategy of the past few weeks when Austrian relations with Servia had come to the breaking point. Count Berchtold, the power behind the throne of Austria, is one of the principal characters. Emperor Franz Joseph also plays an important part.

The story treats of Prince Rudolph's offer to enter the Servian capital, Belgrade, and to undertake the perilous mission of stealing the plans to the Servian fortifications.

The Prince rescues an unknown girl in a runaway accident whom he does not know is Princess Vera. He falls in love with her, and absorbed in his passion, forgets his mission.

Fuming at the delay which gives the hostile powers time to mobilize, Berchtold sends a courier to stir the laggard to his work. The Prince dexterously managing to steal the plans, makes a copy which he gives to the courier.

The Prince replaces the original and is later astounded to find the courier in his apartments, breathless from the struggle with the Servian guards who had stopped him at the frontier. The courier returns to him the copied plans.

The Prince, stealing around the royal palace of King Peter with hopes of meeting the lady who has previously been introduced by the Servian Minister of War as a lady-in-waiting to the Princess Vera, is attacked by two spies who had been dogging him. He worsts them in a snappy fight.

THE Servian minister, feeling intuitively that the Prince, who had come to him with forged credentials as an envoy from Russia, is a spy, is reduced to desperation. Knowing of the infatuation of the stranger for the Princess, he takes her to the stranger to play upon his sympathies. The Princess discloses her true identity and tells him that hers is the heart and hand that leads to the land of his own romance. The Prince silently burns the copied plans.

SPECIAL MUSIC FOR "THE NIGHTINGALE"

One of the most prominent features in the line of advertising matter to be supplied for the coming All Star Feature Corporation's production, "The Nightingale," in which the incomparable Ethel Barrymore makes her début in motion pictures, is the musical score which has been compiled for accompaniment of the picture by Manuel Klein, the musical director and leader of the New York Hippodrome, whose music for all All Star productions are now becoming so well known.

The music is supplied by the All Star Feature Corporation to its distributors, and exhibitors presenting "The Nightingale" will do well to see that this most valuable adjunct to the success of the Ethel Barrymore picture is supplied by them.

Will S. Davis, late director of the Ramo Film Company, has resigned to accept the position of head director with the Life Photo Film Corporation. Mr. Davis, while with the Ramo company, wrote all the scenarios of the productions produced by him.

Mr. Davis is a graduate of Harvard University and has been directing feature photo plays for the past five years. He is bringing with him O. A. Miller, formerly head property man of the Ramo company, who will act in the same capacity with the Life Photo Company.

MANAGEMENT CONSOLIDATES

Charleston, Miss., Aug. 4.

C. R. Cooper, manager of the Harlequin Theatre and Messrs. Chapman and Prigmore, managers of the Idle Hour, have reached an agreement whereby the two shows will be consolidated and will be operated in the future as the Idle Hour Theatre.

The large tent under which the Harlequin has been showing will be devoted to the colored patronage, a large element in this community, exclusively. E. R. Prigmore will be the manager of both houses.

Short Photoplays Favorites in Ontario

Manager Declares There Is a Tendency to Drag in Many Long Films—All Small Towns in the Province Have Theatres

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 6.

THE opinion of all the motion-picture theatre managers here is that although the heat and the hard times have affected the summer attendance at the shows, yet better times are expected in the near future and this fall will see the shows drawing the same audiences as they were wont before the summer came and the pinch of money was evident.

Hamilton, Ont., is a city with a population of over 100,000 and though this city has many motion-picture shows, the majority are smaller perhaps than in a city of the same size in the United States. The ruling price of admission in all the Hamilton theatres is five cents at the matinee and ten cents at the evening performances. Box seats, of course, cost more, and in some theatres when a feature, such as "The Adventures of Kathlyn," is run then the price is changed accordingly.

There are no Sunday shows in Ontario, a thing for which all the motion-picture managers are very thankful, as it closes competition and gives their employees a holiday once a week. The small photoplay is popular in the small towns, and especially in the country theatres.

Practically every country town in this province has its motion-picture show, and as the returns are modest, the less expensive films are in great demand. It is the same with the smaller theatres in the cities and especially in Hamilton.

It has been said by some in the larger cities that the "two-reel play is dead." This is not the case in Canada, for the demand for two-reel plays in the above-mentioned theatres is as great as it ever was. Managers claim here that after the shorter photoplays the audience tires if a long six-reel photoplay is given.

"I do not know of any six-reel photoplay which could not be put in four reels, or any four which could not be put in three," stated a well-known local motion-picture man. He says that the tendency to drag in the long films renders them less attractive to the people here, who have been accustomed to short, three-reel, live photoplays.

Most of the picture houses in Hamilton show three-reel photoplays at an entertainment, or often a four-reel photoplay with a three-reel and a two-reel photoplay following it. The Savoy Theatre, Merrick Street, has taken a departure in showing the "Adventures of Kathlyn," an undertaking which has never been done by another theatre here as yet. This progressive theatre is following this feature with "The Million Dollar Mystery." It draws large audiences.

E. D. H. BOYD.

The first production of the United Keanograph Film Company, of Fairfax, Cal., is entitled "Money," in six reels.

ANIMATED SONGS
Just a Minute!
You are, of course, aware that the Motion Picture Industry has been "Standardized" in a large sense and you have no doubt wished that you could add an element of attraction that would bring patrons past competitors' houses to your own. "ANIMATED SONGS" gives you precisely this opportunity. The SINGING in conjunction with the ACTION brings about effects that so far have been impossible. Imperial Singing Pictures will not alone create a new class of patrons, but will also stimulate a regular attendance. People will pass competitive houses to come to yours because "ANIMATED SONGS" makes your show better than your competitors. "ANIMATED SONGS" grips an audience, appealing as nothing else can to their artistic and dramatic instincts.

Twenty "Cabiria" Companies Will Tour

Plans Under Way for Showing the Spectacle in the Best "Legitimate" Houses Throughout the Country—Holds Box Office Record

"CABIRIA" was produced at an expense greater than any five other film productions combined, it is said, and over one year was expended in making the production ready for the market.

The world's largest and finest theatres threw open their doors to "Cabiria," and the public flocked to view its wonders at prices no lower than those charged for high-class theatrical attractions.

"Cabiria" is the only film spectacle ever shown at the White House to the President of the United States, members of the President's Cabinet and their wives. This occurred on Friday, June 26, under the personal direction of Augustus Thomas, a friend of both the President and Harry R. Raver, who is directing the American tour of the spectacle.

Manuel Klein, the famous New York Hippodrome composer, arranged special piano music for the film and personally went to Washington for Mr. Raver to play the incidental music.

"Cabiria" holds the world's record for box office receipts for one week over all other single film productions shown without other attractions on the same program. This was established at the Knickerbocker Theatre during the week of June 8, when over 21,000 persons paid from twenty-five cents to two dollars each to see the exhibition.

Billboards and illuminated signs give "Cabiria" a representation on Broadway at least as big as any speaking show. This holds true in other big cities. While Broadway is lit up with "Cabiria" electric signs, lavish billing tells of the pictures in Atlantic City, Cleveland, Chicago, Salt Lake City and San Francisco.

"Cabiria" is playing in the highest class legitimate theatres of the country. It is being presented in the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York, always the home of such stars as John Drew, Maude Adams, Ethel Barrymore and Mme. Nazimova; at the Illinois in Chicago, at the Utah in Salt Lake City, at the Hippodrome in Cleveland, and at the Gayety in San Francisco. This fall, twenty companies will tour the country from end to end, accompanied everywhere by the big orchestra.

Motiograph Has Many Good Points

The Motiograph Apparatus Combines Improvements Which Make a Strong Appeal to Exhibitors—Has Automatic Fire Shutter and Shows a Steady Picture

A. C. ROEBUCK, of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, Chicago, who eight years ago built a motion picture machine and called it the Motiograph, has carefully watched the demands of the exhibitor from year to year.

Every part of the Motiograph has been built in its own factory for years past, and has been giving thorough satisfaction, because each part is made by an experienced mechanic, and the best machinery obtainable for that purpose.

The Motiograph lamp house has been enlarged. The arc lamp has been slightly changed, so that the operator with all the different movements obtainable, can set his arc at any angle that he may wish, and by so doing can increase the efficiency in light.

The Motiograph is equipped with a motor attachment, including speed control, which is placed in a handy position on the machine for the operator, and with the motor-driven attachment, will make it easier for the operator to give his time and attention more to his arc lamp and to his picture.

The vital part of the mechanism which is susceptible to wear and which has to be turned out to one ten thousandth of an inch is made of high-grade tool steel, hardened and ground by one of the company's later improved grinders, to insure accuracy.

The most important points about the 1914 model of interest to exhibitors are as follows:

Brilliant pictures, clear, sharp and flickerless; a steady picture; safety film magazine; automatic fire proof shutter; enclosed Geneva movement; Geneva star and cam; intermittent sprockets of solid steel; extra large arc lamp; a very large lamphouse; easy access to all working parts; durability; it is built entirely of metal; is absolutely fire proof; and is guaranteed for one year.

"THE OATH OF A VIKING"

(Picture Playhouse Film—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THIS is the first release of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, and it marks an auspicious beginning for the new concern. If the same standard of all-round excellence in acting, in appropriateness of setting, and in photography is maintained in forthcoming releases the company will deserve an enviable reputation for artistic productions.

The story of the picture takes us back to the time when "might made right," a time when the struggle for existence was harder than it is now, and only bold, hardy men and strong-hearted, strong-bodied women could survive. The robust, wholesome atmosphere in which the Vikings lived and dared and loved is caught, and something of the spirit of those times reaches the viewer as this costume drama is unfolded before his eyes.

Much of this effect is undoubtedly produced by the appreciative and understanding acting of the principals, James Gordon as the Viking, Betty Harte as his flaxen-haired, blue-eyed daughter, Frank Sidwell as Nordo, her lover, and E. A. Turner as Olas, his rival from the north. More perhaps is due to the wild and rugged scenery in which these events are enacted. The picture was taken in Bermuda, but the lofty crags, the caves in which the sea can almost be heard rumbling and roaring, give just the right impression of the rocky Norwegian coast, with its countless fiords against which the ocean tosses and beats and foams in never-ending fury. Furthermore, the costumes and the properties have been chosen with great care and no historical errors are to be marked. The winged helmets of the Vikings are in keeping with their roving nature, and when the bearded warriors quaff the flowing mead from bronze flagons, truly it seems that one is carried back a thousand years, such is the historical realism of the drama.

NEW KENTUCKY THEATRES FLOURISH

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Louisville, Ky., August 5.

THE new Princess Theatre, at Bowling Green, Ky., opened Saturday with bright prospects. A good bill of features and comedy films was on the initial program, and capacity audiences were attracted at the admission of ten cents and five cents for children. The theatre is one of the most up-to-date in the state, with an unusually artistic interior. The main floor will be exclusively for white persons, the balcony being reserved for negro patrons.

The Parkland Theatre, which recently opened in this city, is showing to capacity daily. This picture house, located in an exclusive residence section of the city, is booking only high-class feature films, "Sophie of the Films" and "Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery," among them.

GRANTS ONLY FIVE LICENSES

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Wheeling, W. Va., Aug. 6.

FIRE Chief Edward T. Rose has granted but five local motion-picture houses permits to secure city licenses. This means that not all have complied with the requirements of the fire and building ordinances, and that the chief will demand that all play houses be properly equipped for the safety of the public.

The theatres which have so far secured licenses are the Court, Virginia, Colonial, Garden Theatre and A. P. Brinkmeier's place on the South Side. The requirements of the city orninances on theatres are very rigid and must be met to the letter.

It is believed that within a few weeks the fire chief will approve all applications and that the proper licenses will be issued.

WILL EXPLOIT FEATURES FOR STATE RIGHT BUYERS

While others have offered complaints of poor business during the hot weather, W. A. Baier and O. H. Jacobs, Milwaukee feature exchange men, have been quietly building up a big feature business throughout Wisconsin.

The concern has now taken the name of the Film Booking Office, with a generous suite of offices covering a large part of the third floor of the Manhattan Building, Milwaukee. Included in this is a large projection room for showing the latest feature pictures. These men control the state rights on "Victory," the six-reel war picture, for Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, and several three and four-reel features for Wisconsin territory alone.

In addition to handling these, it will be the object of the Film Booking Office to exploit features in their territory for purchasers of state rights, who are not acquainted with that field. They have already made arrangements with three Chicago concerns for handling their features in this way, and expect to add many others before the fall season opens.

BALSHOFER WANTS TWO COMEDIANS

Fred Balshofer, manager of the Sterling Comedy Company, releasing through the Universal program, has just completed a flying visit to New York and the home offices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. He traveled alone, and while the desire for a short respite from his arduous duties was the principal motive which brought him on, he accomplished some important business while in town, and made some instructive investigations.

He left for the Pacific Coast July 28, with the promise of many new and surprising things to come in the way of Sterling comedies. Recently he acquired Gordon Griffith, considered one of the ablest and cleverest "kid" comedians in the business.

On leaving, Mr. Balshofer expressed himself as desirous of hearing from two comedians, male and female; if they have the goods to deliver, he says he has an attractive proposition to offer them. All communications will be held confidential, and should be addressed to him personally at his West Coast studio, Hollywood, Los Angeles.

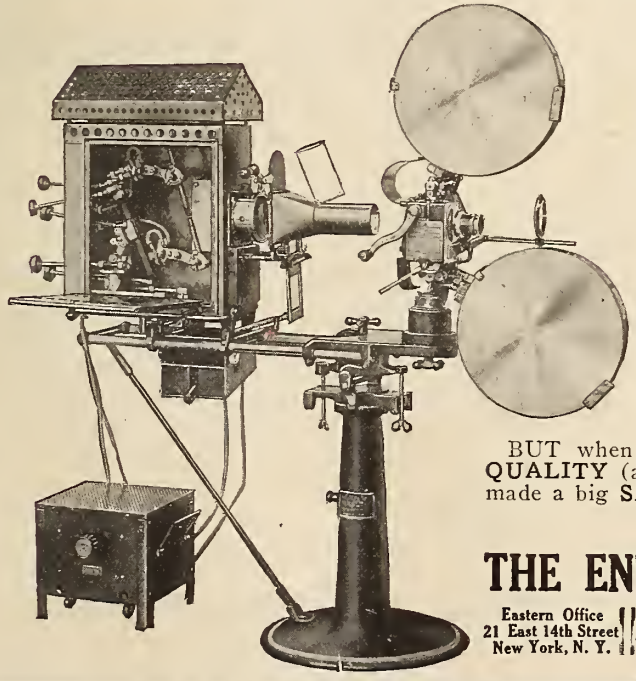
INDIRECT LIGHTS—EXIT LIGHTS—CHANDELIERS
FOR MOVING PICTURE THEATRES

Indirect lights produce the ideal illumination for Moving Picture Theatres where it is expected to project pictures in a well-lighted auditorium. It is not a luxury, it is a necessity and is being demanded more every day.

It does away with eyestrain, headaches, and nervousness which is so common in improperly lighted theatres, and gives your patrons a sense of safety and restfulness. Its advantages are too numerous to mention here.

Indirect Fixtures manufactured by the General Specialty Co. are designed especially for Moving Picture Theatres. The interior of fixtures are coated with our "Luna White" reflecting surface, which is the only surface that will produce an evenness of reflection.

Write us at once stating size of auditorium and, if already wired, the number and location of electric outlets, and we will advise size and number of fixtures to use. We save you from 25% to 50%. All fixtures wired ready to attach, and can be hung in a moment.



We manufacture all kinds of Exit Brackets, Boxes and Chandeliers for Theatres. Write us, giving us some idea of your requirements.

CENSORSHIP LOOMS ON ST. LOUIS HORIZON

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

St. Louis, Aug. 4.

At the regular session of the municipal assembly in September Mayor Kiel proposes to bring up a bill directing the division of Parks and Recreation to censor all motion picture films and other theatrical entertainments before their production be permitted in St. Louis. On July 29 the St. Louis Globe-Democrat quotes Mayor Kiel as saying:

"I consider the establishment of a censorship over public entertainments, particularly motion picture shows, which cater largely to boys and girls, imperative. I am strongly opposed to the exhibition of films depicting crime. Many of such films portray criminals as heroes, and the impression on youthful minds is bad."

PASQUALI PLANS WAR NEWS FILMS

THE Picture Playhouse Film Company have just received a cable from Pasquali & Company, of Turin, Italy, in answer to one of theirs, that Pasquali & Company are sending three camera outfits to different war centers in Europe, and have made arrangements to send to the Picture Playhouse Film Company at 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, all war films as soon as completed.

This company declares it will soon be in a position to furnish to his patrons authentic and realistic scenes of interest from the seat of war.

BURNS SUPERVISES FILM DRAMA

William J. Burns recently returned from Washington, D. C., where the final scenes were taken for his Secret Service case, The Philadelphia-Lancaster Counterfeiting Mystery. In the films this restaging of the case will be known as "The $5,000,000 Counterfeiting Plot." It is in 600 scenes and 6 parts.

The picture has been produced under the personal direction of Mr. Burns, in order that the details be correct, and the detective appears in nearly all of the scenes, together with former members of the Secret Service.

Mr. Burns shows on the screen how the Monroe-head hundred dollar silver certificates were made. These counterfeits were so remarkable that it necessitated the Secretary of the Treasury recalling the entire issue of that currency, amounting to over twenty-seven million dollars.

These pictures will be presented at a special engagement at a Broadway theatre, beginning the middle of August.

NEW PHILADELPHIA FILM COMPANY

The latest concern to join the ranks of the film manufacturers is the Liberty Motion Picture Company, with offices at 20 East Herman street, Germantown, Philadelphia. This new company started operations a number of weeks ago.

Howard J. Bobb is general manager of the new concern, which will make a specialty in releasing photoplays that contain Canadian and Northwestern atmosphere. For this purpose a large tract of picturesque land was purchased at Harmonville, Pa.

An open invitation is extended to members of the trade by the Liberty Company. Bennie Zeidman, or "Bennie of Lubinville," as he has hitherto been known, is the publicity manager.

Director Jack Adolfi, of the Majestic studio, and company headed by a cast composed of Frank Bennett, Sam DeGrasse and Miss Olive Golden, are spending some time at the Catalina Islands, where fisherman pictures are being made.

Roscoe Arbuckle, the dandy little 300-pound director-actor of the Keystone studio, bought an automobile recently and already has had to buy new springs, and have the ones not already broken reinforced. Mack Sennett accuses Roscoe of leaving the company in the middle of a scene to go over and talk to his new possession. Charles Chaplin also had the gasoline fever and bought a new car, but he also sold it before the end of the week, at a profit not to himself.

Miss Mabel Normand, of the Keystone companies, is learning aviation from Walter Brookin, the permanent Keystone aviator, and has made three flights alone, driving the machine herself. Miss Normand hopes to soon be able to do the loop, when a motion picture will be made.

Director Joseph DeGrass, accompanied by Pauline Bush, Joe King, Lon Chaney and others, will go to Mt. Lassen, the only active volcano in the United States, and film a three-reel picture of a very dramatic story which will lead the players to the very brink of the crater. Mt. Lassen will be used as a setting to represent the sulphur mines of Iceland.

Isadore Bernstein, manager of the Universal West Coast studios; Director Wilford Lucas, Miss Cleo Madison, George Larkin and other members of the company filming the next Universal serial "The Trey o' Hearts," are at San Diego, Cal., making the third instalment of "The Dead Reckoning," which will consist largely of sea adventures.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 44." (Selig. Thurs., July 30.)—Sports predominate in this issue, as one would naturally expect at this season of the year. There are views of the tennis contestants in action at Longwood, society and blue-blooded horses at the Long Branch Horse Show, and girls making sylph-like dives at Travers Island.

ECLAIR SCIENTIA

"Touring the Beautiful Sierra Nevadas." (Eclair-Scientia. Split reel. Sun., July 26.)—We are carried through some of the most beautiful valleys in America, flanked by lofty peaks rising 14,000 feet above sea level. A trip over the surface of a lake high up among these mountains completes this trip, and brings home with full force the contention of the "See America First" committee that our land is unsurpassed in spots for picturesqueness. After this peep of wild nature untouched by the hand of man, we are shown on the same reel what nature produces guided and controlled in hothouses and flower gardens.

"Primroses and Cinerarias." (Eclair-Scientia. Split reel. Sun., July 26.)—These, we are told by the program, were the favorite flowers of Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield. They are seldom seen in this country, except in hothouses and in pots, but they are common garden flowers in England. The camera has caught the exquisite and fragile beauty of each of these flowers and reproduced the delicate coloring of the blossoms with fine effect.

"Chinese Customs and Trades." (Eclair-Scientia. Split reel. Sun., Aug. 2.)—China is a land of such strange customs and ways of doing things that a glimpse into the ordinary life of the people always proves entertaining. In spite of the inroads which Western civilization has made in the last few years, many antiquated methods of trade and of farming are still in use, and some of these the cameraman here reveals to us. But in several of the occupations that we are shown, the Chinese are still our masters, such as weaving baskets and summer rugs. The women of the working classes seem to do the same work as the men, unless they do a little more of it. They have already demanded the vote, and judging by these pictures they deserve it.

"Picturesque France." (Eclair-Scientia. Split reel. Sun., Aug. 2.)—From China, we skip on the same reel to the other side of the world and make a trip through southern France to the Alps, passing the roaring little stream called the Romanche River, drifting leisurely through the calm and peaceful valley of the Guisanne, and ascending by a solid masonry pike to the Meije peak, 13,000 feet high, and see the Ecrin glacier, jumping then to the heights of Mont Blanc, and sweeping the surrounding country for miles as we go over the Lautaret Pass.

PATHE SCENICS

"The Art of the Furrier." (Pathé. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 11.)—The various processes that the moleskin goes through before it is suitable for the lady's wardrobe is revealed, from the trapping of the little animals to the making of the expensive and luxurious coat. This is on the same reel with "Iron and Steel Industry, Bombay."

"The Iron and Steel Industry, Bombay." (Pathé. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 11.)—The transformation from molten metal to steel rails makes an interesting sight. The various steps, from the making into ingots until the rolling mills have turned out the rail ready to be shipped away where needed, are here given. It is included on the reel with "The Art of the Furrier."

"From Grenoble to Aux Bains." (Pathé. Split reel. Mon., Aug. 10.)—In charge of the Pathé photographer we are carried on a tour through the beautiful mountainous Southern France, starting at Grenoble, following a winding road bordered by giant mountains, a road where sheep are still driven to market, and passing the waterfalls of Sierroz and the lovely Lake of Bourget en route.

"A Rousing Reception." (Pathé. Split reel. Mon., Aug. 10.)—This farce is a part of the reel that also shows "From Grenoble to Aux Bains" and "Typical Russian Dances." It reminds one of the funny house at Coney Island with its assortment of queer contrivances to exasperate a person. The entrant into this house has a diversified time of it before he gets in, and a worse time after he enters.

"Typical Russian Dances." (Pathé. Split reel. Mon., Aug. 10.)—A troupe of dancers, all of them dwarfs not over 30 inches tall, go through some of the Russian dances that have been introduced into this country lately by the Russian ballets. But we have not seen such graceful dancers as the camera here catches.

Sidney Diamond, age forty years, a former actor of the legitimate stage, and for the past two years with various motion picture companies in Los Angeles, died Thursday, July 9, at the California Hospital, after an illness of nine weeks. Members of the Universal, Majestic, and Reliance photoplay companies took charge of the body and paid the hospital and funeral expenses. It is not known here that Diamond left any relatives.

The Flying A Company, under direction of Thomas Ricketts, utilizes the wild mountain scenery of San Marcus Pass in the subject, "Lodging for a Night," to be released shortly.

One of the best parts allotted Howard Crampton, the Imp character man, for some time is the role he plays in "In All Things Moderation," a two-reel play just finished by Frank Crane and his Imp company. Mr. Crampton is playing the sea captain in the present Imp production, "On the High Seas," directed by Frank Crane.

Dr. J. F. Shirley, of Honea Path, S. C., has had plans drawn by Casey and Fant, architects of Anderson, S. C., for a motion picture theatre at Honea Path, costing $6,000.

The Crescent company, of Greenwood, S. C., is having plans drawn for the erection of a motion picture theatre in that town.

"How clear the pictures are!"

You've often overheard that remark—and it's as strong a commendation, brings as much business as does a favorable comment on the picture story itself.

The "clearest pictures" are on Eastman film because the product is right, chemically and physically.

It is easily identifiable by the stencil "Eastman" in the margin.

Three-part Adaptation of H. A. Du Souchet's Comedy-Drama

"MY FRIEND from INDIA"

With the Quaint Comedian

WALTER E. PERKINS

in his original role of August Keene Shaver

A really good three-part comedy. As full of laughs as the spoken drama. Mr. Perkins as a fun-maker is the same success before the camera that he is on the stage.

To be released through the special service of

EXTRA

WAR extras are soon forgotten—they are incomplete—they are often incorrect. Camera news is the only news which nobody in the world can contradict. When it's new news, when it's picture news, and moving news, and WAR NEWS, it's the best news to be had and it's the only news that everybody living can read. Yes, it's—the films which give you the service of a newspaper on the European war and the interest of an eye witness. Accurate too — happenings caught by the Pathé camera happened. We are issuing war extras of the happenings people want to see now. You make a patron out of every passerby—they leave their work to see the PATHÉ WAR VIEWS.

THE LAST VOLUNTEER

International Relations Snap

CROWN PRINCE INVOLVED WITH INNKEEPER'S DAUGHTER

A timely war piece laid at the seat of the present Austrian-Servian war. Pathé made in 5 reels—an intensely patriotic drama in which the relations of a Crown-prince to an Inkeeper's daughter involve international affairs. The battle scenes are carried out in the most minute detail showing actual engagements in modern destructive warfare. Aeroplanes, artillery, and every other modern engine of death is employed and the resulting carnage is faithfully pictured. The rescue of the flag will raise your patrons out of their seats.

"THE GREATEST AMERICAN PHOTOPLAY TRIUMPH"

The voice of the press in their praise of

"THE LITTLEST REBEL"

"The battle scenes of the play are staged with fine realism. There are cavalry charges across wide, dusty fields; you see horsemen in chaotic plunges down hillsides; there are hand-to-hand clashes of infantrymen; solid shot furrows the soil; shell burst obligingly before the camera and all about there is carnage enough to promote the formation of any number of peace societies. The uniforms and trappings are of the right period, and one has the feeling, strangely affecting as you yield to it, of having seen Brady's war-time photographs come to life."

A REAL WAR DRAMA ENACTED ON THE FAMOUS BATTLE GROUNDS OF VIRGINIA and GEORGIA

Chicago, Ill.
Aug. 10th, 1914

Mr. Frank A. Tichenor,
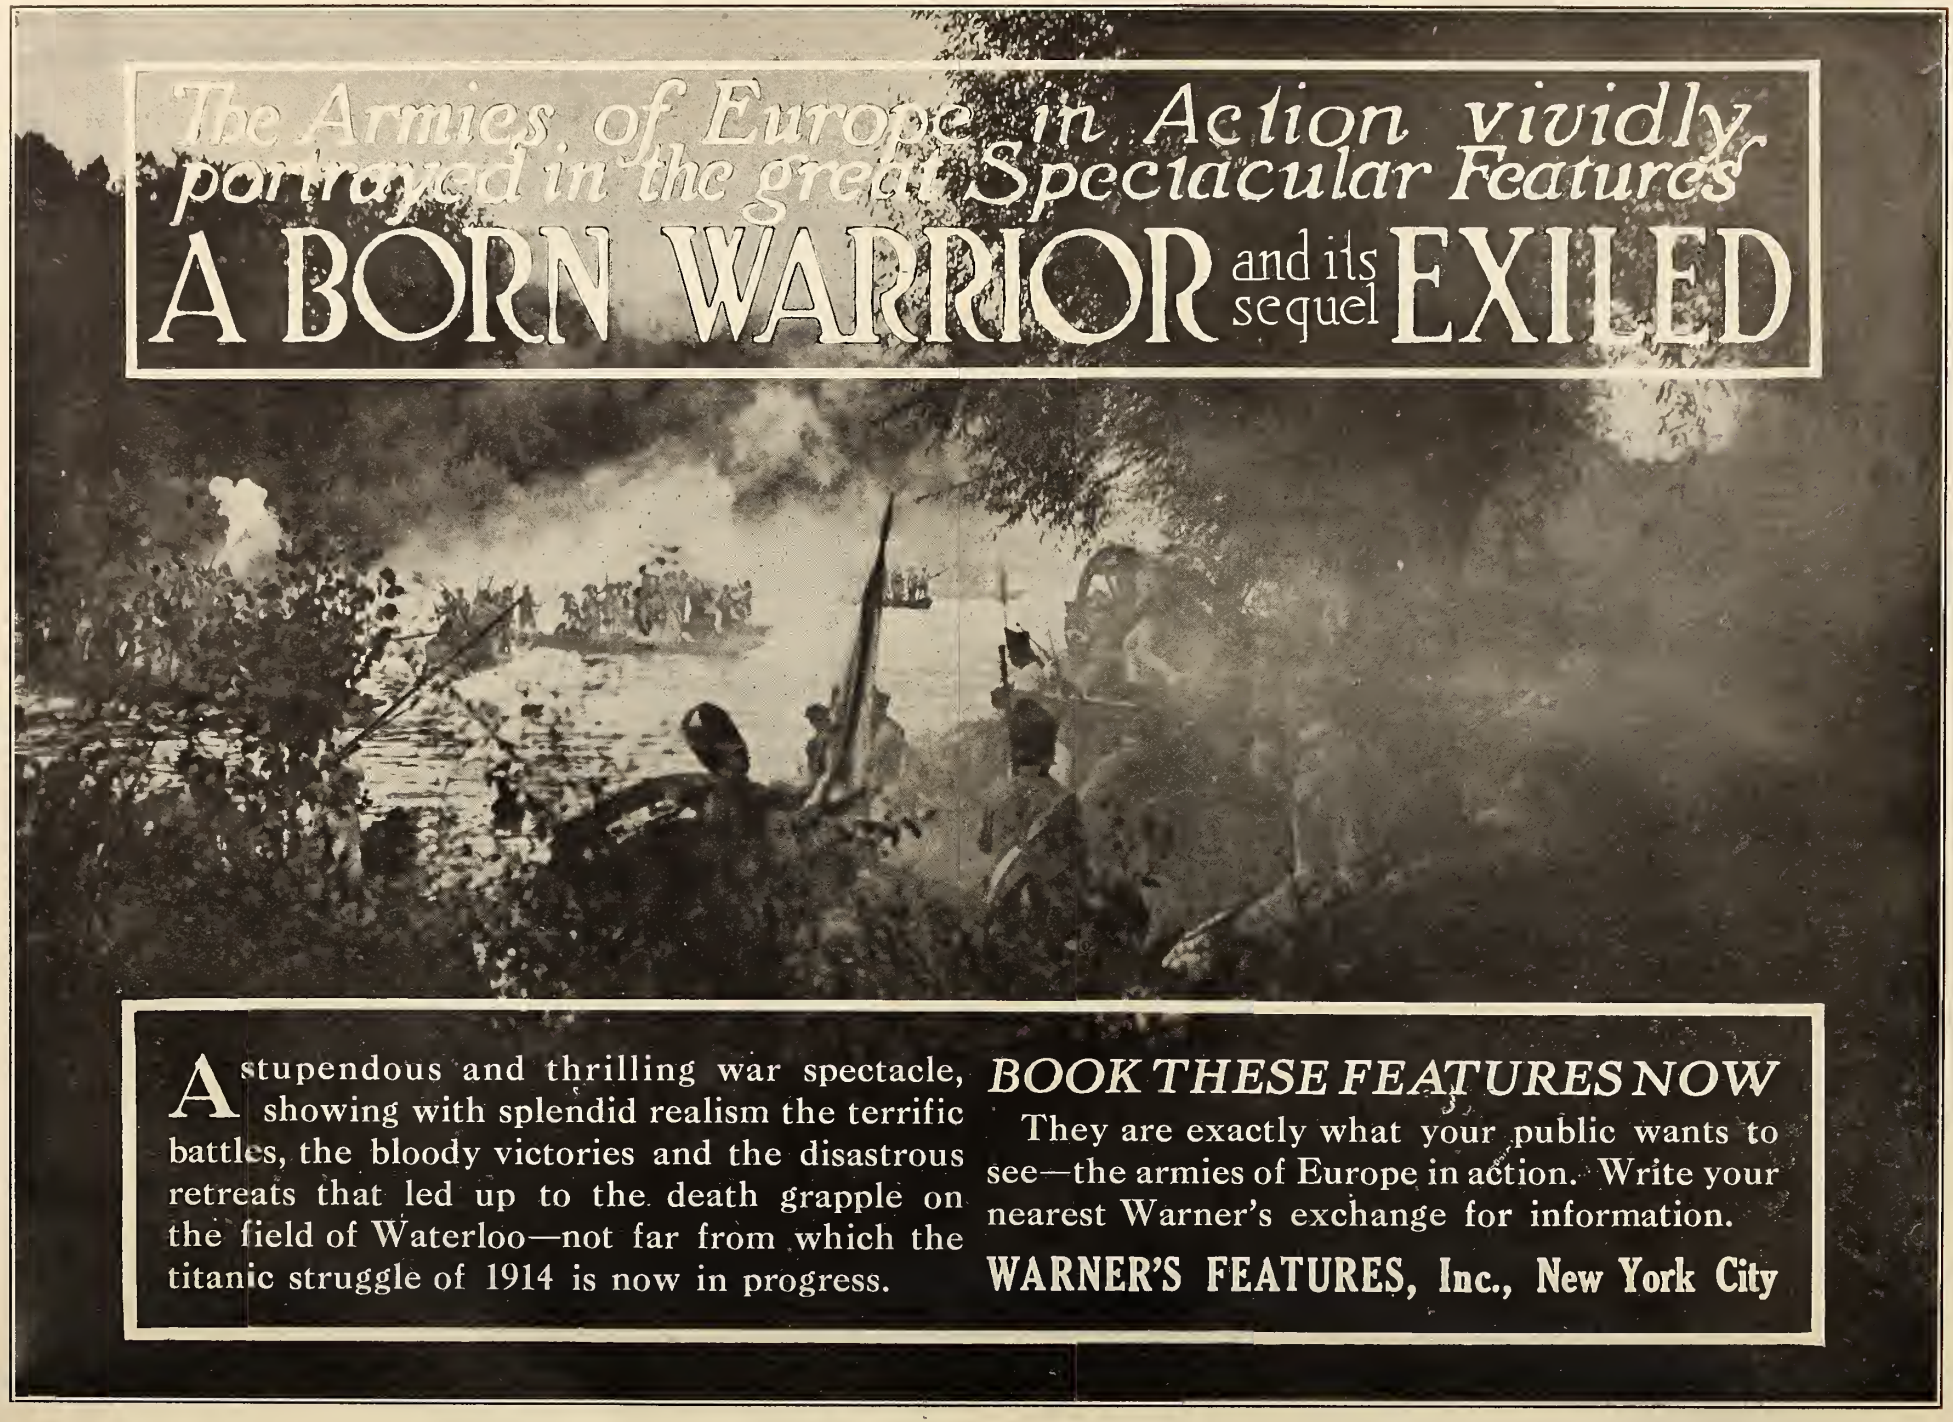
220 W. 42d St.
New York City, N.Y.

My dear Mr. Tichenor:--

I have just witnessed the showing of "The Littlest Rebel" which has greatly impressed the people of Chicago. The production carries in every detail the action and heart interest the original script contains—the characters are splendid—the battle scenes very realistic, and on a whole the production is superbly beautiful.

You have my sincerest congratulations for producing this piece, as I myself wanted to see it—it is GREAT.



Very sincerely,

Edward Peple

What Are You Buying?

THE average advertiser buys his raw material, rent, labor, etc., only after the closest appraisal of its value.

He will only pay for what he gets.

BUT when it comes to advertising, he just shuts his eyes and swallows. He takes the salesman's say-so. He almost never sees the goods he buys. He doesn't think, analyze nor investigate.

IT'S strange; for there's nothing mysterious nor intangible about this commodity of advertising space. It can be bought just as closely and safely as any other commodity.

TO illustrate—take this motion picture field.

Draw a large circle; and then within a much smaller circle.

Your large circle will include all of the many persons engaged in the motion picture industry, producers, dealers, exhibitors, exchanges, directors, actors and actresses, scenario writers, camera men, operators, studio and theatre employees, etc.

Any one of these may buy and read a motion picture journal. You may also add a liberal sprinkling of picture fans—those so interested in pictures that only a class or trade journal will satisfy them.

HERE you have your general or class field of circulation. It is very large.

A publication catering successfully, through various departments, to this entire class should easily acquire a circulation of thirty thousand or more.

WITHIN the little circle you have the trade proper—that is, the buying and selling trade.

It comprises principally the exhibitor, who is the retailer in this business. He, directly or through his manager or operator, is the only person in all the field who buys pictures or theatre accessories.

AS to his number, you hear various estimates running all the way from ten to twenty thousand.

These wild figures have no interest to the thinking advertiser. He simply wants to know how many are purchasing exhibitors.

AND those who know the exhibitor field through personal contact, who have spent time and money in circularizing—and who are willing to admit the truth—know that the purchasing exhibitors to-day in this country, men genuinely, responsibly and continuously in business—do not number over seven thousand. It's a fact.

HERE then are your two fields—the large, scattering one; the small concentrated one whose limits are defined by purchasing power.

If you sell pictures or theatre accessories, you have absolutely no reason for buying circulation beyond the little circle for the very simple reason that nobody in it has any use for or will buy your goods.

YOU may be dazzled by the bigger circulation figures, but if they were a million bigger it would make not a bit of difference to you.

AND you have to pay for this waste circulation. Circulation, remember clearly, is a losing game with the publisher. He loses on every subscription, every newsstand copy.

The better his publication the more he loses. You, the advertiser make up the heavy loss—the loss on every unit of circulation.

BUT why buy units of circulation—any units—to which you can't possibly sell goods?

In other words, why buy figures? Why not buy purchasers—and only pay for purchasers?

The publication whose circulation is confined to the small circle also loses on each unit of circulation, but it gives you in turn a purchaser—a genuine, honest commodity—and only charges for this commodity.

SO it all comes down flatly to purchasers.

If you sell pictures or theatre accessories you are buying sawdust to-day when you pay for circulation in excess of the seven thousand responsible owners of permanent, high-class picture theatres.

THERE ARE THE FACTS!

FEAR FOR SELIG, NOW ABROAD

Los Angeles, Aug. 10.

Considerable anxiety is felt by local employees and producing companies of the Selig Polyscope Company for the safety of W. N. Selig, who is in Europe making a tour of the company's exchanges at London, Paris, Berlin, Moscow and Rome. By some it is believed that he will be there to materially aid in securing exceptional scenes for the Hearst-Selig weekly, while others fear he will be unable to return when he desires.

It was Mr. Selig's intention to be in Los Angeles to inspect the big Zoo, on Mission road, the public opening of which will be September 1 or Labor Day.

BAR SUNDAY SHOWS IN NASHVILLE

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 13.

No Sunday motion picture shows are to be permitted in Nashville. After a lengthy consideration of the matter and after the ministers of the city had all protested long and loud over the proposed action, it was decided by Mayor Hilary E. Howse that nothing of the kind would be permitted.

The motion picture men of Nashville were not inclined to over-run the wishes of the church people and did not press their claims to any great extent, in which case, however, it is believed they would have won out easily.

Wants Children Excluded from Motion Picture Theatres after 9:00 p.m.—President Goldberg, of the M. P. E. L. A., Opposes the Proposition

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 12.

JUVENILE Officer Bernstein has brought before the city commissioners of Omaha a proposed ordinance prohibiting children at motion picture theatres after 9 o'clock at night unless their parents are with them. Children under sixteen years of age are governed by the ordinance, which mentions motion picture houses in particular, and all public places.

That the exhibitors of Omaha will combat the ordinance before the commissioners when it comes up for action is expected. The same proposition has been frequently mentioned before, but each time the objections of influential exhibitors has stopped it before it reached the commission.

President Samuel Goldberg, of the Omaha branch of the M. P. E. L. A., has declared himself to be against such action. He says many parents, bent on an evening at a friend's home, or other places where the children would not enjoy themselves, solve the problem by leaving the children at the community theatre, with instructions to wait there, looking at the pictures, until they return for them. He also declares the motion picture theatres near the homes of the children have helped keep them off the downtown streets.

That the local branch will be back of him if the ordinance seems to have the support of a majority of the commissioners is expected. Because the exhibitors have been so willing and so efficient in helping better conditions in Omaha, their objection will carry much weight.

Dallas Exhibitors Recognize Union

Managers Had Been Paying the Regular Scale, But the Operators Struck for Recognition—The Walkout Lasted Three Months

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 12.

UNION operators of Dallas who went on a strike in April for a better wage scale practically won their fight when T. P. Finnegan, manager of the Hippodrome, the largest picture house in the city, recently signed the scale asked by the operators.

There was really little difference in the scale which the operators asked and which was being paid prior to the organization of the union. The only objection was that the proprietors did not want to recognize the union.

Dallas is a well organized union town, and when a few of the smaller houses signed it was up to the larger ones to also square themselves with the union, which was organized by an organizer of the American Federation of Labor and which chartered the local union of operators.

During the three months the strike was on there was but very little disturbance, although when the men first walked out they left the machines in bad shape and several demonstrations were made. In one or two instances operators brought from other places were attacked and the houses were picketed, but the police discouraged these tactics and made several arrests that were effective as discipline.

Record Prosperity for Nashville Exhibitors

Outlook for Legitimate Houses Doleful, with Photoplay Men Planning a Whirlwind Campaign for Supremacy this Winter

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 13.

All of the film theatres in Nashville are now in the most prosperous condition of their history, and the outlook is that the legitimate drama, the stage, will suffer in consequence this winter experienced theatrical men here are freely predicting.

The theatre-going people of Nashville have been giving the highest class of motion pictures this year of any season past, and have witnessed some of the season's greatest successes in the motion pictures, at an insignificant price as compared with that charged by the big playhouses of the city.

The Orpheum is planning on bringing some large plays of the screen drama here this winter in direct competition with the Vendome, the city's largest theatre, and it will be a test between the two as to the drawing capacity, with the Vendome charging regular prices of $2 and $3, and the Orpheum giving their shows for twenty cents.

COURTS UPHOLD PENNSYLVANIA CENSORS

Judge Martin, in Common Pleas, Philadelphia, Refuses Injunction Asked by Universal, Mutual and Exhibitors in Three-Cornered Suit, and Declares Law is Valid Exercise of State's Police Power—Promise New Rules After September 1—Press Divided in Opinion

THE Pennsylvania motion picture censor law, passed on June 19, 1911, and thought to be unconstitutional by exhibitors in that state and elsewhere, has been declared valid by Judge Martin, of the Court of Common Pleas No. 5, in Philadelphia, following injunction suits brought to test the status of the enactment.

The opinion was handed down on August 7. It declined to grant an injunction against J. Louis Breitinger, the chief censor of motion picture films, and Mrs. E. C. Niver, assistant censor, constituting the State Board of Censors, to restrain them from enforcing the provisions of the act by demanding that all motion picture films or reels be submitted to them for their approval or rejection, before they are exhibited to the public.

The suit for an injunction was brought by the Buffalo branch, Mutual Film Corporation; the Mutual Film Corporation of Pennsylvania and Interstate Films Company; by Albert E. Brown, William Sachsenmaier and Vernon R. Carrick, trading as the Overbrook Theatre, and by the Pittsburgh Photoplay Company. They contended that the censorship act was unconstitutional and an unlawful interference with interstate commerce. The contentions of the plaintiffs were fully heard by the court some weeks ago.

JUDGE MARTIN'S conclusions are that the act is not unconstitutional and is not an illegal interference with interstate commerce; but that it clearly is an exercise of the police power of the State, enacted to conserve the morals and manners of the public, and as such its purport is within the scope of legislative authority. Many cases are cited by the judge as references in support of his findings.

In one part of the opinion Judge Martin says:

"It is alleged in each of the bills of complaint that none of the moving pictures, films, or reels, owned by the plaintiffs, and rented or intended to be rented in the commonwealth, or exhibited, are sacrilegious, obscene, indecent, immoral, or such as tend to corrupt morals, but, on the contrary, are moral and proper.

"IF such be the case, it will be presumed that they will be passed by the censors, and while complaint is made of anticipated inconvenience and expense, plaintiffs have made no attempt to comply with the terms of the act, and it is not possible to determine in advance that it is impractical to carry out its provisions.

"Official censorship has already been established in four states and many cities, and a bill is pending in Congress to create a Federal Motion Picture Commission for licensing films. There is a voluntary board known as the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures, in New York.

"That board views from 150 to 185 film subjects a week, and the pictures are daily seen by about 8,000,000 of people in 18,000 motion picture houses in the United States. Last year fifty-three subjects were condemned and parts eliminated in 401. The cost of these, negative copies included, was over $582,000.

"CLOSE on the heels of Judge Martin's decision it was announced by J. Louis Breitinger, chief censor of the board, that new regulations regarding the presentation of motion pictures in Pennsylvania will be enforced September 1 by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, and after that date all films must be approved by the board. The adoption of the rules, however, has been deferred until the status of the board has been definitely determined in a court of law, it was explained by Mr. Breitinger the next day.

"The decision upholding the constitutionality of the act," said Mr. Breitinger, "is in conformity with the law, and it is what we expected. It is in accordance with the interpretation of similar laws in Ohio and Illinois, where it was decided to be within the police power of those states to establish such a censorship as is provided for under the Pennsylvania act.

"IN Ohio, the law is upheld in a decision of a state court. In Illinois, the United States courts decided the question as it has been decided in this state.

"We are not trying to eliminate everything. We are endeavoring to pass as many films as possible. After the first of September, a new set of rules will be enforced in this state. The police of the towns and cities upstate will be requested to aid the board by prosecuting all violations of the new rules. The board will require, after that date, that all films shown in the state must have the approval of the board."

The "Philadelphia Press" commented on the law in the following terms:

"In refusing an injunction against the State Board of Moving Picture Censors the Common Pleas Court has reiterated the principle that a censorship is the lawful exercise of the police power of the state to conserve the morals of the public. This principle is both sound and just; but it does not answer the more pertinent criticism that has been directed against the new censorship law.

"IT has been pointed out that it would be physically impossible for the two censors to examine every film manufactured in the state without seriously delaying their production and causing great inconvenience and expense to the manufacturers. The court declined to go into this phase of the case because the plaintiffs had never complied with the law and their objections to it were purely theoretical.

"Yet many film manufacturers have complied and are daily complying with the law. Whether the limited yet rigorous provisions of the law are valid as concerning these manufacturers is a question the courts have yet to determine.

"Pennsylvania is the fourth state to establish a moving picture censorship. There is a bill before Congress at present providing for the establishment of a National Board of Censors. These laws do not create the presumption that the previous product of the film manufacturers were anything else than moral and proper.

"The need for censorship has grown out of the tremendous development of the moving picture industry as much as the infrequent production of an objectionable film.

"THE far-reaching effect of the moving picture, its growing importance and the young and impressionable audiences it attracts have made necessary the precautions to maintain it at a high moral tone. But the very magnitude of the moving picture business makes it equally imperative that no system of censorship shall be so restricting as to hamper its progress or inhibit its growth."

In contrast to this sensible view of the situation, which sees the grave possibility of the motion picture industry being hampered by censorship, "The Ledger" comments with smug complacency in this self-righteous and we-know-what's-good-for-you fashion:

"Judge Martin has sustained the validity of the act creating the board of censors of moving pictures, which gives it authority to suppress exhibitions detrimental to public morals. A different decision would have denied the right of the state to exercise police power, and would have permitted the educative influence of the cinematograph to be perverted to evil ends for the sake of gain.

"THE state owes a very grave responsibility to its immature citizens. It should not be left to the discretion of producing companies to decide which 'photoplays' and scenes are proper and which are not. The decision must rest with an unbiased arbiter, and there is no charge that the board as at present constituted has yielded to improper influences in discriminating between matter that may fitly be presented on the screen and the films that are for any reason objectionable."

SUMMER BUSINESS BOOMS IN SIOUX CITY

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 12.

That every theatre in Sioux City, Ia., where nine downtown houses make competition bitter, more than "broke even" during the hottest weeks, is the message brought to Omaha by W. A. Caulkins, of the Laemmle Film Service Company, who was in Sioux City on business recently. Not a single theatre closed or lowered its service in Sioux City this summer, he said. He visited a number of other towns, large and small, and found the same good business conditions existing.

The fact is, that general reports here show a better business this season than was ever enjoyed during the summer. A record breaking business is expected when the good season opens in the fall. Two new theatres are being planned for Omaha to be ready before January.

Fire Warden Eddie Morris, of Omaha, ordered the Palm Theatre, Fourteenth and Douglas streets, to be kept closed after a fire, Monday, July 27, until it had been remodeled to comply with the state fire laws. The fire was in the operator's booth.

Thirty people in the theatre walked out without excitement. Automatic doors on the booth closed successfully. The fire warden accused Manager Kolberg of allowing an eleven-year-old boy to assist the operator. Manager Kolberg is remodeling the theatre and will open it within a week.

Says War Will Not Affect Price of Carbons

George F. Kiewert Sure that Exhibitor Need Have No Fear of Shortage in This Country — Market Will Not Be Cornered

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 12.

THE price of carbons in America will not be raised on account of the European war.

Despite the fact that many of the ingredients that enter into the manufacture of carbons comes from Austria, and that the majority of carbons that are used by motion picture exhibitors in this country are made in Germany or Austria, George F. Kiewert, vice-president of the Charles L. Kiewert Company, whose Bio carbon is extensively used in this country, says that exhibitors need have no fear of a raise in the price of carbons or a shortage in the supply for some time to come.

"Since the breaking out of the European war we have been deluged with orders that were purely speculative, from men who thought they saw a chance to corner the market and make a small size fortune when the price of carbons should advance," said Mr. Kiewert. "But we have discouraged all speculation and will do all in our power to protect our customers. We have turned down a number of orders already, ranging all the way from 3,000 to 10,000 carbons from cities where we knew that they could not utilize this supply in a year's time."

Mr. Kiewert says that he expects his company will soon be able to get their imports through from Germany and in the meanwhile they have plenty of stock to supply their customers. The only chance of there being a rise in the price of carbons would come if through some unforeseen circumstance the company was unable to get any from Germany; and in that case they would be forced to draw upon their Pacific coast warehouse and the Eastern and Middle Western exhibitor would be forced to pay the additional freight charge.

"I know that we are simply taking care of all the customers on our books and turning down the majority of orders from people we do not know," said Mr. Kiewert. "I am sure the other carbon men in the country are doing the same and that the exhibitor will be fully protected."

Louisville Exhibitors Fear Results of War

Small Tobacco Crop, Exported Principally to Europe, Might Close a Number of Kentucky Motion Picture Houses, Is Managers' Apprehension

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 13.

"WHAT effect is the crash among the powers of Europe going to have on my business?" is the question that motion picture exhibitors in Louisville and the surrounding territory are at the present most anxiously asking themselves.

So far, no effect, either in the increase or decrease of business has been felt, but the general consensus of opinion is that a prolonged struggle in Europe may have a far-reaching effect on the fortunes of motion picture exhibitors.

The business of the motion picture houses in Louisville and Kentucky but little more than paid expenses in most cases, but conditions have recently become somewhat better. In Louisville the attendance was largely increased with the cessation of the extremely hot weather which held the state for nearly two months, while in many of the towns in the agricultural districts the harvesting of the wheat crops has exerted a stimulating influence on business.

The fear that a prolonged European war may hurt business in Kentucky seems to be well founded. Kentucky's one really big money crop is tobacco and of that she raises thirty-five per cent of all that is grown in the United States. A very large part of this tobacco goes into the export trade, and many growers are fearing that with the European market cut off they may find difficulty in marketing their product in spite of the fact that the tobacco crop in this state is nearly 80,000,000 pounds under the usual production.

In Louisville, a manufacturing center, the fear is that the halting of export trade may bring about the closing down of a number of the larger manufacturing plants. In this event there are a large number of neighborhood houses that will suffer keenly.

CENSOR, IN COMPROMISE, PASSES "BARLEYCORN"

Breitinger Backs Down on Most of the Eliminations Ordered at First and Lets Jack London Films Go Through After Nominal Cut-Outs—Film Ran Three Days Unmolested—Clergy There in Approving Crowds

Philadelphia, Aug. 13.

FOLLOWING the action of J. Louis Breitinger, attorney for Philadelphia liquor interests and head of the censor board of that city, who demanded a number of absurd and irrelevant cuts to be made in "John Barleycorn" before he would allow it to be released, C. H. Pierce, representing Bosworth, Inc., the owners of the film, and William E. Smith, of the Famous Players Exchange, in the Quaker City, who handles the photoplay for Eastern Pennsylvania, made arrangements to put "John Barleycorn" on at the Garrick Theatre without cutting the film according to Breitinger's instructions, on Monday, August 3.

The film was heavily advertised in Philadelphia and nearby cities, the Bosworth company using all the newspapers in Philadelphia for that purpose. The publicity campaign extended to Atlantic City, where a large number of three-sheets, conspicuously placed, proved effective.

On the opening night the Garrick was packed to the doors. It is estimated that the attendance the first two nights reached 2,500. Numerous invitations were sent to Philadelphia ministers, who were asked to judge the film. Nearly every clergyman who was able to be present saw "John Barleycorn" sometime during the week it was on exhibition at the Garrick, and they were unanimous in declaring that there was nothing objectional in the film. On the other hand, they said, the representation of Jack London's experience with the liquor habit and his efforts to combat its evil force in his own life taught a great moral lesson.

The public exhibition of the film without the censor's approval subjected the representative of the Bosworth company to a fine of $50.

The newspapers in Philadelphia on learning that the public found nothing objectional in "John Barleycorn" as charged by the censor, took up the matter the next day, Tuesday. W. E. Smith, C. H. Pierce and ex-Judge J. G. Gordon, who had been previously engaged to handle the case for Bosworth, Inc., called on Breitinger for his views of the move taken by the producers of the film.

The censor expressed a desire to compromise. It was then decided that Mr. Pierce should submit voluntarily to arrest and pay a fine of $50 for the exhibition of the picture on Monday without the approval of the censor. Breitinger then agreed to approve the film if a few cuts were made. They were considerably less than the number he had stipulated previously, and he insisted upon them more with the idea of preventing it from appearing that he had entirely reversed his opinion.

With this desire to save his face, he released the film on Wednesday, August 5. The Garrick Theatre was filled the rest of the week, and the producers have been free from annoyance by the censor board.

Lobby frames containing clippings from Philadelphia newspapers in which the arbitrary and absurd action of the censor was chronicled were put on display in front of the Garrick for the public to see how unjust Breitinger had been in condemning "John Barleycorn." It proved very effective and caused a great deal of comment among the knots of people hovering about the theatre as a result of the publicity.

E. H. Fabian just purchased and installed in the Lyric Theatre, of Ennis, Texas, a Wurlitzer instrument, style "B." Mr. Fabian is remodeling and refurnishing his theatre throughout.

THANHOUSER CREW ROWS TO VICTORY

The "Thanhouser Eight," the only expert rowing crew in the motion picture industry, competed successfully in the big amateur rowing regatta, August 8, in Philadelphia. Every large athletic association in the United States and Canada participated in the regatta.

The Thanhouser crew was taken to Philadelphia by Carroll Fleming, former producing director at the New York Hippodrome, now director at the New Rochelle studio. Those comprising the crew are: Irving Cummings, William Nole, Tootes Brady, William Carroll, Clayton Cole, Frank Murphy, Charles Howe, Robert Marchang, John Scott, coxwain, and George Sullivan, substitute. Tootes Brady is the holder of several national records.

RAMO WAR FILMS HERE

The first European negative for the Ramo Films, Inc., production entitled "The War of Wars," arrived at their offices on Sunday, August 9. A print was made and exhibited and was found to be a very elegant and beautiful film.

Considerable more film reached New York for the Ramo Company on August 13. The first print will be finished and ready for the various offices of the Ramo Company and their numerous bookings on Saturday, August 15.

Dallas Censors Accused of Prejudice

Pictures Not Allowed on the Screen in Dallas by Their Action Find Ready Acceptance Elsewhere in Texas, Is Claim

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 12.

LOCAL motion picture men are having considerable trouble with the board of censors here—that is, one member of the board. This one member who is causing most of the worry is Mrs. Reed Finley, secretary and the only paid member of the board. Attempts to alter her edicts have been vain.

Mrs. Finley recently barred from the screens in this city "The House of Bondage" and "Should a Woman Tell." They were not permitted to be shown in Dallas after they had been shown at other points in the state. Even after the Dallas board barred the pictures they were shown at other points in the state, indicating that the smaller cities of Texas were not being swayed at all by what the largest city in the state did.

As a result of the activities of Mrs. Finley she has incurred considerable hard feeling on the part of exhibitors. In fact, an effort is now being made to see whether under the ordinance the city can legally pay Mrs. Finley the $50 per month which she is allowed as secretary of the board of censors.

When the board was created it was stipulated in the ordinance that no members should receive any salary, but that they should serve on the appointment of the mayor without cost to the city. Other members of the board outside of the police commissioner and chief of police are Henry Jacoby, a real estate man, and M. N. Baker, a well-known Dallas attorney.

When the board was created no provision was made for a salary and Mrs. Finley was appointed with the others to serve just for the honor there was to the appointment. Later she was made secretary and a resolution adopted by the board of city commissioners fixing salary at $50 per month. It is claimed that under the simple resolution she cannot be paid any salary at all, and exhibitors are preparing to test the matter and will try and force the board to pass an ordinance fixing the salary or else cease paying the salary altogether. Indications are that the matter will reach a focus in a short time.

Films Capture Three Coast Theatres

Two in San Bernardino and One in Santa Ana, Cal., Go to Pictures—Los Angeles House Raises Prices

Los Angeles, Aug. 10.

THREE theatres, heretofore used for theatrical productions only, will soon open with motion picture programs. Both are under the management of P. S. Harrison, of San Bernardino, Cal.

One is the Opera House, at San Bernardino, with a seating capacity of 1,300, and another, the Loring Theatre, at Riverside, with 1,000 seats. The prices will be ten and twenty cents and Paramount program will be used exclusively. The San Bernardino change will be made September 5, and the Riverside house opened October 1.

L. A. Schlesinger will raise the standards of the Temple Theatre, at Santa Ana, Cal., from a road show theatre to one showing Paramount program in September.

This house has a large stage which will be utilized partially for electrical effects.

Beginning to-day, the Alhambra Theatre, with 900 seats, located at 742 South Hill street, Los Angeles, increases the price of admission from five to ten cents. This is one of the three big houses here that have retained the nickel admission fee, during the past few months of price evolution and increase. Manager Frank Hawkins will use Universal program exclusively, opening under the new policy with the first instalment of "The Trey o' Hearts." A four-piece orchestra will be used instead of piano only.

The change of policy, together with features for the future will be advertised very liberally. Fifty 24-sheet lithographs and quarter page space in the Los Angeles "Tribune," morning, will be used. The theatre is very handsomely decorated and furnished throughout and finished in a rich onyx and marble.

TIMELY ENGLISH WAR FILM RELEASED

The London Film Company's latest picture, which will be released in America through the Cosmofoto Film Company, is entitled "England's Menace," a two-reel feature produced by Harold Shaw, director of "Trilby" and "The House of Temperley," and written by Bannister Merwin. The picture is now on its way to the offices of the Cosmofoto Film Company, and from the favorable accounts it received in the English trade papers, its success is a foregone conclusion.

PROTECTIVE LEAGUE WILL BE STATE-WIDE BODY

New Pennsylvania Organization will Supplement Work of League and Co-operate With It—Membership to Include all Those Related to the Industry—Central State Branch Formed—Censorship and Building Laws Will Be Fought to a Finish

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 13.

A FURTHER cementing of Central Pennsylvania motion picture interests for protection against censorship and all sorts of "outside interference" has been effected through the decision, announced Monday, of motion picture men in Harrisburg, York, Reading, Lancaster, Lebanon and smaller cities in this section of the state, to form a district branch of the newly organized Moving Picture Protective Association of Pennsylvania.

This association, which is now undertaking to form branches to cover the entire state, similar to that formed here, seeks to include in its membership not only theatre owners, exhibitors and manufacturers of films, but distributers of films and lithograph makers, and in fact all classes of men who have money invested in any business relating to motion pictures.

As explained by C. Floyd Hopkins, of this city, president of the new Moving Picture Exhibitors League of Central Pennsylvania, a distinct organization, the purposes of the Protective Association in no way conflict with those of the league. The league is composed only of exhibitors and theatre managers and its purpose is to deal with problems which arise within the business, such as the elimination of cut-throat methods among exhibitors, the standardization of prices of admittance and so forth.

THE protective association, on the other hand, is intended to fight the enemy from without.

The association goes on the theory that the fair-mindedness and level-headedness of the motion picture men themselves is all that is necessary for the proper regulation of the motion picture business.

The association believes that the motion picture interests know better what is for the good of the business and for the public than do politicians and civic bodies and amateur critics, and the association therefore intends to fight any opposition or interference from outside that it may regard as unjust.

THE association is on record as firmly opposed to state censorship. It also will fight any unjust restrictions which may be proposed by new state legislation and in this connection quite likely will employ a legislative representative during the coming session of the legislature. Another chief aim of the society is to oppose unjust taxes and other financial burdens which it deems unfair.

The Central Pennsylvania branch of the association was formed with temporary officers. They are: President, Isaac Silverman, manager of the Photoplay Theatre in this city, and secretary and treasurer, Clyde D. Klinger, of the Palace Theatre, also of Harrisburg.

The merely temporary organization was formed because at the meeting at which the decision was reached to go into the state association, the motion picture men of many of the Central Pennsylvania cities outside of Harrisburg were not present in person, but by letter signified their intention of supporting the movement and applied for membership.

It is desired that when the permanent officers are elected it shall be by the vote of the representatives from all cities, and a convention for this purpose will be called at an early date. About thirty men already have joined the Central Pennsylvania branch of the association and it is expected to enlist the interest of all the leading motion picture men in this part of the state.

GEORGE BENNETHUM, of Philadelphia, who has a financial interest in many motion picture theatres throughout the state, is understood to be one of the promoters of the Moving Picture Protective Association of Pennsylvania. The headquarters of the parent organization are 818 Jarvella street, Pittsburgh, where Mr. J. W. Rittenhouse, the president, and Mr. A. J. Hanna, secretary, have their offices.

Mr. Rittenhouse is president of the Pittsburgh Exhibitors League Protective Association, of Pittsburgh, and one of the twenty members of the committee on Motion Picture Theatre Standards designated by the Industrial Board of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry to assist that board in the preparation of the new building code that it is proposed to enact into law in the coming session of the legislature. Mr. Rittenhouse has taken great interest in the compilation of the data contained in the recommendations recently published by the Department of Labor and Industry from which the building code will be compiled.

He is understood to have taken an active part in protecting the motion picture men's interests in the preparation of the tentative building rules and regulations.

Pittsburgh Men Form Flourishing Association

Pittsburgh, Aug. 13.

THE Motion Picture Protective Association has mapped out a hard battle for itself in this section, but from the formation of the organization several months ago the officials have accomplished wonders and with the hard workers still at the head the organization bids fair to handle the work of the motion picture business in this section in the best manner possible.

Realizing that they were about to get the worst end of a bad deal and that some nigger was in the political woodpile at Harrisburg, the motion picture men in this section went to work with a will and organized.

The main object of the organization was to fight the battles of the motion picture men of this section against the unjust legislation regarding a state censorship on motion pictures. The local men thought that a national censorship was all that should be necessary and the other was none other than a graft job that should not be tolerated.

They joined hands right at the start and the fight is now on and will be waged to a finish, each man getting in touch with the state senator from his section and getting all the influence possible brought to bear on the representatives and political adherents to have the bill killed. They have made considerable headway and will see to it that no stone is left unturned that will result in putting a stop to the bill if possible.

THE state leagues are competent to handle the situation, according to the members of the local organization if they are willing to unite and use their efforts in that direction as in that manner they would bring to bear a powerful influence on the men at Harrisburg in the two legislative bodies, but each acting on its own initiative, they feel that little good can be accomplished.

The local organization will work hand-in-hand with any or all of the organizations in the state and will do their utmost in getting the result or having the measure that means so much to local exhibitors killed.

If the bill is permitted to stand it will wipe out of existence many of the smaller motion picture houses in this section. Many of the houses are in small store rooms and these men will be hit the hardest. They are not in a position to give all the space needed for aisles. They find that the censorship will increase the cost of their shows and work many hardships on them.

THE officers are putting forth their efforts in trying to get the various leagues in the state to unite into one solid front so that the greatest good can be accomplished. By uniting they will put up a battle that will produce the desired effect.

Already the taxes paid by the motion picture men in this section are more than they should be. A mercantile tax is charged, then the city and county come in for another share of the receipts of the house and this, with the high cost of films, labor and all the other incidental expenses connected with the motion picture business, makes the burden hard to bear for the little fellows.

The officers of the organization are in Harrisburg and will do their best to have the organizations all over the state join hands in this fight and later, if it is possible, consolidate into one big organization which will mean that much more protection to the motion picture men all over Pennsylvania. FALL PICTURE SEASON BEGINS EARLY

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 12.

That August is the best month in the year for motion picture houses is the contention of George D. Curtiss, owner and manager of the Happy Hour Theatre, on St. Paul street.

Mr. Curtiss believes that folks are tired of going to the parks by that time, and with no school for the young folks, and most of them coming back to town, he says that motion pictures should do the largest business of their entire history this month.

Cool nights also help, he says. That the month of August really marks the opening of the fall season, instead of September, is his belief, and he is planning to put some extra attractions.

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 13.

CONSIDERABLE feeling has been aroused between the motion picture men here and the city officials over the display of motion pictures in the public parks every night under the auspices of the Birmingham Playgrounds and Recreation Association.

The right for the display of motion pictures has been given to a local advertising agency, which pays no license as a motion picture operator. This agency shows the pictures in the parks free every night, but through its sale of advertisements which are thrown on the screens at regular intervals the agency is said to be making a very large profit out of the enterprise.

Picture men state that the free pictures in the parks hurt their business. A. Alex Wall, manager of the Alcazar Theatre, states that the business has been cut down 25 per cent since the showing of the free pictures in the parks. Other picture men state their business has been hurt, but not that much. Mr. Wall has conferred several times with President George Ward of the city commission, asking that the advertising man be made to pay a motion picture license, but Mr. Ward has refused to act on the suggestion. What further action will be taken remains to be decided.

THE motion picture has become a valued phase of playground and recreation work in Birmingham. There are seventeen parks organized into a playground association, each park being under a playground supervisor, who directs the games and amusements of the children. General Recreation Manager Z. Nespor, of the association, started the motion picture idea on July 4, when general Fourth of July celebrations were held in the parks without fireworks.

In the afternoon games were played and in the evening motion pictures were shown out in the open. Mr. Nespor has secured one or two motion picture machines and states he intends to secure more of them, making free pictures a feature of the evening amusements in the parks during the summer. The idea has taken hold of the people very strongly. Especially the poorer classes show great interest in the open-air exhibitions in the public parks and have turned out to everyone of them in large crowds. The city of Birmingham is paying particular attention to playground and recreation work this summer, and it seems that the motion picture idea is one of the most popular which has been hit upon.

Motion picture men state they would not object to the free shows in the parks if they were given under the auspices of the city and no outsider were allowed to come in and make money out of it, or if so, to charge him a regular motion picture show license. Ralph R. Silver.

Features Pull Crowds in Springfield, Mass.

Many of the Biggest New England Theatres Will Probably Show an All-Picture Program in the Fall

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 13.

THE Broadway Theatre, with a capacity of 2,600, turned away hundreds daily all week when they showed "The Drug Terror." The overflow filled all the theatres in the neighborhood. So great were the throngs that a special showing was given the last three evenings, beginning at 10 o'clock.

In Springfield the populace is "Million-Dollar-Mystery" mad, there being eight showings each week. The demand for repetition is so great that in some places they have signed a contract to reproduce the scenes.

Dame Rumor says that many of the largest theatres in New England are to show straight pictures this fall. It would be a breach of confidence to name them at this writing, but there will certainly be some surprises.

BERT MORIARITY, the owner of the Gem Theatre, Chicopee Falls, Mass., is at the head of a number of sporting men arranging a welcome home for Arthur Pelky, a native son, who has gained quite some fame as a pugilist.

Ben B. Sullivan, manager and owner of the 2,200 seat New Empire Theatre, at North Adams, Mass., recently died. His loss will be felt by all theatrical men in western Massachusetts. He was the senior member of the Sullivan Bros.' theatrical enterprises.

Raymond Dunnell, who owns a number of picture houses throughout New England, has recently taken over the Convent Hall Theatre at Gilbertville, Mass. Mr. Dunnell formerly was a motion picture actor and did most of his work before the camera in California.

The League and the Exhibitor

By S. L. Rothapfel

(Editor's Note.—The manager of the Strand Theatre, New York City, needs no introduction to the exhibitors of the country. He stands for the best element in the business. In an exclusive interview to The Motion Picture News Mr. Rothapfel explains what organization means to him, and how the Motion Picture Exhibitors League can command the support of the nation's exhibitors. It is worth reading. It is worth heeding. Best of all, Mr. Rothapfel's requirements of what an exhibitors' league should be bid fair to be realized under the present regime.)

THE first principles of successful exhibiting apply equally to the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America.

An exhibitor, to be successful, must be possessed of a purpose, a system, and business ability. The same three general headings will lead the National League, or any other organization or enterprise to success, providing that it is founded on a legitimate, practical basis.

I had paid little or no attention to league matters until several weeks ago, when the amalgamation activities which transpired at the Dayton convention were brought to my attention by The Motion Picture News. Reasons for my lack of interest in league matters are obvious. I had opportunity to watch and study league activities while conducting the Lyric Theatre at Minneapolis.

I also took part in several campaigns against legalized censorship, and two or three other issues then confronting that state body. What was accomplished then, and how, are matters of history.

BUT the most discouraging part of the experience of that time, where the state and national leagues were concerned, was the appalling lack of co-operation and interest among the members. Those exhibitors who were not active in their state organization, or the National League, scoffed when they were asked to give their aid.

Many of the working members were more or less involved in the political battles fought beneath the surface of the organizations. They did not seem to know how to tackle the propositions.

Until a short time ago I had never heard of any definite platform advanced by the National League for the benefit of its members. Rumors of wonderful organization work, transpiring in all parts of the United States, were frequent. "Great" conventions were launched, and patronized by a corporal's guard of exhibitors. Perhaps there were reasons for the many significant contrasts between prophecies and actual accomplishments.

There are hundreds of practical, hard headed business men operating motion picture theatres. They are men to whom time represents money. An hour or a day is invested in the same manner as a sum of money. They insist upon seeing something tangible and profitable as the goal for their efforts.

They are men who have had to perfect their own organizations; study out their own problems; meet adversity in many forms, and classify initiative, perseverance and originality as their chief assets.

They are the men who will never be led to membership in any organization which does not have a definite purpose, a tangible working system, an ambition to accomplish things. Again, there are many exhibitors—practical in every sense of the word, and acknowledged successes—who have given time, money and thought to their city, state, or the National League. Together they have paved the way for greater things.

IT seems to me that the time is ripe for a genuine trade organization of exhibitors, so solidly welded together, and so firmly established that political legislation, municipal ordinances, or the great grafting bodies operating under the guise of philanthropic societies, welfare leagues, and uplift associations will be eliminated entirely from the list of liabilities confronting every theatre owner.

I am basing my statement upon the method of handling the average business problem when I saw that the one, real common-sense method of procedure for the organization of every city and state league, and the national body, should begin by determining a purpose. Then comes the analysis of that purpose.

In its essentials it should be to protect the exhibiting industry as a whole, fight every form of antagonism, promote the interests of each exhibitor by placing him, through the league, in close and frequent contact with other members, bring about, through official investigation and action, better relations between themselves, the exchanges and manufacturers, seek legislation advantageous to the interests of the members, and protect the theatre owners to the greatest possible extent.

SUCH action would be giving value received. Not every exhibitor would have occasion to call upon the league for assistance or protection, but from those who would find it necessary to do so would come ample assurance to the more fortunate of his fellows that the time, energy and money they were devoting to the organization was well invested.

I am heartily in favor of league operations such as have been outlined to me recently. There is nothing that will do this business more good, in both a general and specific way, than a harmoniously working National League, conducted to work for the best interests of all.

And the big fellows, those who control chains of theatres, and operate on an extensive scale, will not hesitate long before lending their absolute support to such a body.

IF there is anything that I can do personally it will be a pleasure.

And my acquaintance permits me to state that there are a great many others who will jump into the thick of the work of organization and building the moment they are assured that the national body means business, in a business-like way.

There are no serious obstacles in the way of which I have been able to learn. It seems to be a proposition of defining a purpose, and then arousing a latent interest in a great number of exhibitors. This, perhaps, can best be accomplished by making a real effort to convince and show them that the league is going to give them their money's worth in more ways than one.

After that, it is a matter of doing it!

The European War and American Films

By M. H. Schoenbaum

Opportunity to Develop American Films Without Fear of Serious Competition is Excellent, But Caution and Moderation Should Be Used—Raw Film Need Not Rise in Price; All Materials Necessary for Its Manufacture Are to Be Had in This Country

WILL the European war do any harm to the motion picture industry in America? is a question the answer to which might be rather puzzling but in no way alarming.

The first effect of the European war will be to stop the import of a great part of European films. There will, however, be no famine of European drama or comedy. The American market is already flooded with them, and the European representatives here are in position to supply negatives for a certain time, should the war last much longer. The only scarcity to be felt, possibly in the very near future, will be in the "weeklies."

After an attempt to show all military scenes of the old collection which we have already seen, the "weeklies" will have to be restricted to views taken mostly in the United States. From the moral point of view, the result will be quite interesting enough for America, as the war in the old world will give the people here, whether American citizens or foreigners, an excellent opportunity to become acquainted with the beautiful spots which are to be found on the immense ground covered by the shadow of the stars and stripes.

As regards the exhibitor, it may be said that he never had a better chance to develop schemes for making local pictures himself, and I really fail to see a reason why the combined efforts of the exhibitor and manufacturer should not succeed in consoling the public, temporarily at least, of its loss in variety.

THE European war will help the American manufacturer to some extent, because all the printing and other operations for preparing the positive film will have to be done here, but the manufacturer will have to be careful and not lose his head by engaging fresh capital, building big factories and carelessly increasing the staff if he can get along without too many changes. The wheel might turn backwards and the manufacturer be caught within the gearing. We must base no great hopes on possible advantages resulting from the motion picture trade from the European trouble.

The market, which suffers already from over-production, could not stand many more burdens, and it would be foolish to continue a policy of overproduction with the childish belief that the public here will no more care for foreign pictures after it gets used to the national product. One must be very naïve to believe such stories. The whole success of the motion picture art is due to its infinite resources and variety. Also, it enables us to see things which could hardly be seen otherwise. The cinematographic industry is one that will always be associated with the two words import and export.

I am convinced that as soon as the war is over and that foreign pictures are imported again into the United States, the American public, while being extremely patriotic, will be glad to see all good foreign films. Who will dare blame them for it? The situation must be looked upon as it really is and will be after the war.

The exhibitor will by no means be affected by the changing conditions. There is no reason for the film to increase or decrease in price. All the materials composing the raw film are to be had in the United States. Should there be a change, it can only be entirely in favor of the exhibitor.

THE main body entering into the production of raw film is made from cotton, and cotton is now at extremely low prices. All other products and chemicals employed in the film are principally derived from wood, and there is no lack of wood yet in the United States.

Gelatine, which is also used in the manufacture of raw film, will certainly not rise very high, although photographic gelatine has long been a specialty of German manufacturers. The only difficulty in obtaining gelatine which can be mixed with the photographic sensitive chemicals lies in its handling. The German manufacturers buy most of their gelatine in France and resell it after it has been treated by a certain process which makes it as clean, white and transparent as possible. The water with which the gelatine is treated is also of great importance, and influences the quality of the final product. But we have just as good water in the United States, and there is no reason why it should not give as good results as that of Schweinfurt and Hoechst.

It must be expected that certain products will increase in price, owing to the scarcity caused by the war; those products have hitherto been provided by European firms and it will now be impossible to get them before the European situation is settled. But all the material which is employed for raw film is to be had in the United States, and there is no reason for any change. Not only is the necessary material for making film easily obtained here, but most of the European manufacturers have often asked the American market to provide them with raw material.

SHOULD any rise occur, it could be explained by the fact that the American manufacturers, having been compelled to stop shipments of film to Europe, where it cannot be utilized, are trying to avoid bearing their European deficit by charging it on the shoulders of the American consumer.

On the other hand, the general European conflagration will affect the market as would a modification of the recent tariff, which allows all imports of raw film to come in free of duty, in view of the fact that all European film-makers are busy killing each other. All possible competition ceased and the price of film is left to the sole discretion of the American manufacturer.

There are great quantities of gelatine available now, since the recent laws have forbidden its sale under the denomination of "jelly"; but the sort of gelatine sold as jam, jelly, etc., will not suit photographic purposes before it is purified.

EDESON GIVES DINNER TO NOTABLES

Robert Edeson, in honor of Jesse L. Lasky and Mrs. Samuel Goldfish, who are now at the Lasky studios, Hollywood, Cal., gave a dinner on July 29, at which were present H. B. Warner, Rita Stanwood, Theodore Roberts, Edward Abeles, Cecil B. De Mille, Mrs. H. C. De Mille, Mr. and Mrs. Max Figman, Mr. and Mrs. James Neil, Charles Richman, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Apfel, Winifred Kingston and Bessie Barsicale.

WASH FILMS IN MOUNTAIN STREAM

Reports from the Commercial Motion Picture Company, Grantwood, N. J., indicate the perfect condition of the films recently turned out by that concern.

The water in which the films are washed comes direct from mountain springs, enabling the manufacturers to put their product through a thorough cleansing process.

An officer of the company, in estimating the amount of work his company can turn out, declares that it has a record of 75,000 feet a day.

DELAY IN EMPIRE STATE FUSION PLANS

Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New York State Fails to Send Delegates to "Harmony" Meeting—Later Organization Passes Resolution Providing for Resignation of Officers and It Is Read Over the Phone to A. N. Wolff—He Turns It Down

THE meeting planned for the discussion of the best means for promoting harmony and bringing about amalgamation between the members of Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, of New York state, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, of New York state, was held at the Hotel Marlborough-Blenheim, New York City, on August 11, but no delegates from the league were present.

The session opened at 11:30 a. m., and with the exception of an hour's recess between 2:00 and 3:00, lasted well into the afternoon. Samuel H. Trigger, president of the New York City body, presided.

The following members of the executive committee of the association appointed to attend the meeting were present: Samuel H. Trigger, ex-officio; William A. Douque, of Utica, N. Y., secretary; W. H. Linton, Little Falls, N. Y., treasurer; B. E. Cornell, Syracuse, N. Y.; John F. Miller, Buffalo, N. Y.; Harold W. Rosenthal, New York City, and L. C. Smith, Schenectady, N. Y.

Five Delegates From Cinema Club

Five delegates, comprising the committee sent by the Cinema Club of the Bronx, the local branch of the league, sent to confer with the New York City organization, were as follows:

Messrs. Feinblatt, Harris and Deegan, Maurice Fleischman, and Tobias Keppler.

The Rochester delegation, headed by President A. N. Wolff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, of the state of New York, upon whose action everything depended for carrying out the fusion plan, failed to appear.

Rochester Not Represented

The absence of the Rochester committee was forecast in a letter received by Samuel H. Trigger, on August 8, from Frank Pierce, of Geneva, the vice-president of the league.

Mr. Pierce wrote to the effect that he had received from Mr. Wolff a wire stating the impossibility of getting the league men together for attendance at the executive session of the two organizations at the Marlborough Hotel, in New York City, on August 11. He declared that he would get in touch with Mr. Pierce on the subject as soon as possible.

The discussion as to the best means of bringing about fusion of the two bodies in spite of the handicap imposed upon the meeting by the absence of Mr. Wolff proceeded at once after the closed session of the executive board at the Marlborough.

William A. Douque, secretary of the New York State Association, introduced a motion for the drawing up of a resolution which should further amalgamation. It was seconded by John F. Miller, of Buffalo, and carried.

Asks Resignation of Officers

The resolution, drawn up by L. C. Smith, of Schenectady, was as follows:

That whereas the resolution passed at the Dayton Convention evidenced the desire of all motion picture exhibitors in the United States of having only one National Organization, now,

THEREFORE, to consummate that purpose the State Organization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of N. Y., herewith tender the resignation of all their officers to become effective only after there is but one state organization. The members of the State organization of the International Association are willing to attend a special meeting of the State Organization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors L. of A., the program of which shall only be as follows:

The meeting to be opened by the State Chairman. A committee to be appointed, two from the Exhibitors League and two from the Motion Picture Association, this committee to pass upon the qualifications of the representatives permitted to participate in the meeting. The representation to be upon the basis of the Ohio State Constitution of the M. P. E. L. of A. After the qualification of the delegates have been passed upon the following resolution is to be offered:

WHEREAS it is the intention of all exhibitors in the State of New York to have but one State Organization,

NOW, THEREFORE, be it RESOLVED, that the members of such State Organization shall consist of the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America and the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Ass'n. of the State of New York. That the resignations of all officers of both the League and the Association shall then be tendered and accepted and a new election held.

Resolution Read Over Phone

It was seconded by W. H. Linton, of Little Falls, the treasurer of the New York State organization.

A recess was then taken for the purpose of allowing time for the executive body to get A. N. Wolff, president of the state league on the wire in Buffalo. The amalgamation resolution was read to Mr. Wolff, but he refused to endorse the proposal or accede to the request that he call a meeting for the purpose of furthering the affiliation of the two bodies.

Mr. Wolff's stand was made known to the delegates upon their reconvening for the afternoon session, and a resolution was passed for the purpose of informing President Pearce, of the National League, of the action of Mr. Wolff.

Letter Sent to Pearce

The resolution was as follows:

WHEREAS, as T. A. Keppler, representing John J. Wittman, president of the New York Local of the New York State League, having telephoned to the President of the State League, A. N. Wolff, that representatives of ninety per cent of the State exhibitors being present and showing a desire to get together, and

WHEREAS, Mr. Wolff distinctly refused to call a meeting for that purpose and lend his good offices to assist in becoming one large body, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, that the motion be carried and the amendment placed on the minutes and forwarded to the president of the National League.

A motion was then introduced by L. C. Smith as follows:

That a letter be sent to National President Pearce stating what had been done here this morning and also a copy of the letter which will be sent to Mr. Wolff, president of the State Organization, stating our suggestions for amalgamation.

The motion was unanimously approved.

Raise Salary of Secretary

A vote was taken on the resolution of L. C. Smith for the increase of the salary of the secretary, William A. Douque, to five hundred dollars a year. The resolution was carried. This sum includes office expenses.

The report of the treasurer on the profit of the exhibition held under the auspices of the association was read and accepted by the members of the executive body.

The meeting then adjourned.

CAPITAL EXCHANGE MAN WEDS

Washington, D. C., Aug. 13.

A wedding was a recent event in the local family of the World Film Corporation, when Alex G. Irvine, assistant manager and son of Wm. H. Irvine, manager of the Washington offices, married Miss Grace Collins. The new couple is at present in the city receiving congratulations. Mr. Irvine has just returned from a lengthy trip through western North Carolina and he reports excellent business in that section.

UNIVERSAL MEN IN WAR ZONE

A cablegram just received from the Universal London offices by Jack Cohn, manager of the "Animated Weekly," states that eight cameramen have just been dispatched into the European war zone armed with passports and letters of introduction. These men will take special scenes to be incorporated into the Universal Weekly.

Many of the men who are engaged in this work are veterans, having served time with the camera in the Balkan War.

NOTED YIDDISH ACTRESS TO APPEAR IN FILMS

The first appearance on the screen of Madam Sarah Adler will be in the role of Laura in "Sins of the Parents,"

MADAME SARAH ADLER

the latest production of Ivan Film Productions, Inc.

As a tragedienne on the Yiddish stage, Mme. Adler has an imposing array of triumphs to her credit.

Her manager, Ivan Abramson, has written the scenario of "Sins of the Parents." The picture is announced for immediate release.

WARNER'S IN HAVANA

The first feature film concern to arrange to cover the Cuban territory is Warner's Features, Inc., which is about to open an exchange in Havana.

The man directly in charge of the new exchange will be George Davis, who for some time has been connected with Warner's New York exchange, while Jacques Spiegel, manager of the New York exchange, will have direction of the enterprise.

As Warner's Features have proved remarkably successful in European countries, as well as at home, it seems to be a foregone conclusion that they will meet with equal success in Latin America, which is at present a virgin field for American films.

MINDIL IN PUBLICITY FIELD

Philip Mindil, formerly at the head of the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation, has opened a general publicity office in the Times Building, New York City. Associated with him is R. A. Doman.

Mr. Mindil is well known as an experienced publicist.

Clowns Will Caper in Horsley Comedies

But the Management of the Big Amusement House Declares That the Fun-makers Are Still Under Contract and Threatens an Injunction

THE Centaur Film Company, Bayonne, N. J., has signed up the Hippodrome clowns, but it is said that an injunction will be asked restraining the fun-makers from appearing on the screen, and David Horsley, president of the Centaur Company, from showing the pictures that have already been made. The Hippodrome claims that two of the clowns, Tommie Mullens and Harry La Pearl, are under long-time contracts to the Hippodrome. The clowns claim that they are protected by a two weeks' clause in their contracts, and that they will fight to a finish. Frank "Spook" Hanson and three other clowns are concerned in the exodus to picture land.

Tommie Mullens is one of the best-known pantomimists in the world, having been featured with Fred Karno's English Pantomime Company, "A Night in an English Music Hall," "The London Fire Brigade," "Hanlon's Superbas," and others.

Harry La Pearl is the leading circus clown of the United States and as principal producing clown with Barnum and Bailey, and the Ringling Brothers' Shows, and the New York Hippodrome, has probably aroused more laughter during the last five years than any one man alive.

"Spook" Hanson also enjoys an international reputation as a silent comedian.

Jimmie Hyland, the funny man with "Bersac's pony and unridable mule, Maude," act and George Zammett, late of the famous dollar troupe of Rizley acrobats, one of the oldest clowns in the circus world, and twenty other crack clowns, picked from the Sells-Floto and Wirth Brothers' Australian Shows, complete the troupe.

War Calls Pathe Executives and Employees

Arthur Roussel and L. P. Bonvillain Respond to the Call—Camera Men, Actors and Directors in Jersey Plant Also Go

AT least one large American corporation has felt the burden of war in the loss of employees and that is the American branch of the great French house of Pathé Frères. Though the majority of the employees in this country are Americans there are, as natural, a number of Frenchmen in different departments, chief of whom are the ranking officers of the company, Arthur Roussel and L. P. Bonvillain, the two vice presidents.

When the call went out from the French Consul in New York for reservists to return to the colors, practically all of these Frenchmen received the call. Mr. Bonvillain, who is lieutenant in the French army, has sailed to rejoin his regiment. Mr. Roussel is ill with pneumonia and the news of the war has been kept from him for fear of aggravating an already serious condition.

Mr. Bardet, the cashier, has sent his two sons who sailed on the "Lorraine." With them were Mr. Monca, lieutenant in the French army, and son of chief director Monca, of the Vincennes Studio, various office clerks, cameramen, actors, directors and men in every department.

The Commercial Buys New Machinery

Thoroughly Equipped Plant at Grantwood, N. J., Working on Full time—Laboratory Has 100,000 a Day Capacity

A VISIT to the laboratory of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company, Inc., at Grantwood, N. J., last week, reveals a plant that is a model of neatness and thorough in every respect. All the machinery formerly in the plant of the company at 102 West 101st Street, New York, was disposed of and entirely new machinery put in at Grantwood.

The first floor is devoted to the dark room, tinting and toning rooms. The second floor contains the drying, polishing, and title rooms. The third floor contains the scenic artist's room, and the top floor, the property room.

Independent and separate from the main structure is a steel-lined negative vault, and a separate vault for prints. The factory is dust-proof and contains a vacuum system, the installation of which was under the personal direction of Charles Hirliman, the superintendent of the laboratory.

The cellar floor contains the chemical room, assembling and joining rooms. The structure is of concrete and is fireproof and contains a thorough sprinkler system. The laboratory has a capacity of 100,000 feet a day.

CINCINNATI EXHIBITORS BALK AT PRICE SCALE

Managers of Big Houses Decline to Limit Price to Three Reels for Five Cents, as Demanded by Small Owners—Talk of Division Into Classes Among Local Men—New Operators' Scale Goes Into Effect for Two Years

Cincinnati, Aug. 12.

AFFAIRS of the Cincinnati local, Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, have become somewhat involved. Topographical conditions here are responsible for some of the dissension which has stirred up the league recently.

Because of the fact that the city is cut up into many little communities located on the hilltops to the north, east and west, interests of the exhibitors in the several communities are diversified.

F. L. Emmert, Sr., president of the league, said recently that the motion picture interests of Cincinnati might be properly divided into four departments as follows:

The uptown exhibitors, the downtown exhibitors, the large exhibitors and the small exhibitors.

Differ Over Scale of Prices

Dissension was provoked at a recent league meeting when a number of the small exhibitors submitted a resolution which would fix three reels as the limit to be shown in Cincinnati for five cents. The large exhibitors refused to stand by this resolution, because their business is such that they can afford to put on six or seven reels in order to get the crowds. The houses in the heart of the city especially opposed the resolution.

"It is very evident that exhibitors in Cincinnati are divided on many questions," said Charles Weigel, manager of the Alhambra Theatre. "I believe the separating of the classes of exhibitors might be beneficial to all. The operators of large houses can well afford to take on expenses to combat adverse legislation and to carry out other plans to their interest, which the smaller exhibitor could not do.

"For this reason it would be unfair to assess the small exhibitor his share of the expenses in a big campaign, for the expense to him might be injurious while the larger exhibitor would scarcely feel it. It is a problem here in Cincinnati, by reason of our locations, which can only be solved when the exhibitors are classified and band together according to their classification."

Operators Put Through New Rates

Because of the dissension in the league no action could be taken on the new wage scale submitted by Local 165 of the Motion Picture and Projection Machine Operators Protective Union.

The operators, however, solved the problem in their own way.

They visited every exhibitor individually and secured the signatures of them all to an agreement for two years to pay operators in accordance with the new scale, which ranges from $1.50 to $9 increase a week. The new scale went into effect August 1 and is as follows:

Section 1. Picture theatres running four hours or less nightly shall require the service of one (1) operator, who shall receive sixteen dollars ($16.00) per week, and shall receive one dollar and fifty ($1.50) cents for any matinee, same not to exceed three and a half (3½) hours. Where continuous performance is given with matinee, the operator shall have supper relief, same to be paid one dollar ($1.00).

Section 2. Picture theatres running eleven (11) hours continuously daily shall employ two (2) operators, working split shift, each to receive eighteen dollars ($18.00) per week, overtime to be paid for at the rate of seventy-five cents (75c) per hour or fraction thereof.

Section 3. Picture theatres running fourteen hours (14 hours) continuously daily shall employ two (2) operators, working split shift, each to receive twenty-two dollars and fifty cents ($22.50) per week, overtime to be paid for at the rate of seventy-five cents (75c) per hour, or fraction thereof.

Section 4. Theatres running daily matinee and night performance, where the general admission is not over ten cents (10c), shall require the service of one (1) operator, he to receive twenty-two dollars and fifty cents ($22.50) per week, rehearsals included, seven hours (7) to constitute a day's work.

Section 5. Theatres running daily matinee and night performance, where general admission is over ten cents (10c), shall require one (1) operator, he to receive twenty-four dollars and fifty cents ($24.50) per week, rehearsals included, and shall receive one dollar and seventy-five cents ($1.75) for any extra performance.

Section 6. Houses running continuously afternoon and night shall have supper relief, same to be paid one dollar ($1.00).

Section 7. All overtime to be paid for at the rate of seventy-five cents (75c) per hour or fraction thereof.

Section 8. In theatres not coming under this schedule, or theatres opening Saturday and Sunday only, or entertainments and special work, the salary shall be set by the executive board.

Section 9. All operators must report fifteen (15) minutes before show time.

Section 10. Any change of operators contemplated, one week's notice shall be required from either party. No exception from the above rule shall be considered unless satisfactorily agreed upon between employer and this local.

Milwaukee Exhibitor Acts as Own Censor

Otto Meister Stops Run of Picture After Seeing It on His Screen and Notifies Censor Board of His Action

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 12.

THAT little or no necessity exists in this city for a censor board to handle the situation amongst the established exhibitors was shown Friday, when Otto Meister, owner and manager of the Vaudette Theatre, on his own volition took off a feature entitled "Lieut. Daring," which he had heavily advertised.

Mr. Meister saw the picture at the second morning show and, discovering that it was but a series of sensationalism with plenty of gun play, robbery, etc., and that it taught no moral lesson, he ordered it out of his program. After taking it off, he called up Charles Phillipps, of the local censor board, and told him of his action. Mr. Phillipps heartily commended him and told him that he had the backing of the local board.

It was on account of the Vaudette Theatre that much of the agitation that finally resulted in the forming of the Citizens' Censorship Committee was based, some of the would-be reformers even going so far as to point out the Vaudette as a sort of horrible example of what picture theatres would be without censorship of the pictures shown.

Despite the fact that the Vaudette is still showing the same type of picture that it showed at the time of the censorship agitation it has never had any trouble with the censor board, which has from the start approved of its program. Mr. Meister's move in censoring his own picture will no doubt take most of the wind out of the sails of the "reformers" in Milwaukee. It is to be hoped so, at any rate.

National Board Plans Big Campaign

Number of Branches Will Be Extended to Fifty Throughout the United States—New Signed and Copyrighted Stamp to Appear on All Approved Films—Commission Expects to Familiarize the Public with Insignia—Sees Effective Check on Legalized Censorship

TO extend the work of the National Board of Censorship to fifty centers throughout the United States through local, unsalaried committees, working in harmony with it; to reach one hundred per cent efficiency in censoring films; to adopt a new signed and copyrighted stamp, the authorized use of which is forgery; to popularize this stamp through an advertising and publicity campaign; through this campaign to combat legalized censorship of any and all kinds, and to secure broader financial support is the program undertaken for the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures, by J. W. Binder, who is well known in the trade as a student of the art from the standpoint of a specialist in organization.

Mr. Binder when seen recently at the office of the National board, 70 Fifth avenue, said:

"Two things menace the solid growth of the motion picture. They are, in the order of their importance, legalized censorship whether federal, state or municipal, and, second, bad pictures. I mean bad from a moral, not an artistic, standpoint.

"To be sure, fundamentally, the two are one. If there were no bad pictures put out by irresponsible producers, the clamor raised by politicians and reformers for legalized censorship would have no point.

Fallacy of Local Censorship

"My study of the work of the national board shows that the number of pictures the board has passed about which there was any question at all, is so small a percentage of the whole number passed upon, as to be entirely negligible.

"It is from the small number of pictures which are not submitted to the board—their makers well knowing that they would be condemned—that 99 per cent of the criticism comes which is eagerly seized upon by the politicians as an excuse for the creation of a local legalized censor board with its desirable concomitants of fat fees, and other indirect 'emoluments' and possibilities. If this small number of pictures could be brought under the jurisdiction of the national board and either condemned or remade until fit to be shown, there is no doubt but that local censorship would die a natural death in a very little while.

"To bring about this very desirable end is the prime object of the campaign which I have undertaken for the national board. In working it out, no untried "theories" will be used. Every step has been proven by actually organizing similar committees in widely separated centers throughout the United States.

JACOB W. BINDER

"These committees have been organized for from one month to one and a half years, and it is safe to use the results obtained as fair examples of what can be achieved by this plan when it shall have been extended to cover the United States.

The Situation in Milwaukee

"In Milwaukee about a year ago there was created a local body recruited from the membership of the City Club, Chamber of Commerce, with representation from the motion picture exhibitors, and civic and religious societies. This committee, serving without pay, receives the weekly bulletin of the national board and almost without exception accepts the films the board has passed without question. In case of complaint, however, the film is at once investigated.

"The committee concentrates its efforts upon the films advertised to appear in the local houses which have not been passed by the national board. If any of these are objectionable the theatre owner or the producer is called before the board and the film is either ordered off or it is changed so as to come up to the well established standards of the national board, which have been adopted as the standards of the local committee. This committee is appointed by the mayor and its work has the hearty endorsement and co-operation of the University of Wisconsin.

"So satisfactory has been this plan to all concerned that there has been no agitation for legalized censorship anywhere in the state of Wisconsin. Like committees have been organized in New York, Kansas City, Nashville, Portland, Oregon, Omaha, Los Angeles, and in Fort Worth and Houston, Texas.

"In neither of these cities is there any agitation for local legalized censorship. So the plan works. And if it works in these places, is it unreasonable to predict that it will be just as efficient in any one of the other cities throughout the United States?

"To bring this about under the direction of the national board and to provide funds for doing it, is therefore one of the prime objects of the campaign.

To Provide a Publicity Fund

"The second thing which we shall aim to do, is to provide a fund for carrying on a campaign of publicity, through the media of the trade press, the magazine and the 23,000 newspapers of the United States, exposing the fallacies of legalized censorship; giving illustrations of the injustice it inflicts on the producer, distributor and exhibitor of motion pictures; showing its cost to the public, which must in the end bear the increased cost of marketing films.

"At the same time the splendidly conducted work of the national board will be shown and the merits of its constructive criticism compared with that of the so-called legal censor, who is not permitted to say what should be done if he were able to do so; but must confine himself to saying what must not be done and what must not be shown.

"A distinct feature of this publicity campaign will be to teach the millions who see the new signed stamp of the board, on the screen, what that insignia stands for."

GOLDIN LEAVES COMPANY

Sidney Goldin, who has been at the head of the Goldin Feature Film Company, has left that firm.

In the future he can be found in his new offices, 12, Broadway Theatre Building, New York.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "The Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "The Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

GIVING AWAY NICKELS TO GET BUSINESS

THE C. F. Mensing Amusement Company owns six picture houses in Leavenworth, Kan., and operates four of them. As a business getter for the Lyceum, their newest theatre, Carl Mensing, president and general manager, has hit upon a rather unusual scheme.

To start the ball rolling, he sent out about a thousand letters to a selected list of possible patrons and in each letter a new Buffalo-head nickel was enclosed.

The mailing envelope bore in huge red letters, the single word, "Lost." Inside was found a card bearing the inscription:

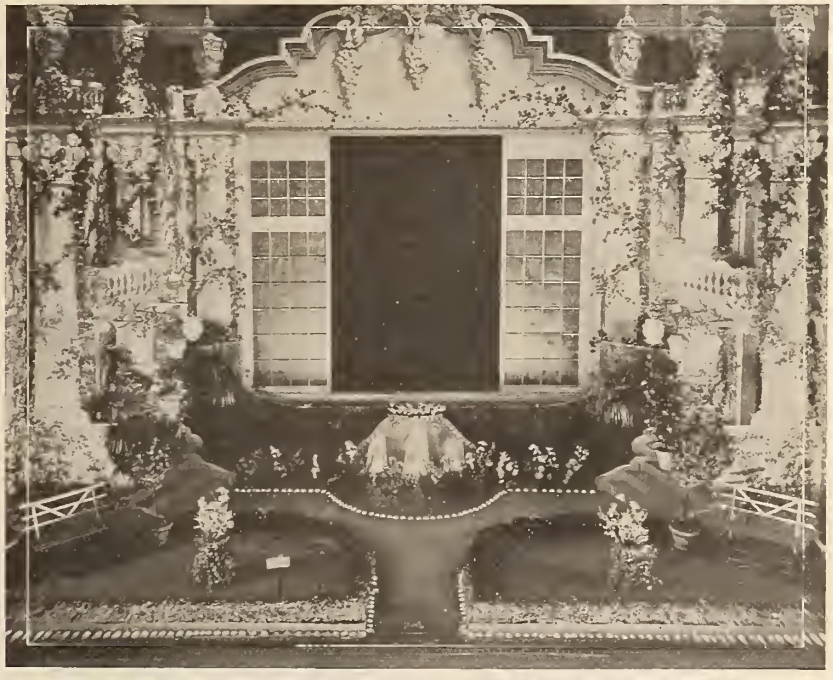
FOUND!
A cool, comfortable theatre with the "Mutual Movies."

Come Just Once Anyway,
Here's the Price.
Lyceum Theatre,
"Chuck" Townsend, Manager.
Opens Sunday, June 21st.

Glued to the card was a five-cent piece. Mr. Mensing has found that to be one of the most successful drawing cards he yet had used.

"PSYCHOLOGICAL"

GEORGE FISCHER, manager of Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, is a firm believer in the psychological effect of the surroundings upon the minds of his patrons.



With this end in view he has equipped his theatre throughout with white seat covers and has fitted out all of the house attachés with pure white uniforms.

The result is that the Alhambra theatre presents a cool and delightful appearance to the eye of the patron, and this, says Manager Fischer, is half the battle towards a cool theatre in the summertime.

Though the cost is nominal the results have even at this early date proved most gratifying. It is expected that before the summer is over the seat covers and uniforms will have paid for themselves many times over.

GARDENING ON A THEATRE STAGE

THE stage at the Strand Theatre, on Market street, Newark, N. J., has been metamorphosed into a Japanese fairy garden. Japanese flowers spread their fragrance through the house. Japanese birds and butterflies flutter about, their gay plumage vying in iridescence with the sparkling colors of the electric fountain.

THE GARDEN ON THE STAGE OF THE STRAND, NEWARK, N. J.

Sand-covered walks lead from the beautiful French chateau's porticoes at each side of the stage to the fountain, which sends forth its scented streams high up into the air in the background, behind which is seen the charming façade of the central wall of the chateau.

The Japanese garden was designed by Jules Gerstle, the assistant manager of the theatre. To add to the realism of the park-like effect, a sign, "Keep Off the Grass," has been put up. It is the only thing about the garden that is not essentially Japanese.

An entirely new program was recently presented at the Strand, with a leading feature, the sensational six-reel photoplay, "Fire and Sword." This is a thrilling story of war and adventure in the Orient. An army of native Arabs, United State marines, artillery and wireless telegraphy are used to save one American girl.

A series of the Thanhouser serial, "The Million Dollar Mystery," the story of which was published in the "Evening Star," was shown to a large audience. Also another fine feature, called "'Neath the Lion's Paw," and a new number was presented in the shape of Miss Jeanne Martell, a gifted soprano, who rendered high-class and popular selections.

QUICK ACTION ADVERTISING

MANAGER H. KAISER, of the Boise, Idaho, proprietor of the theatre which bears his name, believes that the advertising that pays best is that which catches the eye of the public the quickest, and places a thought in their mind which compels them to act quickly. It was with this thought in mind that he designed the attractive front to his theatre, which is largely mirror glass with hundreds of colored electric lights as a finishing touch.

Mr. Kaiser has his mirrors so arranged that a small amount of advertising in front of the house shows up to good advantage, for instance, two entrances of his theatre containing classy pictures of scenes from the show, and does a great deal of hotel lobby advertising, and also places pictures in banks and prominent business houses of Boise.

A CONDENSER MYSTERY

A Motion Picture News representative, while in conversation with the manager of a large upstate theatre, recently learned a new scheme for reducing the breakage of condensers.

The operator invariably reported a broken condenser at least once a week, was handed 75 cents for a new one and the trouble was remedied.

It finally occurred to the manager that these breakages happened with a rather peculiar regularity so he decided to investigate.

When the next broken condenser was reported he took the trouble to note carefully the exact character of the break, gave the operator 75 cents and waited.

During the latter part of the next week the new condenser broke and the manager asked for the old condenser. To his great surprise the operator brought down the identical condenser that he had reported as having cracked during the week previous.

Close questioning revealed the fact that the operator had been using this same old cracked condenser over and over and that he was pocketing the 75 cents each time.

The manager now has a new operator who brings down to the office and leaves with the manager every cracked condenser and receives a new one in return—not 75 cents.

NO EXTRA CHARGE

EXHIBITION of all feature films and the big photoplay productions at no advance from regular prices, and campaigns to increase the interest of children and civic organizations of the city in the theatre, are the policies of Tom H. Boland, manager of the Empress Theatre of Oklahoma City, which have made the house one of the most popular motion picture theatres in the southwest.

Ten cents is the regular admission charge and no variation is made, whether the attraction be "The Last Days of Pompeii," presented by George Kleine, "The Squaw Man," a Jesse L. Lasky feature, or a Famous Players Film Company production with "Little" Mary Pickford, who is a great favorite in Oklahoma City.

The Empress advertises extensively with special invitation to school children to attend whenever it has two-comedy or educational pictures on its six-reel program. When it has a film based on a well-known poem or book such as "Evangeline" or Sir Walter Scott's "Ivanhoe," special invitations are sent to the different dramatic clubs of the city and some of them always attend in a body.

Both Mutual and Universal services are used by the theatre, and large pictures of all their star performers adorn the lobby. The theatre is the most elaborate from an architectural standpoint of any in the city. A four-piece orchestra and a large pipe organ add to the attractiveness of the house.

CIGAR COUPONS FOR THEATRE

HENRY HUBER, manager of the Little Bijou, 11 Park Row, New York City, has a unique scheme for increasing the patronage of the theatre. Each patron is presented with a twenty-five-cent United Cigar Store certificate. The coupons are handed to the patrons by the ticket chopper as they enter the theatre. The plan has helped wonderfully in keeping the "gate receipts" high during the summer months.

Good pictures, good music, and courtesy play the most important parts in Mr. Huber's success. The music, one of the most notable features of the theatre, is provided by B. Harris, who has made the orchestra a matter of comment among the patrons of the downtown section, who frequent the theatre during the day. The projection is furnished by two Power's 6A machines, operated by Samuel Goldfarb and Thomas Forestor.

A seven-foot exhaust fan provides ample ventilation for the theatre during the daytime, while at night the skylights are left open, thereby giving the patrons of the Bijou as much air as they could get in any airdome.

Mr. Huber attributes much of his success to H. M. Hoffman, manager of the Universal exchange at 23rd Street, who has aided him in "polishing" many of his schemes for boosting business.

Mr. Huber is also manager of the Madrid at 1945 Third avenue, New York City, and the Republic at 1004 Westchester avenue, Bronx. The Bijou is open from 9 a.m. until 11 p.m., and the Madrid and Republic both from 1 p.m. until 11 p.m.

A DICKENS' WEEK

A RECENT Dickens' week at the Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., was a great success and attracted a large and appreciative audience. On Monday and Tuesday, Manager Erdmann showed "The Old Curiosity Shop" and on Wednesday and Thursday, "David Copperfield."

The music at the Elmwood continues to be a most pleasing feature. Mr. Bertham A. Forbes, formerly organist of the Central Park Presbyterian Church, is alternating with the eight-piece orchestra with selections, on a large and beautiful-toned Steinway grand.

The new four-manual organ is about complete and his recitals on this instrument are being looked forward to with pleasure. Mr. Forbes is one of Buffalo's most talented musicians, and his engagement at the Elmwood Theatre was a "chef-d'œuvre" for Manager Erdmann.

THE LOBBY HAIRPIN BOX

THE Orpheum Theatre in Canton, O., 205 Tuscarawas street East, is one of the several motion picture theatres in this community without a retiring room for women. V. L. Schram, manager, has hit on an idea that gives partly the benefits of such a room however.

In the lobby near the main exit door hangs a long, panel mirror. Manager Schram noticed that a great number of his women patrons made use of this mirror to straighten their hair or fix their hats as they left the theatre. The other day he put a little shelf beside the mirror and placed on the shelf a box of wire hairpins. He had noticed that occasionally women lost hairpins in the theatre and guessed the needs of the losers as they left the theatre. The hairpin box has proved very popular.

IN THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

Many Noted Men in Educational and Religious Circles on Advisory Board of Church and School Social Service Bureau—Dr. Carter Outlines Plans of Organization—Waterbury Exhibitors Lend Theatres to Churches for Matinees

THE names of many noted men in the religious and educational life of the United States are to be found on the list of those who make up the advisory board of the Church and School Social Service Bureau, which has been made public at the headquarters of the bureau at 18 East Forty-first street, New York.

Dr. William Carter, president of the bureau, and the Duke of Manchester, who is international vice-president of the bureau, gave out the list with a few comments on the work of the organization, which has been founded to put motion pictures in the schools and churches of the country at a low cost and with little or no trouble to those institutions that take the service.

"This bureau has not been organized on a commercial basis," said the duke. "None of the stock in it will be sold, as the financing has all been arranged for by the men who are interested in seeing the project prosper. We will, of course, because of the very magnitude of the undertaking, have to administer its affairs in a commercial way.

How the Two Will Co-operate

"Our first object is to get the public interested in clean amusements and in educational matters by means of motion pictures of the highest order. As to the details of the organization of the bureau, I must refer you to Dr. Carter, who has charge of it."

In addition to having this interest in the bureau, the Duke of Manchester is president of the International Education League, which has been organized on a bigger and broader scale than the bureau, but will place its varied services and facilities at the disposal of Dr. Carter's organization. Where the Church and School Social Service Bureau will be national in its scope, the Education League will have international aspects.

Said Dr. Carter:

"Our method of procedure will be like this: We will at first put out a weekly program of five thousand feet of film, which will be divided into religious, educational, sociological, travel and dramatic subjects. We will install a motion picture projecting machine and a special screen in the institutions that take our service on a yearly contract basis. We will send an expert in the use of the machine to instruct some local man to run it.

Will Buy All Films

"Right now we will buy all of the films which we put on our programs, but we will be able to supply them to our clientele at a much lower rate than the commercial exchanges would ever think of offering them for. Later—in fact, as soon as we can do so—we will have our own companies and will make virtually all of our films.

"We are going to send a company to Palestine to enact Bible stories, and another to Egypt for the same purpose. A third company will be sent all over the mission fields of the world to film scenes and stories in those far-away parts. All of this work will be done under the direction of men well known and well versed in the lines covered."

Some of the men on the advisory board are:

Lend Theatres to Churches

Several enterprising motion picture managers in Waterbury, Conn., are accomplishing a three-fold purpose in their offer of a free usage of their theatres on certain afternoons to churches in their immediate vicinity. The proceeds derived from the matinee performances enriches to some extent the treasury of the church so favored; the pictures presented prove rather conclusively that they are of a variety which educate and amuse, rather than possessing any demoralizing tendencies, and thirdly the patrons becoming impressed by the courteous treatment they receive at the hands of the theatre attaches and the calibre of the entertainment, are sure to return.

The management, therefore, at a little expense performs a charitable act which surely does not escape the attention of the parishioners of that particular church and his sacrifice of an afternoon's contribution of "nickels and dimes" is eventually rewarded.

When the Carroll Theatre, Waterbury's latest motion picture house observed its opening week recently, the management generously placed the theatre at the disposal of St. Thomas' church for two afternoons. On the days selected, some 1,000 school children and not a few adults paid admission and enjoyed the bill immensely. The children were chaperoned and in many cases their parents went with them. The latter realizing the quality of the pictures exhibited have since taken their yonngsters to the theatre evenings.

Mr. Carroll's act met with approbation of the members of St. Thomas' church. The manager of the Alhambra Theatre, another motion picture house located within a short distance of the Carroll, has made a similar offer to St. Thomas' church and at the present writing the church officials have it under consideration.

How Matinees Were Advertised

In advertising the matinees which the children attended announcement was made at the services held the preceding Sunday morning that the program arranged was one of "high order." This recommendation could not be otherwise than advantageous to Mr. Carroll.

William G. Newcomb, storekeeper and purchasing agent at the New Jersey State School for the Deaf, at Hamilton and Chestnut avenues, Trenton, N. J., has been at the plant of the Pathé Frères Motion Picture Company, where he is making a study of motion pictures. The knowledge thus gained will be the subject for a new course at the schools the coming term.

Motion pictures have played an important part in the education of the institution the past year. The pupils take a great interest in the pictures and while films of an educational nature are given others of an entertaining character are also shown.

Course in Making Film

The latest scientific principles of the motion picture art will be studied by Mr. Holcombe and the course offered in the manufacture of films at the school will be along the latest inventions.

Since motion pictures have been made a feature at the schools, Mr. Holcomb has operated the machine and attended to every detail, and incidentally taken so much interest in the work that he induced the state officials to introduce the special course.

George T. Ames, formerly of the General Film Company, and recently assistant manager of the Mutual Film Exchange, is leaving his post at the Mutual to take charge of the International Education League, of which the Duke of Manchester is the president.

Mr. Ames is to be the assistant general manager of this concern and general manager of the Church and School Service Bureau.

Will Make Educational Film

Mr. Ames is one of the most widely and favorably known men in the film exchange business in New York, and the fact that he has elected to enter the field of educational film renting is significant as showing the serious attention that even the most experienced and conservative of the "regular" film showmen are devoting to this new branch of the business.

"Sun" Man Joins Same Firm

Ira L. Cunningham, until recently telegraph editor of the New York "Evening Sun," and one time in charge of the same desk on the "Morning Sun," has moved from Park Row up to 18 East Forty-first street, New York City, where he has taken up his duties as advertising manager and general publicity agent for the two bodies.

WILL FEATURE PAULINE BUSH IN NEW REX COMPANY

Pauline Bush will be featured in a new Rex company now being organized at the Hollywood studios of the Universal. Miss Bush will be supported by Lon Chaney, Joseph King and other tried actors whose worth and popularity is beyond question. Joseph de Grasse will be director of this company.

Miss Bush did her first work in motion pictures with the American company and for a long time played opposite J. Warren Kerrigan. She has been with the Universal for more than a year. Lon Chaney has worked opposite Miss Bush continually since her engagement by the Universal as "heavy." Joseph King is a juvenile actor and has appeared to advantage in numerous Universal productions.

MARKS BUILDS BIG STUDIO

Charles Marks, general manager of the Pierrot Company, New York, announces that he has contracted with a firm whose name cannot be made public at present for the entire output of his firm to be distributed in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Marks' studio at Tappan, N. Y., will hold six sets. Another, in the course of construction, will be ready for occupancy in about nine weeks. The company has one of the completest plants in the country at Tappan. There is a large laboratory, an establishment for printing titles, developing films, etc.

His company has already produced thirty-four one-reel and five two-reel high class comedies. Mr. Marks expects to be ready to enter the market on September 7, when he will produce four plays a week.

Willat Studios Are Now Complete

THE Willat Studios & Laboratories, Inc., have just completed their new plant at Main street and Linwood avenue, Fort Lee, N. J. It consists of two modern studios and a factory building, and is absolutely the "last word" in building construction.

The studios, of which there are two, are 60 x 120 feet each, and are 53 feet high. They are almost entirely enclosed in plain plate glass.

GROUP AT WILLAT STUDIOS AND LABORATORIES, FORT LEE, N. J.

C. A. ("Doc") Willat, who is known as one of the best technical experts in the country, will be in personal command of the entire plant. Until a short time ago he was the technical director of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and for many years previous to that time he managed and directed, in a very successful manner, the entire output of the Imp company.

The factory building is about 100 feet wide by 150 feet deep, two stories high, and the entire construction is of brick and concrete.

Many innovations have been installed in this new factory. The old tank method of washing will not be used. Instead, a large washroom has been built, with hundreds of spray nozzles inserted in the ceiling. Water will be forced at high pressure through these nozzles, and the film, which will hang on specially constructed racks immediately below the nozzles, will be thoroughly sprayed. The washroom will accommodate 100 racks of film.

Another innovation will be the drying-room. The air before it enters the drying-room is forced through water and "washed" of all dust particles and moisture, thus making the air clean and dry. The machinery for this process was manufactured under "Doc" Willat's supervision, and the air condition of the drying-room can be so regulated that all films can be uniformly and quickly dried. The capacity of the factory is 1,500,000 feet per week.

Arrangements have already been made for the erection of four additional studios similar in every way to the two already built. The construction work on the new studios will be started within a very few weeks.

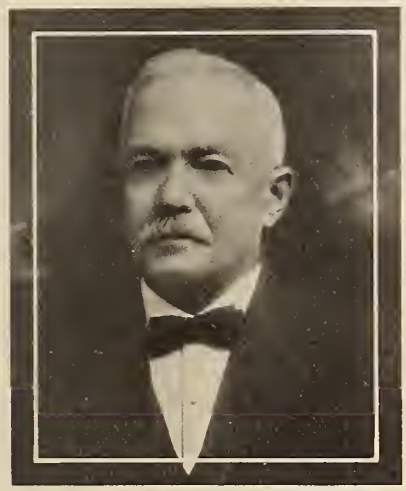
The entire site of the Willat Studios & Laboratories, Inc., covers approximately five and one-half acres.

Associated with Mr. Willat in this enterprise is C. O. Baumann, well known to everyone in the motion picture industry for the many progressive ideas that he has put in force during the many years of his association in the business.

The executive offices of the Willat Studios & Laboratories, Inc., are located in suite 910-911-912 Longacre Building, and the personnel of the officers of the company is as follows:

Charles O. Baumann, president; Arthur Butler Graham, vice-president; C. A. Willat, secretary and treasurer.

Recently a party of friends were taken in automobiles to New Jersey for the purpose of inspecting the newly completed plant. On their return to New York City the party had dinner at Reisenweber's.



Success by Eliminating "The Yellow"

Josiah Pearce & Sons Believe in Attracting Patronage by Artistic Decorations, Superior Service, and the Finest Programs Obtainable Instead of Going in for Circus Methods to Draw People Inside Their String of Theatres—Control Six New Orleans Houses

"TO what do I owe my success in the motion picture business? Why, young man, I do not consider that I have succeeded as yet.

"No man can call this success. The motion picture business is only in its infancy.

"I am building now as I began building from my start in the profession—for the great future that is before us."

This was the statement of Josiah Pearce, head of the syndicate of Josiah Pearce & Sons, New Orleans, La., to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative who sought to learn from the head of one of the most successful film theatre owners in the country the secret of his prosperity. And Mr. Pearce is sincere in his belief that the years to come are to see more remarkable strides in the profession than the past years have known.

JOSIAH PEARCE & SONS is composed of the father and two sons, J. Eugene and Fred W. Pearce, two young men who share in their father's business acumen and artistic taste. Mr. Pearce first engaged in the film business in Birmingham, and afterwards tried the picture theatre business on a small scale in Birmingham and Memphis.

In 1905 he moved his film exchange to New Orleans and began operations on a larger scale. The firm now owns six picture theatres in that city, the Trianon, 812-814 Canal street; the Tudor, 610-612 Canal street; the Bijou Dream, 123 St. Charles street; Dreamland, 316 St. Charles street; the Grand, 10-36 Canal street, and the Electric, 926 Canal street.

The Tudor and the Trianon are entirely new and two of the handsomest houses in the United States devoted to pictures, with no exception, while the other four houses are high-class amusement enterprises. The firm owns the Bijou Dream and Dreamland in Vicksburg, Miss; the Iris, Arcade and Dreamland in Lake Charles, La.; and the Pastime in Pittsburgh, Pa., the home of the Pearce family.

IN adition, the firm controls park amusement devices in Lexington, Ky., and Denver, Col. Only recently the Pearce firm sold their picture houses in Port Arthur and Houston, Tex. When it is stated that the Pearces became interested in pictures only seven years ago, and that their investment in the Trianon and Tudor alone, not including the building or real estate, represents an investment of $200,000, the degree of the firm's success can be appreciated.

There is no ballyhoo effect about the Pearce houses. They are conducted on a plane that would do credit to a Shakespearian stock company of Booth and Barrett days.

The Pearces believe in motion pictures and believe in them on their merits, and they are building for the future to-day just as much as they built for the present seven years ago.

Their houses have nothing of the tawdry or the sensational; they are conducted along sane business lines, like any other business that intends to last and continue to increase its worth and its reputation.

"I AM honest in what I have to say about motion pictures," said J. Eugene Pearce, continuing his father's idea. "Seven years ago the film business was far from an established industry. We thought that we saw possibilities in it at that time. We were sure that it would develop from the semi-sideshow into an established enterprise, and that it was a business that would pay for the careful attention and the honest development of any man. And so, when we started into the business, we did not conduct it for the day, but for what to-morrow would bring.

"And we have just started, for no man can tell what the possibilities of the profession may be. We of this generation may never see the motion picture business reach the limit of its possibilities.

"We do not believe that a man should enter the business of even sweeping the streets without first looking into the possibilities of his occupation.

"And so, when we were about to enter the motion picture world, we looked about us and studied conditions.

"AT that time the business was largely along circus lines, and the greater portion of the theatres were relying on flaming posters and tinpan pianos on the sidewalks to bring trade. But they were attracting a certain element of the public, and we began to study whether we could not attract a bigger element and make a wider and more genuine appeal to all who love high-grade amusement.

FRED W. PEARCE

"If the motion picture theatre, conducted along sideshow lines and appealing only to the lovers of noise and glare could succeed, why could not the more dignified house, along the lines of the serious legitimate theatre, appealing to the better element, make an even higher mark? For that we have aimed. We have tried no special features except to give the public such a good and so clean a performance that our patrons would come again.

"We have tried to build our business along the same lines that a successful clothier or department store manager would follow. Instead of going to sensational stunts, we have devoted that time to studying possibilities and the desires of our patrons. Instead of giving away our profits in souvenirs and catch-penny devices, we have devoted that money to beautifying our theatres, perfecting our service, and giving better programs.

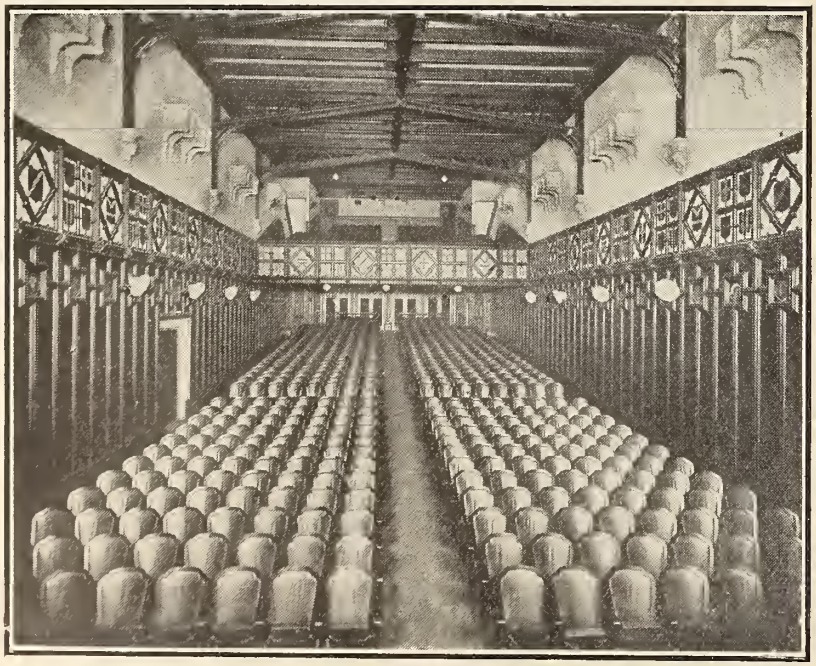
"You know the popular idea of New Orleans of the country as that of a great playground—in some minds as a great "wide-open" place. But the people of New Orleans, as the people of all other cities, want no immoral pictures.

"OUR rule has been that there should be no questionable films shown, and we have based our decision on the effect a particular film might have on our younger patrons. That is not only good morals, but good business.

"The sensational, the morbid, the picture with the breath of the indecent may attract the sensation-hunting crowds for the moment, but it will never build up a really prosper-our business, no more than will a troupe of acrobats performing in a merchant's show window bring him a continuous clothing trade.

"Next to the pictures themselves, we have laid the greatest stress on giving our patrons comfortable and artistic houses. An exhibitor cannot pay too much attention to the constructive details. Music, good screens, proper lighting, good ventilation, and prompt and courteous service from the attendants are equally important.

ENTRANCE TO THE TRIANON THEATRE, NEW ORLEANS, ONE OF THE PEARCE CHAIN



"WE have tried to study each phase of the business, and have tried to improve all of them. I do not believe that any man needs the so-called 'tricks of the trade' to succeed if he is constantly building for the future."

With their six theatres the Pearces control a great portion of the motion picture business of the city. Their Tudor and Trianon theatres are artistic triumphs, products of the best in architecture.

In the Tudor there is a pipe organ that is ranked among the best in the country, and in all of the houses great attention is paid to the music. Attendants are all carefully trained and uniformed in white. The firm employs an experienced press agent, and is a liberal advertiser in the local press of the various cities.

Picture programs are changed daily in the Pearce houses. Big feature productions, serials, and the weekly animated news services are shown.

In theTrianon and Tudor the prices range from ten to twenty-five cents, according to the production. In the other local houses the admission is five and ten cents. In the theatres of the other cities the price varies from five to twenty cents.

NEWARK CITY FATHERS DENY LICENSE

Newark, N. J., Aug. 13.

The license committee of the Common Council has refused to issue a motion picture house license for 686 and 688 Summer avenue. The application was made by W. A. Pearson, a building contractor of 127 Montclair avenue.

Councilman Anthony Schuck said that, while there was no application before the committee from Pearson, the chairman had called the committee together to consider the matter, as it did not want Pearson to go to any expense before it was known whether he would receive a license because of opposition that had developed.

PLAN $100,000 HOUSE IN OMAHA

OMAHA has long been needing a high-class, specially constructed theatre for motion pictures exclusively, according to visitors and others with authority to speak on such subjects. And now it is about to have such a place.

Manager J. E. Schlank, of the Hipp Theatre, on Harney street, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets—near the business center of town—is awaiting a conference with the owner of his building regarding the construction of a motion picture theatre to cost nearly $100,000. It will be one of the most up-to-date motion picture houses in this part of the country.

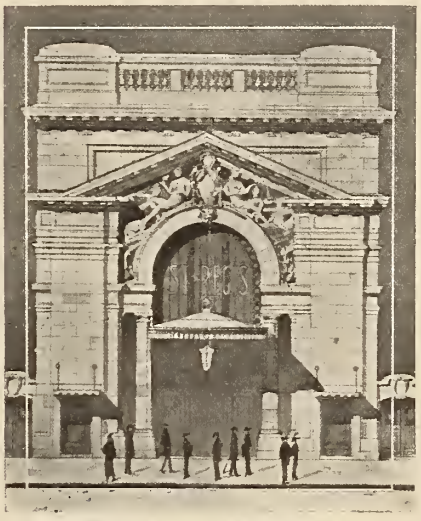
MICHIGAN $25,000 THEATRE

PLANS are under way by C. Howard Crane, of Detroit, for a new $25,000 motion picture theatre to be built on Wyandotte street, Walkerville, Mich., for a company to be known as the Garden Theatre Company. The directors of the company are H. E. Walker, Maj. S. C. Robinson, U. G. Reaume, L. F. Murphy, of Walkerville, and Forbes Robertson and F. M. Delano, of Detroit.

The theatre will contain 12 boxes, four in front and eight in the rear, with a mezzanine circle. It will be modern in every respect, having features similar to the Garden Theatre, of Detroit, plans of which were also prepared by Mr. Crane.

ATLANTA STRAND IS NEARLY READY

THE Strand, Atlanta's new motion picture theatre, is rapidly nearing completion and will be ready for opening in about a week. From the present indications and the progress shown so far on the interior decorations, this house promises to be the most beautiful "movie" theatre in the South to-day.



NEW ARKANSAS THEATRE

WITHIN the next few months a motion picture theatre, to cost $20,000, will be erected on North Front street, Conway, Ark., by R. D. Howell, manager and owner of the Arkway Theatre.

BIG TRENTON HOUSE TO COST $110,000

TRENTON, N. J., is to have its twenty-sixth theatre. These are mostly all motion picture houses, too.

The latest theatre for the city—Trenton boasts of a population of about 110,000—will be the St. Regis. It will cost $110,000 and will be located on East State street, near the post-office, and within a stone's throw of the State Street Theatre which is the largest motion picture and vaudeville house in the city, and which for years has enjoyed almost phenomenal business.

THE ST. REGIS, TRENTON, N. J.

Work on the St. Regis will be commenced immediately. It will be constructed by the St. Regis Corporation, recently incorporated with the Secretary of State. The property purchased by the company on which the theatre will be constructed is at 142 and 144 East State street, known as the Shreve property. The new playhouse, it is said, will be one of the best in New Jersey. The St. Regis Company operates theatres in various cities and controls a number of leading film productions.

John T. Mannix, for some time manager of the Broad Street Theatre, has been selected as the local representative of the new company and will have charge of the house. He has had much experience in the motion picture business and has directed leading theatres in various cities, including Wilkes-Barre, Pa., before coming to Trenton.

It is the plan of the St. Regis Company to show only first-class pictures and first runs. Part of the equipment will be a $10,000 pipe organ. Shows are to be run daily from 12 o'clock noon until midnight.

The plans for the new structure have been completed by Henson Boyle, Philadelphia architects. The structure is to be artistic. The lot upon which the house will be constructed is 65 by 145 feet. It is at present occupied by old structures used for business purposes.

Aside from the St. Regis, two large motion picture houses are being erected in East Trenton by Charles Hildinger. They will be ready for occupancy within a few weeks.

ANOTHER HOUSE IN DALLAS

WITHIN sixty days' time work will commence on a new theatre building for Dallas, Tex., according to announcement given out by Claude Hamilton, who will act as manager. The new institution will be located on Bryan street, near Masten, and will be constructed of the latest improved building material and will consist of two stories.

Henry Hamilton, a widely known theatre builder, will put up the building, according to a statement of his son, Claude Hamilton, and upon the former's return from Colorado, where he is spending a few months resting, plans will be drawn up and the details concerning the new institution will be worked out.

$100,000 THEATRE IN NORTHWEST

A CONTRACT for the construction of the new Liberty Theatre on Riverside avenue, near Post street, Spokane, Wash., has been let to J. J. Lohrenz. The figures of the building contract are close to $100,000, it is understood. This is exclusive of the site and the excavation cost.

It is planned to have the house open before Christmas. It will be used for pictures.

The plans for the new theatre in Merced, Cal., are progressing rapidly and will be ready in a very short time. The structure will be class A in every detail, every part, inside and out, being of fireproof construction.

A complete ventilating system, including the cooled-air idea, will be installed for the warm weather, while a heating plant will suffice during the winter months. The house will have a seating capacity of about 1,000.

The theatre will occupy a lot 50 by 150 feet, facing on Seventeenth street, numerous exits leading from both the front and back of the house. The financing of this new playhouse is progressing rapidly, and by the time the promoters have completed their work the plans will be ready for the contractors.

3,400-SEAT THEATRE IN POUGHKEEPSIE

ON September 15, it is anticipated that the new Cohen Theatre on Main street, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., will be ready to present its first bill of vaudeville and motion pictures to the public.

Work on the entrance and front of the building has been started.

When completed the building will have a seating capacity of 3,400. The building is divided into a roof garden, dance hall, which may be converted into a miniature theatre for amateur productions, and the main theatre which will have a capacity of over 2,000.

The Best Theatre will be continued in the present building, and a different line of pictures exhibited from those to be shown in the new establishment.

Alterations and Improvements

The contract for the improvements and alterations to be made to the Majestic Theatre, Elmira, N. Y., has been let to the William R. Compton Realty Company. The work will be commenced at once, so that it will be finished, it is hoped, by the latter part of August, ready for the opening on Labor Day.

The purchase of additional land will make it necessary for the small buildings in the rear of the theatre to be razed. The principal one is occupied by Contractors Shiller & Thomas, at 159 Railroad avenue, Elmira.

Shiller & Thomas have secured offices in the Majestic building.

Remodel After Fire

Work has been started immediately on remodeling the Jewel Theatre at Hillyard, Wash., near Spokane, which burned July 3. The building will be replastered and decorated, a fireproof operating room will be constructed and new modern machinery will be installed. J. W. Elliott, owner and manager, stated that $500 will be expended.

Overhaul E. Liverpool House

The Columbia Theatre, East Sixth street, E. Liverpool, O., is to be remodeled, enlarged and redecorated, the work to be started at once, according to a statement made by the owner, George McClintock, last evening.

Salient among the proposed improvements is the remodeling of the adjacent store room on the west of the theatre entrance, so as to provide a ladies' rest room for the convenience of patrons of the theatre. The room will be nicely furnished, equipped with a public telephone for local calls and will be in charge of a maid.

The theatre auditorium will also be enlarged and 100 seats added. The stage will be set back 25 feet so as to make every seat in the house a desirable one. A new gold fibre screen curtain will be hung.

The entrance will be remodeled. Marble will replace the frame wainscoting. New lighting effect, semi-direct, will be installed.

The theatre will remain closed during the remodeling.

$30,000 For Improvements

Saenger Brothers, the big druggists who own four motion pictures, Shreveport, La., announce that they have awarded the contract to P. Martineau for improvements in the Saenger Theatre on Milan street, which will cost $27,000. Additional improvements bringing the total up to $30,000 will be installed.

Improvements provide for adding two more stories to the present building, the second being used as offices and the third rented to the Central Trades and Labor Council. The entire lower floor is to be enlarged with new entrances and exits provided and the arrangements completely changed.

Mahogany will be used in the interior construction of the theatre proper. Floors of the lobby will be of marble and the lobby and theatre will be wainscotted in the same material. An ornamental front will be erected, finished in mahogany, marble and tile.

Sales and Leases

F. M. Rehbuss, of La Crosse, has taken charge of the Unique Theatre, Sparta, Wis. Mr. Rehfuss owned the Star Theatre in La Crosse until about six weeks ago when he disposed of it to start in a different field.

Indiana Theatre Changes Hands

Earl E. Martin, of Cleveland, O., has sold the Starland Theatre on Meridian street, Anderson, Ind. Ted Powers former manager of the Starland will have charge of the Nickelodeon and Cozy, owned by J. D. Roseberry and E. E. Martin.

The Star Theatre at Anderson, owned by S. D. Sampson will not quit on August 1, as had been reported, but will be continued under the management of Mr. Sampson. Mr. Sampson will close the Princess Theatre on that date, but it is understood that a stock company now forming will buy the theatre and operate under a new name.

Announcement is made that C. M. Noble, proprietor of the Noble Hotel, Jackson, Miss., has purchased a half interest in the Gem Theatre in that city with Al Shaffer, who has been operating the playhouse for several months.

R. R. Akers and H. O. White have purchased the Lomo Theatre, Hattiesburg, Miss., taking charge of the house on August 1. Mr. White will have the active management of the Lomo, which is one of the most popular amusement resorts of the city. It is announced that a number of improvements are to be made from time to time. R. L. Robinson will continue as director of the Lomo orchestra, quite a feature of the house.

Lease Washington Heights House

A new lease has just been arranged on the Dyckman Theatre, on West 207th street, New York City, which is owned by Gustavus L. Lawrence, and which was leased earlier in the year to Jack T. Harris and William E. Jacobs for a term of ten years.

The new lease is made by Mr. Lawrence to the Dyckman Photoplay Corporation. It is for a term of fifteen years at an annual rental of $20,000. The Dyckman Theatre was completed by Mr. Lawrence last year and is the only playhouse in that section which is fast becoming one of the principal apartment house centers of the city.

Buys Marion, O., House

The Wonderland Theatre on North Main street, Marion, Ohio, a moving picture house, has been sold by John J. Hablitzel, who has managed the place for about a year, to Frank Weaver. Mr. Weaver has been associated with the former owner in the management of the place for some time and is well acquainted with the business.

Lease Theatre in Louisiana

H. E. Scott, of Chicago, and Chaud Mott, of Hammond, Ind., have leased the Atherton Theatre, Kentwood, La., for a year, with the privilege of extension. A gold fibre screen and modern equipment has been installed. The management expects to break the monotony of the films with an occasional theatrical offering. Mr. Mott acquired his moving picture training through operating a moving picture machine on the battleship "Arkansas" for the delectation of his mates.

Happle Avery is negotiating for the lease of part of the Commercial block, Lake Charles, La., which he intends to convert into a modern motion picture house. Josiah Pearce & Sons, of New Orleans, are now operating three film houses there with great success. Mr. Mr. Avery has an ideal location for his proposed theatre, in the very heart of the business section.

New York Transactions

The S. & R. Amusement Company, of New York City, have leased from the plans by S. S. Sugar, filed recently, a one and two-story photo-play theatre, accommodating 600, which is to be built at 243 West 110th street, New York, at the northeast corner of Eighth avenue, extending to 244 West 111th street. The theatre has been leased by the Ingersoll Construction Company, Elwood Salsbury, president, for ten years at $7,500 net per annum, through F. H. Field.

M. H. Gaillard & Co. have leased the picture theatre at 2072-2080 Third avenue, New York, to the Film Amusement Company; also the five-story loft building at the southwest corner of Thirty-sixth street and Eighth avenue.

Buys Back Nebraska Theatre

W. B. Kennedy, who formerly owned the Lyric theatre, Grand Island, Neb., but who sold out to enter the business in the south, has "returned to his first love," repurchasing the Lyric the latter part of last month from Frank Greene. He reports business above the average for the summer months. As an innovation he has installed a ladies' orchestra, the members thereof being very pretty girls ranging in age from 16 to 18 years and furnishing a very pleasing as well as tuneful combination.

Ames & Company have leased for the Brooklyn Terminal Railway Company the new Kingston Theatre on St. Johns place, near Kingston avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., a 600-seat house with 1,000-seat open air annex, for a term of years, to the New Kingston Amusement Company. The property comprises over eight lots.

Plans Theatre Chain Along Gulf

W. P. Cothran, of Mobile, has leased the Majestic Theatre, Meridan, Miss., from A. J. Lyon for a term of three years. He will have the house completely renovated and all modern improvements that are necessary installed at once. The Majestic has been closed for several months.

Mr. Cothran is well known in the motion picture business through his operation of the Dreamland Theatre in Mobile. He will also open houses in Selma, Ala., and Pensacola, Fla., according to announcements made here.

It is understood to be his plan to present varied bills, using tabloid shows and vaudeville in addition to moving pictures. Some repertoire companies will probably be booked later in the season. The various shows will play all four houses, thus insuring a solid month of bookings.

Lease $200,000 Spokane House

The $200,000 Lincoln Theatre being built by August Paulsen, at Sprague and Lincoln streets, Spokane, Wash., the policy of which has been in doubt, will be handled as a picture theatre by Dr. H. S. Clemmer, who has leased the house for a term of ten years. Dr. Clemmer already operates the Clem and Casino Theatres here.

The new house will be opened before Christmas, the builders plan. It is on a corner opposite the new million-dollar Davenport Hotel, and the site is believed to assure unlimited patronage.

The house is of steel framework and fireproof construction. One of its features will be a ventilating system capable of sending 33,000 cubic feet of purified air through the auditorium every minute.

Takes Pennsylvania Theatre

Probably the most important business deal involving the transfer of a motion picture theatre that has been effected in the Cumberland Valley of Pennsylvania this summer is that just announced whereby the ownership of the New Orpheum Theatre, of Chambersburg, Pa., has passed to Charles W. Boyer, a prominent theatre man of Hagerstown, Md. It is learned that the sum of $22,500 was paid, of which $2,500 was in cash and the rest settled by a first mortgage on an article of agreement executed by G. W. Britsch, Jr., vice-president of the Franklin Guards Association, a stock company that controlled the property. It is announced that all creditors have been or will be satisfied and the theatre placed on a very favorable financial basis. Mr. Boyer took possession at once and theatre men of the valley say Chambersburg now is assured of excellent motion picture entertainment in this theatre.

Heat Makes Little Difference in Attendance at Pittsburgh Theatres—Pearce & Sons Prepare to Sell the Pastime—New Theatre for Altoona—Another Accessories House Opens in the Smoky City—Several Houses Change Hands

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 13.

REGARDLESS of the heat of the city the film men, theatre managers and others in the motion picture business of this district are hard at work getting together programs that will please the fans. Few managers are taking a vacation and the motion picture business here is better than it has been for many weeks.

The Pastime Theatre, in Market street, has been offered for sale by Josiah Pearce & Sons. This company operates a string of twenty motion picture theatres throughout the South and have their offices in New Orleans, La. The company finds the Pittsburgh Theatre too far away to suit their convenience and J. L. Troxwell, the manager of the theatre for the company, has been ordered to sell the theatre as soon as possible. It has always been a money-maker and should bring a good price when it is sold.

I. Kaufman, who for a number of years has conducted the Bedford Hotel, at Bedford, Pa., has turned his hotel into a nickelodeon. The town recently went dry and Kaufman had the large room formerly used as a saloon to dispose of. It seats 100 persons and he is making money. Mutual service is used.

For a long time there has been an agreement between the managers of four motion picture theatres at Vandergrift, Pa., whereby only one theatre would operate each night so as to make the business better during the summer months. It is said the agreement has been broken and all of the theatres are now running each evening.

Band Hall Now a Theatre

The Mount Union band at Mt. Union, Pa., has changed their hall into a motion picture theatre, the place being known as the Band Theatre. It is said one of the big features of the house is the twelve-piece band which furnished a musical program during the progress of the show. The theatre has been open but two weeks and has been most successful.

The Olympic Theatre in Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, is installing a new pipe organ. The instrument just arrived and workmen have started the work of putting the various parts together. There is a large organ in the theatre and it will be moved to the Olympic Theatre at Monessen, Pa. The new organ is twice the size of the new one now in use. It will be ready for use within the next three or four weeks.

A. Natopolos, who controls motion picture theatres at Johnstown and Altoona, Pa., has had plans prepared and will start at once the erection of a fine new theatre at Altoona. It will be a three-story building with the theatre in the first floor, which will have a seating capacity of 900. The second floor is to be used as a poolroom and the third floor will be turned into a dance hall.

The location of the theatre is a corner lot 40 by 150 feet and the building will be of fireproof construction and will cost when completed close to $75,000. The theatre will have four four-foot aisles and will be equipped in a thoroughly modern manner. The theatre will be completed so as to begin business by January 1.

New Accessories Firm Formed

The West Penn Theatre Supply Company is the latest addition to the accessories houses in Pittsburgh. The office is located in the Cameraphone Building and the company is composed of C. S. Kirk, formerly with the E. E. Fulton Company, of Chicago, one of the largest motion picture supply houses in the West and W. F. Heck, of this city. The latter has had no experience in the business, but is a hustler and will doubtless make good.

The firm will handle all of the Fullco specialties, including oils, disinfectants, snipes, easels as well as machines, screens, chairs, booths—in fact everything a theatre needs.

Sid Lenchner, of the Silverman Film Agency, visited a small town theatre in West Virginia this week where a phonograph, and a cheap one at that, furnished all of the music. The proprietor of the theatre was pleased with the results obtained by the machine and boastingly said he changed the record each week. Some enterprise that.

Alexander Parke, who has made his headquarters in the Cameraphone Building in Fifth avenue, and who is booking "Smashing the Vice Trust." "The Drug Terror" and "The Master Cracksman" in this territory, has tried a novel stunt for increasing business.

For several days in advance of the showing of his pictures at any theatre he runs a short strip of film showing some of the pictures in action on the screen and at the same time announcing the date at which it will be shown in the theatre. In this way he gives the fans a good idea as to what the complete picture will be when shown on the screen and it is proving most effective as a business-getter.

Departure in Features

For the first time in history of the Bijou Theatre in the East Liberty section of Pittsburgh a big special feature was put on for three days. The feature was "Smashing the Vice Trust" and the result of the three days showing was exceptionally good. The theatre is one of the finest in that section and has a seating capacity of 300. It has been in existence for six years, and last week was the first time the theatre has swerved from its policy of running a straight licensed program.

The Feature Film and Calcium Light Company has taken the agency for the Cosmograph, the latest machine for the private projection of pictures. It is a very compact and light machine, being made entirely of aluminum, the total weight with the case being twenty-seven pounds.

The light for the machine is obtained by attaching a plug to the ordinary socket and one-fourth-inch carbons are used. The machine is driven by a motor and a rewinding attachment is also included. It is a combination motion picture machine and a stereoptican and is most complete in every detail. The company has sold a number of them to private individuals in this section.

Ideal Theatre Changes Hands

The Ideal Theatre, at 610 Ohio street, North Side, Pittsburgh, has changed hands and will be opened for business under the new management in the latter part of this month. George Schueler is the proprietor and has selected for the manager of the theatre Charley Bennett, a well-known theatrical man. The seating capacity of the house is 200 and motion pictures and up-to-date vaudeville will be shown.

George Knox, proprietor of the Garden Theatre at Johnstown, rented the Majestic Theatre in the Flood City three days last week and ran "Atlantis," one of Weiland's big features at ten cents admission. It is the first time that the higher price has been charged and yet Knox had them standing in the back of the house with a large crowd outside trying to get in. It is the first time in the history of the theatre.

George Myers, manager of the Renovo Theatre, at Renovo, Pa., was injured last week while working in the Pennsylvania railroad shops. He was struck on the head by a large angle iron and rendered unconscious. He was rushed to the local hospital but was able to be out the next day.

The Lyric Theatre at Dubois, Pa., has closed. It will not be opened until the first of October, as it was found by the management that the fans of that section did not care for motion pictures when they could go to the cool spots at the Dubois Park. While the theatre is closed it will be renovated and a number of improvements made.

Frank Painter has rented the Orpheum Theatre at Ridgway, Pa., and will shortly open the theatre after making a number of improvements. Weiland's service will be used.

Thomas Bowers, who formerly ran the Avenue Theatre at McKeesport, Pa., is now conducting a theatre at Ellwood City, Pa. He reports that business is showing a decided increase.

George Bates took about 1,000 feet of film at the H. J. Heinz Company outing at Conneaut Lake. There were about 10,000 persons at the picnic and the pictures will be shown this fall at the Pittsburgh exposition. Views were taken of the arrival and departure of the crowds, boating, bathing and other features at the outing.

Cameraphone Work Progressing

Work on the addition to the East Liberty Cameraphone is progressing rapidly. The brick work is rapidly being completed and the theatre will close in about ten days and remain closed for two weeks while the other improvements are being made to the interior.

Albert Cook, representing the Ludwig Hommel Company, has just returned to the city from a trip through Ohio. He stated that he secured several contracts for theatre equipment in the Buckeye state.

Fred J. Herrington and Austin Bowers, of the Exhibitors Display Company, were in New York several days this week on business for their firm. They report that they were successful in their mission.

Friedberg, of the Alhambra Theatre, in East Liberty, is dealing in large figures lately. He has been running "The Million Dollar Mystery" and has been making big money from it, and now has signed to run "A Million Bid." The theatre was recently remodeled and he has been making money right along at his theatre during the hot weather. Friedberg has one of the most popular theatres in the East Liberty section of Pittsburgh.

On account of the success with which the play "Atlantic" met in this section the Weiland Film Company has purchased another copy covering Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky rights. Cresson Smith left Tuesday on a tour of the Buckeye state to book the play in every place possible. The play was well received in this city and has made big returns to all of the managers who have booked it.

Another House Changes Ownership

The Cameraphone Theatre, in Fifth avenue, which formerly was under the management of W. C. Beatty, has changed hands. Ira Aronson is now the manager of the theatre. The name of the firm purchasing it has not been made public.

The theatre is to undergo a complete change, both outside and in. An artist from the East has had charge of the re-decorating of the theatre and many lights and practically a new front has been added to the place. Inside a new ventilating system is being installed and also a new heating system at the same time. The management has installed three Simplex machines in the booth and a new curtain of the very latest kind is to be added. General Film Company service is being used in the theatre.

New Haven Newspaper Espouses Films

"Times-Leader" Now Publishes Weekly Page of Motion Picture News, and Will Be Supported by Elm City Exhibitors

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 13.

REALIZING before its competitors the fact that motion pictures have become "the thing" in this city, the New Haven "Times-Leader," a leading Connecticut evening newspaper, has established itself as New Haven's "film journal" by inaugurating a weekly picture page as a feature.

It entered the field by commencing in serial form the story "Trey o' Hearts," written by Louis Joseph Vance, and filmed as a fifteen-instalment serial by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The "Times-Leader" will devote a page each week to the pictures, lending what aid it can to exhibitors and at the same time providing live news and some entertainment for its readers. In return it receives the support of most of the exhibitors in the city.

Amster Spiro, New Haven correspondent to The Motion Picture News, will be in charge of the new film page.

BOOKS RETURN ENGAGEMENT

Washington, D. C., Aug. 13.

"One Wonderful Night" has made its initial appearance in the National Capital, and from box-office receipts and attending crowds it seems that a fair proportion of the 10,000,000 people that the Essanay company has been saying were waiting for this picture must live in Washington.

Harry Crandall, of Crandall's Theatre, had this drama first and he held it for two days. On both days there were filled houses, even at the morning performances. In the evening the crowd was constantly out to the curb, while the theatre was filled to the capacity of fire regulations. And be it remembered that Crandall's has a seating capacity of 500.

Guy Barrett, the house manager, makes the announcement that on the first day "One Wonderful Night" played to 4,000 in round numbers, and on the second day to 3,500 patrons. This theatre has already booked this photoplay for a return engagement this month.

POSTPONE "SILVER KING"

While speculation is rife as to the probable effect on the motion picture industry of the gigantic war now raging through all of Europe, the Famous Players Film Company has already experienced one unusual result of the tremendous conflict, which has compelled this concern to postpone its production of "The Silver King," preparations for which have for some time commanded the interest of the trade.

Guy Standing, whose selection for the leading role of the world-famed drama was recently announced, is the captain of a noted English regiment, and when the announcement that England had joined the wholesale war was officially confirmed, Standing sailed last week on the "Lusitania" for England.

SHOW LASKY FEATURE ON LAWN

The first showing of "What's His Name?" another Jesse L. Lasky production, with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson in the leading roles, was given on the lawn of the Lasky studios, Hollywood, August 1, at which four hundred persons were present.

Lanterns had been stretched about the lawn following the showing of the picture. Mr. Lasky invited the members of the Lasky forces who were present to join him on a roof garden at Los Angeles the following day. Frank Garbutt, president of the Bosworth Company, entertained Mr. Lasky aboard his yacht for a two-day trip to the Catalena Island.

The Lasky Company and the Bosworth Company are affiliated with the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

The Carbon and Projection Light

By W. C. Kunzmann

Their Importance in Motion Pictures—The Manufacture of Carbons a Complicated Process Depending Upon Exacting Conditions for Making a Perfect Product—For Use in Film Theatres They Are Composed of Selected Lamp Black, Tar and Pitch Subjected to High Pressure

DURING the past twelve months there has been very noticeable improvement in projection. Audiences are becoming more and more critical in perfect projection of pictures. Screens have been greatly improved, machine manufacturers have kept pace with the general advances, motor generator sets have been perfected, carbon manufacturers have raised the excellence of their products, and the operator himself is not being left behind in the procession of events.

To-day the average theatre shows one hundred per cent better lighted screens than it did two years ago. All this has been greatly helped by the hearty co-operation and harmony which has taken place between those drectly interested in the picture industry in the past four years.

By careful study on the part of the machine manufacturer and the operator, the flicker has been largely reduced and on many screens practically entirely eliminated.

The author of this article is an authority on carbon manufacture and is also a practical motion picture operator and theatre manager of experience. In the following article Mr. Kunzmann tells what strides have been made in perfecting a projector carbon and gives many valuable suggestions to the picture operators of the country.

To perfect an American motion picture projector carbon the National Carbon Company, of Cleveland, began more than five years ago to develop this branch of their business. The company employs a staff of chemists and experts in carbon making, but to arrive at the practical result of making a carbon that would meet the needs of the business the company went to the picture theatre to select the superintendent of this branch, and engaged Mr. Kunzmann for the important position.

Importance of the Carbon

Being deeply interested in trying to bring the screen results produced from a small 12-inch stick, known as a projector carbon, which is always in charge of the fellow termed the operator, and in order to bring the projector light emitted from these carbons to a higher plane, it is hoped that there will exist in the future between the motion picture operator and manufacturer for the good, welfare and elevation of better projection, the heartiest co-operation, which is the foundation stone of success.

Very few people realize what importance the operator, who is caged away in the far end of the picture theatre, and the carbons, are to the picture industry, which help to furnish them amusement.

It must be borne in mind that the success of a picture theatre is either made or marred by the operator, who is engaged to supply the brain power, or thinking part, to the apparatus under his charge. The successful operator must progress with the entire business, keeping up to date with all new devices and appliances along his line which are being invented and placed upon the market constantly.

The control of projecting machines and appliances requires skill and knowledge, which can only be gained by years of study and experience. Slowly but surely the profession of operating is being raised to a higher level, and it naturally follows that the men themselves are gradually being raised to a higher plane. This process invariably follows in the train of increased knowledge, coupled with increased respect and responsibility.

Must Give High Candle Power

Perfection in projection can never be obtained, but with the present inclination to study, and the present avenues of knowledge, there is no reason why practical perfection cannot be attained within a comparatively short period.

The subject of carbons, now to be taken up, is one of the greatest importance, since it involves the matter of light, the very foundation stone of projection. In many ways the projector carbon holds a unique position among manufactured articles. It is a product that must be made in enormous quantities, which must be sold at a low price, and from which is demanded high quality, absolute uniformity, and continuous satisfaction. Every projector carbon is burned under the watchful eye of the operator, and the owner's business really depends on the behavior of the carbon he uses, as well as on the picture he shows.

The most important requirement of a projector carbon is that it must give high candle power. This high illuminating power must be accompanied by a good quality of nearly white light, and by steadiness. Flickering should be down to a minimum; arc breaking should be low; also, points should not needle, or spindle as we term it, excessively.

Projector carbons in general, as about 65 amperes A.C., at a normal length arc, 35 volts, will throw from 4.5 to 5.00 foot candles the standard of illumination, at a distance of 67 feet from the objective lens in the mechanism.

Measuring the Light Rays

In our laboratory series of tests are carried out daily by numerous technical and scientific men who make a study of, and read the light emitted from projector carbons, together with other qualities this carbon must have, to produce perfect results on the screen. All competing brands are tested for comparison.

In general, carbons used for motion picture work are made of the most select materials of lamp black, tar, and pitch, and various other ingredients, forced under high pressure into various sizes, by means of dies, then cut in proper lengths and subjected to a bake with very fine regulation of temperature.

The quality of a motion picture carbon can only be detected by the operator when he has same in use, as to judge a carbon by its outer appearance or fracture, is beyond anyone but an expect who has had years of experience along these lines.

In manufacturing projector carbons, the lamp black and dry flour materials are first milled, and at the same time during the milling process are purified, and metallic particles removed by action of powerful electro magnets. After obtaining the very cleanest grade of flour materials, these, together with the binder necessary, consisting of tars, oils, or pitches, are then mixed thoroughly and uniformly in specially designed carbon mixers, to form a carbon mass suitable for forcing carbons.

Pressed into Shape Like Dough

It is the policy of the National Carbon Company, engaged in the manufacturing of carbon products, to carry out the above methods in such a way that the mixes are always uniform throughout a given batch of material. When the materials are uniformly and thoroughly mixed, they are then worked to insure absolute uniformity. After being thoroughly worked, the mass is taken to a high pressure hydraulic press and formed into blocks according to the size necessary to fit in the forcing machines used. These blocks are then placed into a high pressure hydraulic jumbo, as it is termed in carbon making. This material is then forced through steel dies, according to the various sizes of carbons wanted. If it is to be a cored carbon, steel needles of various sizes are placed in the center opening of these various types of dies used.

These specially designed forcing jumbos will squirt the carbon mass through these dies and pins at a very high pressure.

In cases where the manufacturer's name or grade of carbon is to be put on outer shell surface, a very costly instrument, called a marker of steel letters, is run over the carbon rod as it leaves the forcing jumbo.

The carbons, after being forced, are placed on racks and allowed to cool before handling for cutting into proper lengths for baking. To insure absolute straightness, correct size and perfect green stock, the cut green carbons are looked over and sorted by a trained force of inspectors. The carbons, after passing inspection, are then turend over to the furnace baking department.

The Baking Process

Green carbons are carefully packed in specially constructed high temperature furnaces, which must be carefully controlled at various points of a bake. Pyrometric cones and high temperature reading instruments are used for taking temperatures throughout the bake. After a bake is completed, each furnace is sampled of the various sizes of carbons which it may contain. These samples are again inspected, then sent to the laboratory to be tested, before any carbons are placed into stock.

A furnace of carbons, after receiving the laboratory O. K., are then cut into stock lengths, sorted for straightness, examined for imperfections, and then pointed.

Those carbons which are to be cored, are filled with a mixture of high-grade materials and water glass, which is forced into this core center by means of coring machines. The composition of the core material is an important matter as the arc regulation of burning is governed by this. The carbons, after coring, are thoroughly and uniformly dried, then refinished and pointed, inspected and placed into stock.

Laboratory Tests

Projector carbons are used in general in motion picture machines, stereopticon and spot-light work. Under stereopticon are included the uses in the so-called magic lantern and projector microscope.

Motion pictures and stereopticon may be classified under the head of projector work. The principle of projection is to cast an image of an object upon a screen in a satisfactory manner, as regards the appearance, distinctness and size. Appearance and distinctness involve the question of focusing and intensity of light.

Involved in projection, from the motion picture standpoint, are the arc, condensing lenses, image or object, objective lenses, and the screen. It is essential in projection that the centers of all contrivances involved are in line with the optical axis.

To obtain the best efficiency in projection work, the maximum number of light rays for a given position of focus should strike the condensing lenses.

The formation of the source of light, namely the crater or craters, depending whether alternating or direct current is used, should face or open out toward the condensers.

High Current for Motion Pictures

The high current used in motion picture work is necessitated by the thickness and somewhat opaque condition of films and also because some of the light is obstructed by the aperture plate.

The length of throw and size of picture on the screen are important factors in determining the amount of current to use to get the most satisfactory screen illumination.

A high alternating current is necessary because of the low efficiency. It has been the experience of our laboratory, and myslf, that the correct arc length to be maintained on A. C. to obtain best operating conditions, should be approximately ⅛-inch. To avoid a double source of light and ghost effects, a short arc is necessary.

On direct current there is but one source of light to consider, which is the incandescent tip of the positive carbon, therefore a long arc, about ¼-inch, is necessary, to avoid obstruction of light by the negative tip.

The Formation of Craters

The formation of craters is an important item. It is directly dependent on the setting of the carbons, as well as on their manipulation. It has been found that after years of experimenting and experience in our laboratory, that a trim consisting of a vertical lower carbon, which is set slightly forward of the upper, which is trimmed at a 33 to 45 degree angle, is the best. This combination has been approved and adopted by our carbon-testing laboratory for both direct and alternating currents, as giving good crater formation, candle power, and minimum arc traveling trouble.

Poor crater formation results from improper setting and faulty manipulation of the carbons. Too hasty feeding at the starting of a trim is a bad procedure. Freezing carbons should be avoided entirely, as craters are quickly destroyed and light drops considerably.

It has been found by careful study that the light from an alternating current arc is subjected to a slight flicker. Although direct current is somewhat more expensive, its light efficiency at a given comparative amperage to A. C. color on screen, and methods of handling, are so superior to alternating current for motion picture work, that in several years, no doubt, the largest percentage of shows will be using direct current, either supplied them from central stations, or generated by their own outfits.

Maximum "needling" or spindling is reached when the carbon has carried its maximum current for a given set of conditions. The higher current, the greater the needling. Hard carbons burn longer and needle less than soft carbons. A ⅝-inch projector carbon will safely carry 60 amperes A. C.; above that, needling takes place.

Arc Hissing and Flicker

Hissing of the arc, especially on D. C., and flickering, are caused by faulty operations. Hissing is a function of the length of arc, current and voltage. It occurs with any length of arc if the current be increased beyond what the arc can carry. There is a critical amperage for a fixed length of arc. A hissing arc can be made silent by lengthening the arc which decreases the amperage

On alternating current, hissing sets in with an arc of the usual normal length, at about 45 amperes A. C. and increases with the current. Hissing and flickering are generally noticeable when the arc is not centered on the core or cores.

Arc breaking or chasing as it is termed, is objectionable if too many of these occur during the operation of a reel of pictures. The effect of this is momentary dimming of the light on the screen.

The cleanliness of a carbon during burning is followed up and recorded by what we term droppings. These droppings are somewhat related to spindling, and it has been found in general practice that a carbon which is overheated by carrying too high current, has excessive drop-

AMONG BUFFALO EXHIBITORS

Demand for Feature Films Promises to Tax the Supply this Fall, is Prediction—Strand and Allendale Do Smashing Business With High Grade Multiples—Marlowe Reports Excellent Patronage—Other News of the Theatres

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 13.

"I DON'T know where they are all going to get their films this fall and winter," said Edward Hayes, of the special feature department of General Film Company, the other day. "The local theatres have their hands full now getting their shows, and in the fall there will be at least ten new theatres opening in Buffalo. Half of that number are large houses, requiring big features."

If the General Film Company has not enough features to meet the situation in Buffalo, it looks as though there is going to be a lot of business placed in the open market by Buffalo exhibitors. Among the new and large houses about to open in Buffalo are Shea's Hippodrome, the Regent, the Palace, the Ellen Terry, the New Victoria and the Sun.

The new Academy theatre, M. B. Schlessinger, manager, has opened its vaudeville and picture season. The Academy has been showing pictures exclusively all summer and reported fair business. It seems that vaudeville goes better than the films at this theatre, as this is the fifth successful season.

Manager William G. Kaliska, of the Allendale Theatre, presented "The Greyhound" at that theatre on Monday and Tuesday, August 10-11, and broke all records for the year, financially. Other Allendale attractions coming are "Dan," "The Jungle" and "The Wolf." The Allendale has been playing better attractions since it changed hands about two months ago.

THE new Elmwood Theatre four-manual organ will be ready for the initial recital by Bertram A. Forbes, former organist of the Central Park Presbyterian Church, on Sunday, August 23.

Francis Bushman in "One Wonderful Night" brought some real "wonderful nights" to Buffalo theatre managers. On Monday evening at the Strand, when this feature was first shown to Buffalonians, all records for the year were broken, while at the Elmwood two nights later, the crowd was lined up around the corner, a sight not seen since the opening night. Both houses did phenomenal business.

William Sherry, former manager of the Lyric Theatre, will manage Shea's new Hippodrome Theatre, the largest house in this city devoted to vaudeville and pictures, which will open the last week in August. Shea's Hippodrome will book all the Paramount features in Buffalo.

Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter" will be shown for two weeks at the Majestic Theatre, commencing Sunday, August 16. The Majestic Theatre is a legitimate house and earlier in the season "lost out" on the Kleine productions. With "Neptune's Daughter" they hope to do a big business, as Annette is always popular in Buffalo.

Another legitimate house now showing pictures is the Teck, which in advance of the regular season is showing Rainey's new Animal Hunt. The next attraction in pictures will be the Hippodrome feature, "America." The regular season of Shubert attractions at the Teck opens on Monday, August 24.

MANAGER WILLIAM LEYSER, of the Marlowe Theatre, reports good business so far this month. Mr. Leyser is contemplating putting out a house bulletin later in the month. It is whispered that Mr. Leyser may manage the new Ellen Terry.

The Globe Theatre, at the corner of Ferry and Main streets, S. S. Webster, manager, has been bought by Jersey City capital. The transaction took place last week, but the names of the new owners have not yet been announced.

The new Lyric Theatre will open with stock on Monday, August 24, with Clifford Stork and Mabel Brownell and their permanent company. The Lyric has been a picture house for the past two years, but has not been a success financially. It is hoped that stock theatricals may solve this problem.

The announcement that Henry W. Marcus will direct the orchestra at the new Regent Theatre has been a surprise to many Buffalonians, although a pleasant one, as Mr. Marcus is one of Buffalo's foremost musicians and was for many years director of Shea's orchestra. It was thought that he had retired from that profession however, when he assumed management of the Academy and later the Lyric. The Regent will open on August 31. This theatre is a Mark-Brock house.

MANAGER JOHN R. OSHEI, of the Teck Theatre, booked all the All-Star attractions for the new Ellen Terry when Harry Bryan, of the latter company, was in town recently. Oshei is principal stockholder in this theatre.

John Stevens, of the Stevens Attractions, with offices in the Chapin Block, reports fair business for the summer months. This exchange does business exclusively on a percentage basis and is featuring "Through the Clouds" and "Jess" at present. This house is preparing for a large fall business when they will take over a long list of attractions.

Edward Hayes, of the special feature department of the General Film Company, gave a private exhibition of "My Friend from India" and "The Secret of the Ring," Edison and Kleine features respectively, at the Elmwood Theatre. Those exhibitors present voted both excellent films, especially the Kleine feature, which is a remarkable bit of photography.

Lubin's new feature, "The Wolf," is at the Strand this week, followed by Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate." Manager Harold Edel is busy at present with preparations for the opening of the Regent in Syracuse on Saturday, August 29.

There are going to be some interesting situations in Buffalo this fall, upon the opening of the ten or more new theatres, all of which, of course, expect to do good business.

Russellville, Ky., Aug. 12.

Through all the hot summer days the Dixie Theatre, showing motion pictures, of which Arthur Mitchell is manager, has been showing to capacity business. In answer to the demand for feature films this theatre has been showing high class features of from two to five reels on at least two days out of each week.

The hit-or-miss programs so common a short time ago, made up of a number of reels on any old subjects, have failed to get the desired patronage and have forced the use of the feature films.

EDESON LEAVES HOLLYWOOD

Los Angeles, Aug. 10.

Robert Edeson, who has been at Hollywood for the past two months taking part in the production of "The Call of the North" and "Where the Trail Divides," from the stories by Stewart Edward White, left this week for his summer home at Sag Harbor, New York, where he will spend a short vacation and return to New York City.

SPECIAL YACHT FOR UNIVERSALITES

Consternation swept through the offices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company when it was learned that Mrs. Carl Laemmle, wife of President Laemmle, was in the heart of the war zone in Germany during the mobilization of troops on the German frontier.

Mr. Laemmle has been scouring the country in order to secure a yacht of sufficient dimensions to undertake the trans-Atlantic voyage and bring his family to him. No expense is to be spared in accomplishing this mission, and as several other Universalites are on the continent, it is proposed to remove them all to this country, provided a suitable sea-going yacht can be secured.

Mrs. J. C. Graham, wife of the general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is now in Southampton, but owing to the fact that the English have also suspended operations, she will have to remain there until the Universal boat arrives.

BIG MEN BEHIND RENFAX

The Renfax Company has increased its capital to $425,000 from $90,000. The officers are: Arthur M. Hess, president; DeWitt Fox, vice-president, and Harold L. Lewis, secretary.

The directors and members of executive board are: John H. Flagler, until recently president of Riker-Hegeman chain of drug stores; Eugene Meyer, Jr., of Eugene Meyer, Jr., and Company, 14 Wall street, bankers, interested in the Maxwell Motors Company.

The Renfax Company has already made eighty subjects, and is releasing and producing four new pictures every week.

PEACE PLEA IN FILM

"Lay Down Your Arms," the Great Northern Film Company's war production, an adaptation of Baroness Von Suttner's novel, is a timely attraction on account of the European conflict. The locale of the story is in Austria, Germany and Denmark.

The picture, completed just before the present war began, is not calculated to arouse the patriotism of an audience, but on the contrary, it tends to make one abhor war, by picturing the manifold horrors that the call to arms brings upon a warring nation. The photoplay, therefore, like the novel on which it is based, is a powerful plea for universal peace.

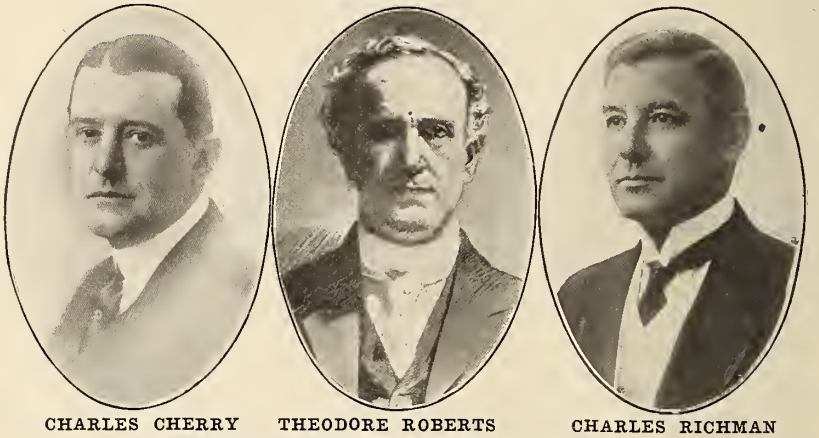
TRAVERS TURNS DIRECTOR

Richard Travers, of the Essanay dramatic company, has had another word added to his title. He is no longer an actor; he is an actor-producer.

His first picture, "An Old-Fashioned Girl," has proven more than popular.

Three New Stars in the Lasky Firmament

Company Arranges for Charles Richman to Appear in "The Man from Home"—Charles Cherry and Theodore Roberts Also Signed



THREE new stars in the Lasky fold are announced in Charles Richman, Theodore Roberts and Charles Cherry.

Mr. Richman's latest appearance was as star of Jack Lait's success, "Help Wanted," which ran for six months at Maxine Elliott's Theatre and in which Mr. Richman was called upon to portray on extremely difficult role. Mr. Richman will appear in "The Man from Home" for the Lasky concern. "The Man from Home," with William Hodge in the leading role, played at the Astor Theatre for two years.

Theodore Roberts, one of the leading character actors of the day, will appear for the Lasky people in the picturization of George Barr McCutcheon's book, "The Rose in the Ring," which, as a motion picture, will be known as "The Ring-Master."

Charles Cherry, most recently seen in Daniel Frohman's "Seven Sisters" and the Shuberts' "Girls," will be seen in a picture to be released by Lasky in December and undoubtedly in other screen productions.

This trio of stars added to those already under engagement with the Lasky Feature Play Company, gives that firm sufficient stars to carry them over a period of two years with the necessity of repetition of stars a scant possibility.

CHARLES CHERRY THEODORE ROBERTS CHARLES RICHMAN
LASKY'S LATEST "CAPTURES" FOR THE SCREEN

Arranges for Control of Big Foreign Output

Albert Amato, Just Home from Six Months' European Trip, Gets Option on Product of New Combine Formed in Italy

ALBERT AMATO, vice-president of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, has just returned from Italy and the Continent, on the "Lorraine," where he has been for six months, securing contracts for the Picture Playhouse Film Company with the big continental producing companies, and has brought with him a feature film that he purchased for over $75,000, it is said. The manufacturers spent over $200,000 in producing this film and have sold some of the European rights for $175,000, it is claimed.

Of course, the trade situation in Europe is now in chaos, but when he left, the big companies, both producing and distributing, were all combined under a few heads. He was fortunate in securing an option on the entire output of a new manufacturing combination that will be announced soon, and it is said that the Picture Playhouse Film Company will control in future every expensive big feature that is produced abroad. Pasquali & Company, of Italy, has sold eighty copies of "The Silent Bell" in Spain and France and have disposed of forty-three copies of "Lupin" in England alone.

Mr. Amato made several advantageous contracts with foreign distributors in England and France for handling the Picture Playhouse Film Company's American productions, and several films are now awaiting the resumption of trade relations to be shipped to the other side.

Pasquali & Company have opened a new big studio in Rome, taking over the Celio Company, a subsidiary of the Cines Company, thus doubling their producing power, because of the big demand for Pasquali films throughout Europe.

The Screen vs. The Politician

AGAIN the courts—this time in the state of Pennsylvania—have declared their views upon state censorship of motion pictures.

Again the exhibitor and the manufacturer have lost.

And again the crying need for organization is demonstrated unanswerably by the course of events.

AND yet again, it must be admitted, the exhibitor and the manufacturer are found essentially unprepared to combat and crush the censorship menace which has asserted itself with new emphasis.

FOUR months ago the Federal judges for the district of Northern Ohio declared the censorship law of that state constitutional.

Little more than a month ago the national convention at Dayton went on record as against all forms of censorship from without, statutory, or non-statutory.

AND now comes the Pennsylvania decision, echoing the Ohio verdict with respect to the constitutionality of the censorship law.

Double proof, in other words, that it is idle for the exhibitor to look to the courts to undo what the politicians have done.

Not that the courts are remiss, but that the makers of the law have wrought too cunningly, is the reason for the defeat at the bar of justice.

THERE is one other course to follow.

Compel the repeal of existing censorship laws. Prevent the passage of pending statutes. Let every exhibitor rally to his state league banner and lend his state organization the strength to fight oppressive legislation to some purpose.

BUT remember, organization is the sole solution. The politician lives by organization. He fears organization—because he knows what organization will accomplish. He can only be beaten by organization. And an exhibitors' organization can be made one of the most formidable in existence, an organization that every politician will hasten to court and fear to offend.

WHY? For this reason among others:

The motion picture screen is one of the most potent forces in the modern community.

Strangely enough, almost everyone knows this better than the average exhibitor.

And the screen's maximum power can be—in fact, has been—made more telling in a political campaign than anywhere else.

THE appeal of the screen is as direct as its range is vast.

The "best seller" may number its readers by hundreds of thousands. The screen can reckon its patrons by millions.

The motion picture screens of the exhibitors of any given community, it is safe to say, reach several times as many persons every day as all the newspapers of that community combined.

IMAGINE, for a moment, this power expressed in dollars and cents.

A politician can make a successful fight in a campaign and defy his adversaries to defeat him, though they put a million dollars into action against him.

BUT if fifty motion picture exhibitors in his political parish were blazoning his record on their screens and turning the light of their projection machines on his policies before their audiences night after night, his defeat would be as certain as that to-morrow succeeds to-day.

The politician knows this.

It has already come to pass in more than one instance.

EQUIPPED as they are, why should the exhibitors of the country allow the politicians to raid them for their private ends, or make them targets for their vote-getting measures?

Shall it be "Hands off!" or "Hands up!"?

It is for the exhibitors to say.

UNITE! CO-OPERATE! JOIN YOUR STATE LEAGUES!

How Washington Exhibitors Advertise

Clever Publicity and Good Films Draw Out the People—Crandall's Distributes 9x5 Heralds Full of Information Pertaining to the Coming Attractions—Parkway Photo Theatre Tells Patrons of Free Dancing and Ladies' Orchestra—Moore's Garden Uses Striking Lobby Frames

Washington, D. C., Aug. 13.

SEVERAL of the Washington theatres are issuing weekly programs which are not only a convenience to patrons but have proved of excellent popularity value.

Strange as it may seem these all are issued by houses that advertise in the local papers, which goes to show that these managers appreciate the adage "it pays to advertise." Crandall's Theatre in the downtown amusement district issues a neat 9x5 sheet which itemizes by days the attractions of the week, calling attention to the manufacturer of the film as well as the players featured.

On the reverse side is reading matter of some film artist. Just at present the re-issues of "Little Mary" are being popularized in this manner.

Standard Park, in the resident section of the north end of Washington, distributes a four-sheet folder, the front of which emphasizes the quality of the park and its advantages together with a picture of its manager, R. H. Wood.

Show Neighborhood Advertising

The other pages designate the films and special attractions of each evening. The program also contains several neat advertisements of neighborhood establishments, showing that Standard Park has the good will of its nearby merchants.

It is by such means that a motion picture theatre and its program may become of service to a community. Mr. Wood has established a slogan which leads off this folder:

"Join the crowd and go to Standard Park."

Handsome Program of the Parkway

A truly artistic program is that offered by the Parkway Photo Theatre, which is printed on buff highly glazed paper with an illuminated border. It lists the daily features for the week together with such additional films as will be included.

Announcements of the special advantages of the Parkway are made, such as free dancing before and after the pictures, the ladies' orchestra, and the capacity and comfort of the playhouse. Manager W. F. Thomas, who has been connected with the management and booking of theatrical attractions, appeals to his patrons in a dignified manner.

Moore's Garden has another means of telling the public the daily offerings of this theatre, in addition to the poster and photographs displayed in the lobby. Near the entrance, on an easel, is placed the daily program of the show, while near at hand other attractions are designated by the day or date.

Electric Program Near Screen

The Virginia and some other theatres make use of the electric program placed beside the screen, which announces by displaying over an electric light the name of the attraction on the screen. This is the same device in use in most of the vaudeville houses.

The program is arranged on the board in the order of appearance and it assists one in knowing what is coming next and how long the show will continue. Such a board is especially advantageous when the name of the film does not appear on the leaders, as was frequently the case in the past; but on all American produced films now the title of the play as well as the trade-mark of the manufacturer may be found on the leaders, which is very satisfying to the speculators.

Handbills form a frequent means of advertising a special performance in the resident section, and managers using this form of announcement declare that it is very effective. Some theatres make a general statement of "a comedy every evening," "a daily Vitagraph," or they may announce films by certain companies or popular screen favorites as appearing on special days each week.

Increased Daily Advertising

All of the foregoing just goes to show that the manager has come to realize that he must advertise the pictures in some other way than by merely putting posters before his show. The daily or Sunday local papers are patronized more now by the motion picture manager, and the public looks to them for film attractions as they do the legitimate stage. The public has likewise grown discriminating and particular, and it is not satisfied to merely go to the motion picture theatre and take any films that are offered.

Through the wide circulation of literature of the photoplay industry, the patrons of the pictures have their favorites and demand some previous information as to what they shall see or when a certain film or player will appear.

And all this points to the fact that the photoplay is no longer an idle entertainer or passing fancy, but a serious form of amusement and education.

"Little Gray Lady" a Hit

The appearance of "The Little Gray Lady" caused little less than a stampede at Moore's Garden Theatre. The fact that the author, Channing Pollock, was a one time newspaper man here, that the play has been seen frequently in Washington in the legitimate circuit and that the plot is laid in the national capital among treasury employees, and officials, all contributed to popularize the film production. The appearance of Jane Gray was also an attraction.

The film version proved a more enjoyable presentation than it had been thought possible to offer, though the omitting of the humor as seen in the stage production was regretted by many. "The Little Gray Lady" was given a private exhibition to the press and officials of the city through the courtesy of the Famous Players in the exhibition room of the Eclectic Film Exchange.

Carlyle Blackwell in "The Spitfire" also proved a big drawing card at Moore's Garden recently. As this story appeared in serial in the Sunday section of a local paper the public was anxious to see it on the screen. While the work of Mr. Blackwell and his associates is worthy of high praise as well as the mounting of the photoplay, the plot of "The Spitfire" is too involved for the best exponent of a screen production.

The Empress Changes Program

Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Philadelphia correspondent of The Motion Picture News, found time to make a short visit to Washington while encamped with the National Guard of Pennsylvania in Virginia, not many miles below the National Capital. The local correspondent had the pleasure of giving him a peep into the motion picture theatres here.

After having used the Universal service for more than five years, with three first-runs daily, the Empress has changed to the Mutual. This house has always had the distinction of using an all first-run program, which at present consists of a multi-reel feature and two additional films.

"THE CALL OF THE NORTH"

(Lasky—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

UNDOUBTEDLY there are many desirable things in plays acted on the regular stage that photo dramas can never have. To see people in real flesh and blood is something, and to hear the human voice in varying degrees of pleasurable tones is more. Yet it is equally certain that the photoplay has some advantages over the stage play that compensate to a large extent for the lack of dialogue. So fine is the art of making pictures nowadays, that it doesn't make much difference whether we see the players actually before us or only on the screen.

Take the play, "The Call of the North," in which Robert Edeson created the leading male role several years ago. It is now made into a photodrama with the same actor starring. True, we do not have borne in upon our ears the vigorous and terse, the tender and soft, or the humorous and witty speeches, but we do see beautiful and picturesque landscapes which the most artistic stage manager could never hope to approach, with all the devices of illusion at his command. Perhaps the acting caught on the film is just a shade the better because there was not the trying monotony of appearing night after night in the same parts. Furthermore, without the strict and narrow limitations of the stage, we are given more of Stewart Edward White's story, "Conjuror's House," upon which both productions were based. Everyone of the many who devoured this stirring, robust tale of the Great North will appreciate the great advantage that this gives the picture.

VIRGINIA AND THE FACTOR FIND RAND WOUNDED

But coming to the picture proper, aside from the clear-cut, finished acting of Robert Edeson, and the splendid support which he gets from the other members of the cast, the most noteworthy feature is the scenery. Whether the pictures were taken in the North, we do not know; they were certainly taken in a land of noble grandeur, a land that Nature has touched with a lavish hand and colored with the richness and gorgeousness of an old painting. Some of the pictures with a canoe silently creeping over the calm unruffled surface of a lake, or shooting the turbulent rapids of river, remind one of paintings by Frederic Remington. No higher compliment could be paid the director for his choice of the settings, nor the photographer for his skill in exceeding our expectations of what the camera should be able to do. Indeed, the settings and the photography are surpassingly beautiful.

Theodore Roberts has the part of Galen Albert, the Factor. The dominant character of this iron-willed monarch of the North does not suffer in his capable hands. Florence Dagmar plays Elodie, his wife, whom he suspects of falseness, and she essentially gentle and womanly. Virginia, the Factor's daughter, is impersonated with all her girlishness and pioneer fire and impulsiveness by Winifred Kingston. Rand, the modern Iago, who plays upon the Factor's jealous nature and turns his suspicions upon his young wife, is in the hands of Horace B. Carpenter. The villiany and the treachery of the man is somewhat redeemed by his dying confession and keeps him from being the thorough villian that Iago is. Mr.

THE FACTOR'S INDIANS CAPTURE NED

Carpenter plays the part with due emphasis on the motives that underlie the actions.

All the other persons are entirely adequate, especially Jode Deane as Picard, the half-breed, Vera McGary as Julie, and Milton Brown as Me-en-gan. These players by the naturalness and the understanding with which they interpret the Indian and the half-breed character must have lived among them in the Canadian woods.

Sardis, Miss., Aug. 12.

MANAGERS of the motion picture theatres of this city need not fear for the co-operation of the church people in the future.

A few days ago the Presbyterians of the city advertised the coming of a noted minister for a meeting, but on his arrival it was found that the seating capacity of the church was far short. Managers of the Christine and Amuse-U theatres then stepped into the breach and offered to supply the seats.

The theatres had to remain closed on that evening as the result, but any trace of enmity on the part of the church element to the motion picture house has disappeared and the local managers have made a splendid investment.

WARNER'S INVADES NORTHWEST

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 10.

WARNER'S Features is planning on a general development of the Spokane territory during the coming fall and winter. As a starter a new Warner office has been opened in this city to cover the territory in eastern Washington, Idaho and Montana, commonly known as "The Inland Empire."

The office has been placed in charge of J. W. Dumont, who, until recently, was a big-time vaudeville player, appearing with Mrs. Dumont in a sketch called "When Betsy and I Were Out." The Best Theatre here plays Warner's bookings exclusively.

"THE LITTLEST REBEL"

(Photoplay Productions—Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

HERE is a picture which will make a strong appeal to women, although it is a "war" film, filled with the spirit of battle and sudden death. The heart of a little child whose winsome face and tender ways pervades the scenes, sheds its purity over the actions of rough brutal natures and influences the iron will of a great commander.

The picture breathes the very life of the "old South," and the perilous days following the beginning of the war between the states. It opens with the pastoral quiet of plantation existence, and shows the content of a well-to-do planter at peace with the world and happy in the bosom of his family.

The plot is developed with due regard to the demands of unity in scenario construction. With admirable art the producers have managed to gain the attention of the spectator at the beginning without resorting to the immediate introduction of scenes depicting violent action. In the majority of war pictures battles and skirmishes are shown on the screen in the first reel to hold the interest, when as a matter of fact, they should have been reserved until later for a proper development of the story.

Not so here, however. The cavalry charges, artillery duels and other high tension episodes are held back to produce a grand climax near the end of the picture. The audience feels in witnessing them in "The Littlest Rebel" as if they come as a natural sequence of previous incidents. The impression is not created that they are extraneous excrescences, useful only for the purpose of hiding the lack of real plot.

The photography shows a conscientious desire to produce each scene with clearness and distinctness of outline. A novel feature of many blue and yellow lighting effects was produced by a diminishing focus which made it look as if the scenes were viewed through an oval gradually contracting until nothing is seen but a pin point of illumination.

The director displayed his appreciation of the effectiveness of distance on the spectator in selecting for the battle scenes ground which permitted the camera to catch the range of unusually long perspectives. One could see down the gentle slopes of low hills for miles and take in all at once the operations of a numerous troop galloping at headlong speed, amid a terrific artillery fire. No more striking battle scenes are found in a film now being shown anywhere, and they have been staged with such consummate realism that a slight effort of the imagination is sufficient to create the thrilling illusion of witnessing actual engagements between armed forces.

Herbert Carey, a planter, becomes dissatisfied with two of his overseers, Joe and Jim Dudley, and discharges them. War is declared, shortly after, and Carey joins the Southern army while the Dudleys, whose deadly hatred he has incurred, enter the ranks of the Northern forces.

Carey, who proves in time to be one of the ablest scouts on the Confederate side, is finally captured by the aid of his enemies, the Dudley brothers, and on information furnished by them, is sentenced to be shot. Little Virgie, whose sweet childish manner is irresistible, touches the heart of General Grant and obtains the prisoner's release.

An able cast headed by E. K. Lincoln as Captain Carey, interpret the parts intrusted to it with an intellectual appreciation of the demands of the plot.

"THE BETTER MAN"

(Famous Players—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

REV. CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY has made an eloquent appeal for more spirituality in the ministry in this contrasted picture of two types in the church. One is the vigorous, virile, unselfish worker in a slum parish who devotes his whole heart and soul to the welfare of his poor parishioners; the other is the minister of a fashionable chapel, and his entire thought is for his own advancement to the bishopric.

William Courtleigh is cast for the Rev. Mark Stebbing, the poor, struggling, wholesome, kindhearted rector of St. Osmund's. His delineation impresses one with the sincerity and earnestness that lay behind this rough, uncouth preacher and social worker, and made him idolized by the poor people.

Rev. Lionel Barmore is of exactly opposite temperament, although the two men are friends and both love the same girl. He is affable and pleasant without the open-souled generosity of Stebbing, and courtly and polished in his manners.

His tastes are scholarly and on the whole he is as much an aristocrat as the other man is a democrat.

This strong contrast is brought out fully by Arthur Hoopes who acts opposite to Mr. Courtleigh. Margaret Wharton, the beautiful daughter of the great traction magnate, General Henry Wharton is portrayed by Alice Claire Elliott. Her conception of the petted but courageous and unselfish girl is thoroughly characteristic. Robert Broderick gives a fine picture of a masterful captain of finance, without forgetting the tenderness of such natures toward daughters.

The picture strikes the spectator as a daring and earnest protest against conditions as they are found in many of our churches. Dr. Brady is himself a clergyman, and is in position to know whereof he speaks. For this reason, aside from the story value that the picture contains, nearly every audience, including even those persons who do not bother their heads about sociological questions, will find much to think about and carry away from the theatre.

"BRANSFORD IN ARCADIA"

(Eclair-Universal—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture is adapted from the story which ran in the "Saturday Evening Post," written by Eugene Manlove Rhodes. That the picture is the finished product of a competent producer as well as author is quite plain. The picture the greater part of which has been enacted in the West, contains rapid action calculated to keep the interest at the highest point. There is little padding.

The latter part is supposed to transpire in the East, which affords a change not wholly unwelcome from the previous scenes. The photography throughout is of the best variety. The film is tinted appropriately in places. Some excellent scenes of the characteristic riding that used to mark the "wild and woolly" have been filmed.

The story is of an absorbing nature and will entertain the many who are lovers of the rapid drama of the West. The plot is not at all obvious at the start and one is kept guessing as to the final outcome. This concealment of course is permissible, but at times a little too much is left to the imagination in regard to specific scenes.

Bransford is a plain cowboy and falls in love with Elinor. She is beloved by an unscrupulous banker, who after seeing that he has no chance against Bransford robs his own bank and casts the blame on him. Much transpires before the Westerner is exonerated. Later he goes East where Elinor lives and the two are married. J. W. Johnston and Edna Payne are the principals.

"NORTHERN LIGHTS"

(Life Photo—Five Reels)

WE have heard much of the psychological novel, but the motion picture that attempts to portray the development of a character is exceptional. The fact that this picture shows the effect upon a man's character of prenatal influences that mark him a coward, makes it notable, especially when the part is impersonated by an actor who feels and understands the character.

This pitiful figure is well drawn and finely impersonated up to a certain point, and until then it is entirely convincing, and we deeply sympathize with the poor fellow who has to go through life bearing the burden of such a terrible handicap. All the anguish and the mental torture that the scorn and reviling of others bring him, all the bitter pangs and cruel suffering of conscience that his own realization of his weakness forces upon him, are admirably conceived by Harry Spingler, who has the part of Wallace Gray, and no one can help feeling the utmost compassion for the unfortunate one, so true and real is the impersonation. But it seems an error to have this man throw off the trait over which he has already been represented as having absolutely no control, and achieve honor and redemption by performing a most valiant deed. The psychology of this appears all the falser, when it is remembered that he has the identical motive as the basis of this act that he had before when he joined the army to prove that he was not a coward and thus win the girl he loves, and instead of fighting when the enemies made an attack, he turned and ran, a base deserter.

But the story is full of human interest and will not fail to be received appreciatively. There are several strong climaxes, as the meeting of the surgeon, married to the girl whom Gray loves, and his first wife supposed to be dead. The dramatic possibility of this scene is enhanced by having the audience know the secret of the relations of these three persons, whereas only two of the persons know. The dramatic irony heightens the interest and the suspense.

The morphine incident is not made as clear as it should be. We are puzzled when we see the young woman taking the opiate and we don't know just what to make of it. If she is addicted to morphine, the fact should have come out before we see her husband changing the morphine for poison, otherwise we are baffled and find no reason why she should take up the morphine bottle. These scenes, it is announced, are being radically altered, however.

The cast is extremely well-balanced, although there is not the opportunity for emotionalism in the other characters that falls to the impersonator of Wallace Gray. William H. Tucker gives the impression of unscrupulous power to Dr. Sherwood. Iva Shepard and Kathryn La Salle are charming and girlishly sweet as the two orphan sisters, Florence and Dorothy Dunbar. William F. Sorrell makes a generous and high-minded Indian of Swiftwood. Anna Laughlin is abundantly able to take care of the trying part of the wife who, as it were, comes to life, and Harry Knowles makes a stoical and firm father, Captain Gray, who puts duty ahead of all other calls.

"THE TAVERN OF TRAGEDY"

(Majestic—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

DONALD CRISP, Dorothy Gish and F. A. Turner in any picture will make it a pleasure to see, even if it contains a hackneyed story, but in a picture that is quite new, these three certainly excel. The acting, the photography, the mysterious atmosphere that is apparent throughout the picture hold the interest.

The keeper of an old inn is informer for both Union and Confederate armies during the Civil War. A Northern spy stops at his tavern, and the innkeeper learns that there is a reward out for his capture. He plans to make him prisoner, but the Northerner is warned by the old man's stepdaughter and the two escape together.

"THE $5,000,000 COUNTERFEITING PLOT"

(Dramascope—Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE $5,000,000 Counterfeiting Plot" which is known in the official circles in Washington as "The Philadelphia-Lancaster Counterfeiting Mystery," which William J. Burns, the greatest of all detectives, succeeded in penetrating, is the absorbing topic of these six reels. Mr. Burns himself appears in his original role of detective, and throughout the picture one is enlightened on the system that he and his associates use in tracking criminals. His methods are so simple and clear that it seems as if anyone would be able to do the same thing. Mr. Burns, in a short speech at the New York Theatre, New York, where the picture received its first public showing, informed the public that anyone could do it, if he put a little time and trouble on the matter, but Mr. Burns is modest.

Naturally a picture, no matter how novel, and no matter who appears in the leading role, would not be complete without its love story. John Walton, one of Burns' aides, meets the chief counterfeiter's daughter, and falls in love with her. Later Burns procures the man's pardon for the sake of his daughter and the young detective. This is the only part of the picture which is not absolutely authentic.

An extra finale scene shows Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, the creator of Sherlock Holmes, congratulating Mr. Burns on his many successful cases.

That the picture will be a success is almost a foregone conclusion. With such a well-known man appearing in the leading role all doubt of its success is dispelled. But as with most pictures of great length, it is a little tiring toward the end. The production is a detailed reproduction of the famous case, but there is a little too much detail, and some scenes could be left out without harming the story, but those who wish to see how the great detective works will surely be well pleased with it as it stands.

"THE EUROPEAN ARMIES IN ACTION"

(Kleine—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WE hear so much about the respective sizes of each European army, and of late so many accounts of the battles of the various belligerents, that there is a universal desire to see the types of men that are the foundation of the powers of Europe, their methods of warfare, maneuver, charges, their guns in action, etc. George Kleine has given the public just such a picture. The armies of the French, English, Germans, Belgians, Austrians and Hungarians, Swiss, Montenegrins and Italians are all brought before the eyes of the public.

Some of the large battleships which have already taken part in the war are also shown. An interesting picture is the manufacturing of thirteen-inch guns in the Armstrong Works of Italy.

A series of scenes which are most entertaining are those taken from a French dirigible while she is soaring over Paris. A number of points of interest are shown, but the picture is given to convey the idea of how utterly unprotected modern cities are from modern methods of warfare.

The photography in the print shown is not up to the usual Kleine standard.

"THE AVENGING CONSCIENCE"

(Griffith-Mutual—Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

TO D. W. Griffith, one of the foremost film producers, goes the honor of being the first man to attempt to picturize a story of Edgar Allan Poe. It is well that the task was allotted to Griffith, as a less competent director would not have done so well. The greatest praise that can be accorded the picture is to say that Mr. Griffith has succeeded.

"The Avenging Conscience" is an adaptation from Poe's story, "The Tell-Tale Heart." But it is not only in the adaptation from this story that the beauty of the picture lies. It is the spirit and the atmosphere that pervades the entire production. Anyone who is acquainted with Poe will see his somewhat gruesome imagination in every foot of the film; those who are not will realize that the story is the work of a master craftsman.

The picture would count for little if the cast were not well fitted for their parts. Henry B. Walthall gives an excellent characterization of the nephew, who, submitting to the workings of his disordered mind, believes that he has killed his uncle, a character impersonated by Spottiswoode Aitken. Blanche Sweet as the nephew's sweetheart is excellent. The Italian and the detective are played by Gorge Siegemann and Ralph Lewis respectively. Although these are the main characters, a number of Reliance and Majestic stars appear, among whom are Mae Marsh and Robert Harron.

The double exposure work that appears throughout the picture is of the best sort. The photography and lighting is excellent. So technically the picture is perfect.

A young man who has been brought up in the care of his watchful uncle from babyhood very naturally falls in love. His uncle, thinking only of the literary career he had planned for him, accuses the woman of pursuing his nephew with unfeminine boldness. She leaves him in sorrow. The young man's brain, much affected by this occurrence, begins to conjure evil thoughts. Still in his mind he kills his uncle and hides the body, then is hunted down by a detective. In desperation he hangs himself and his sweetheart meets her death. Then—he awakes.

Live News of the Week

J. A. Allen, district west coast manager for Warner's Features, spent last week at the Los Angeles exchange, while on his bi-monthly tour of inspection. He went to Los Angeles from Seattle, and reported good summer business along the coast.

The next release of the Famous Players Film Company will be a domestic drama of American life by Professor William Addison Hervey, of Columbia University, entitled "Aftermath."

VIRGINIA PEARSON

Virginia Pearson and Owen Moore will play the leads.

"Aftermath" is a modern drama of error and atonement. Ruth Morgan and Allan Buchannan, two unfortunate victims of evil and despair, are both drawn to the river's brink, seeking merciful oblivion.

The production is in four reels.

Monday, August 3, was moving day at the 1,800-acre ranch occupied for the past two years by Universal City, and all the buildings were razed and taken in sections to the new 450-acre zoo at the end of Cahuenga Pass, fifteen miles north of Los Angeles. Previous to this time all the animals had been transported to this property and installed in the new concrete cages and barns.

It is the hope of Manager Isadore Bernstein, of the West Coast studios, that all buildings will be completed by January, so that the producing companies can do their work there beginning with the new year.

Bessie Barriscale, a new member of the Jesse Lasky producing companies, will play opposite Eddie Abeles, who takes the title role in "Bobbie Burnit," work on which was commenced last week under the direction of Oscar Apfel. In "Bobbie Burnit," Billie Elmer, the original pugilist-actor, has been cast for the part of Biff Bates; Theodore Roberts, the political boss; Howard Hickman, the confidential clerk, and Sidney Dean, the department store manager.

Alfred Tennyson's "Break, Break, Break" is being put out in pictures by the American Film Company under direction of Sydney Ayres. Vivian Rich and Wm. Garwood play the leads, supported by Jack Richardson, Louise Lester, Harry Von Meter and other popular Flying A stars.

Gertrude McCoy, the leading lady of the Edison company, has taken prominent parts in the "Witness to the Will" and "Peg o' the Movies," but is at her best in such dramas as "The Impersonator," and "The Man in the Street."

Owing to the scarcity and restriction on films of foreign make due to the European situation, Pathé Frères have been obliged to discontinue their Daily News service. They will return to their old policy of issuing two reels of news each week, released on Wednesday and Saturday. Pictures of the European armies, maneuvres and rulers, and any other obtainable news will be furnished in these reels. This policy will continue until the war is over, when the daily service will be resumed.

Tom Moore, president of the Moore Amusement Company operating a number of motion picture houses in Washington, D. C., has just returned to the capital from the north, where he visited many of the important film markets to arrange for bookings. He called upon the studios, the producers, the manufacturers, exhibitors, exchanges, photoplayers, music houses, and supply dealers, and he is not finished yet, as there are a few others he wishes to see. It is Mr. Moore's intention, as in the past, to give to Washington the cream of filmdom and the best way to do it, he declares, is to get on the grounds first and pay your big money for it. He promises the national capital some surprises in new productions as well as in theatre innovations for the winter season.

Guy W. Green and H. A. East, of the Nebraska Feature Company, Lincoln, Neb., will be in New York late in August for the purpose of looking over states right releases and buying features for use in its territory.

"Neptune's Daughter," with Annette Kellermann disporting in Bermuda waters as a mermaid on the screens begins its fourteenth week at the Fine Arts Theatre, Chicago, Aug. 16, breaking all Chicago records for motion picture engagements. It will continue until October.

With the expiration of the present lease on the studio at Yonkers, New York, which the All Star Feature Corporation have been occupying for many months past, it is announced that their new studio at Fort Lee is to be taken over by the company on or about August 15. The interior sets for "Shore Acres" and the production of "The World," in which William Faversham is to star and make his initial appearance in motion pictures, will be the first made there.

A description of the many advantages together with plans, etc., will be given in a later issue.

D'Annunzio's "Cabiria" moves from the Knickerbocker Theatre to the Globe Theatre, New York, on Monday, August 17, to continue for a further period its remarkable engagement. The previous plans at the Knickerbocker made its remaining beyond August 16 impossible, and C. B. Dillingham placed his theatre at the disposal of the masterpiece to continue its long run and to remain in New York when the regular season is inaugurated.

The Allen Feature Film Corporation, of Providence, R. I., has purchased the rights of "The Toll of Mammon" from the Excelsior Feature Film Company for the New England States. Ten territories were sold within the last four weeks.

Harry Handworth and William A. Williams, president and vice-president, respectively, of the Excelsior Feature Film Company, Inc., have returned to the studio at Lake Placid, N. Y., after a short business trip to New York.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company installed a style "H" motion picture orchestra in the Archer Theatre, 2008 West Thirty-fifth street, Chicago, Ill., on August 5. William Weeks is the proprietor of the house, which has a seating capacity of 1,000.

James B. Kelly, the traveling representative of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, Dallas, Tex., was recently in New York City, combining business with pleasure. On his return to Texas he will begin a whirlwind campaign with "The Trey o' Hearts," and "Neptune's Daughter."

The Universal Film Company has secured the film right of the "Terrance O'Rourke" stories, written by Louis Joseph Vance, the author of the "Trey o' Hearts" series. J. Warren Kerrigan will be featured in these pictures, and work on them will be started immediately under the direction of Jaques Jaccard. Vera Sisson and George Periolat will assist Mr. Kerrigan.

Gertrude Selby, vaudeville star, is the newest addition to the Universal forces. She will play leads in the L. K. O. comedy company, of which Henry Pathe Lehrman is director. Miss Selby has never been seen in pictures, but her charming work upon the stage constitutes a handsome recommendation as to the manner in which she will conduct herself before the camera.

She is eighteen years old and has been on the stage for the past three years. After two seasons in musical stock when she played leads, she was with Gus Edwards for a season and following the engagement she toured this country in vaudeville, playing single.

GERTRUDE SELBY

Gertrude Selby is the possessor of all the faculties and physical requisites which make for success in the comedy field of motion pictures.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company has absorbed the business of the National Feature Film Company at 1126 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa., and has retained Simon Libros, the president and manager of the former company, as manager of the Philadelphia exchange.

As fast as the management can handle the business arrangements it will open offices in all the principal cities, including Canada where the company is now completing arrangements for its exchange in Montreal.

C. A. Pressey, Robert H. Lucas, a well-known Louisville attorney, and Fred Sheldon, formerly connected with Warner's Features in Louisville, have just organized the S. and P. Film Supply Company in that city, which opens for business at once. The concern is incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000, divided into one hundred shares of $15 each. The offices are on Green street, between Fourth avenue and Fifth street, Louisville.

Under the direction of George Terwilliger, the Lubin Company will open a studio at Newport, R. I., in the fall. The productions of the company will be featured. Ormi Hawley, Edgar Jones, Louise Huff, Earl Metcalfe, Kempton Greene, Herbert Fortier, Arthur Mathews and Eleanor Barry are the principals of this company.

The board of directors of the Precision Machine Company has appointed Joseph E. Graf acting general manager in charge of all departments.

The William A. Brady Picture Plays Corporation has recently moved into its new studios at Fort Lee, N. J. It is one of the largest and most fully equipped motion picture plants in the country.

It is the concern's plan to release one picture each month at the start. Many of Mr. Brady's Broadway successes will be produced, and if possible the original stars and companies will enact them.

Harry Pollard, of the Beauty Company, has started work on a one-reel comedy, "Susie's New Shoes," in which Margarita Fischer, as the young wife, meets with serious complications in her shopping tour, accusing the innocent Mrs. Casey of stealing her purse. The real culprit is her own husband. How matters were finally cleared up is told in this very clever and humorous photoplay.

A dinner of sumptuous proportions was tendered to Octavia Handworth recently by the management of the Stevens House, Lake Placid's largest hotel. Some five hundred guests sat down to the tables, among whom were many prominent New York society people.

The Liberty Motion Picture Company, located at Germantown, Philadelphia, has in its stock company a number of well-known professionals. Some of the most prominent are: Frances Cummings, Edward B. La Renz, Charles T. Danforth, E. B. Tilton, Katherine Bjorling, Robert Ingrahm, Elizabeth Bjorling, Frank McEllen, Joseph J. Kelly, Irene Kingsland and Jack Shultz. N. E. Milligan, producer for the Liberty Company, is at present engaged in a number of Western and Canadian multiple reel photoplays.

Will E. Sheerer, character man of the Eclair stock company, has had a ripe experience in the field of theatrical work, and before his entrance into pictures was known both in this country and abroad as a "good actor." Four years ago he secured an engagement with the Edison Company, and after a brief experience at that plant appeared in Vitagraph films. Following this he played character leads for Bison, Nestor, Reliance and Crystal, and from the latter company was taken over by Eclair.

A keen interest is displayed at every performance at the Strand Theatre when the European Army and Navy pictures are shown. The German Emperor reviewing his troops in sham battle, different branches of the German and French army, German naval pictures taken at Kiel and the funeral of the Grand Duke and Duchess of Austria are shown on the screen.

Charles Richman, late star of "Help Wanted," will appear in the Lasky production of "The Man From Home." Mr. Richman will be supported by a specially selected cast. Work will be begun immediately.

Bessie Learn, the leading ingenue of the Edison Company, who has been traveling through Europe for the past two months is experiencing great difficulty in booking passage back to America on account of the present state of European affairs.

Francis Ford, director of the extra Bison Universal Company, and Grace Cunard, his leading woman, have returned from their vacation in the East.

Work on "The Rose of the Rancho" with an all-Belasco cast and Bessie Bariscale playing the part of Juanita, is progressing rapidly at the Lasky studios.

Director J. W. Kelley and cameraman Angel are among the latest arrivals at the Eclair Western studio, Tucson, Arizona.

C. Jay Williams, for the past four years director of comedies for the Edison Company, is the latest recruit to the staff of Universal directors.

He knew nothing of pictures until four years ago when a friend, a fellow actor, induced him to pose for the part of Beethoven in an Edison play, "Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata." He scored an immediate success and was engaged to appear in several other productions of the same company.

Will E. Ellis, formerly scenario editor for the Colorado Motion Picture Company, is now located at the Eclair Western studio at Tucson, Arizona, in the same capacity.

James Harris, animal impersonator, is at present appearing as the dog Tige in the "Buster Brown" comedies of the Edison Company. Mr. Harris scored a hit in "Alice in Wonderland" on the legitimate stage as the 'Kicking Broncho and for five years headed many a vaudeville bill in his side-splitting sketch "The Laughing Horse."

Dustin Farnum in "The Virginian" will be the first Lasky release through the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

George A. Lessey has signed with the Universal to direct Imp features with King Baggot in the leads. Mr. Lessey has been an Edison director for the past two years, and during that time he has attracted widespread attention by his marked ability to handle strong dramatic stories.

Prior to Mr. Lessey becoming a director, he was a leading man for the Edison for a year. During the first year that he was a director he produced fifty thousand feet of negative, every foot of which proved successful.

Webster Cullison, managing director of the Eclair Western studio, located at Tucson, Arizona, is in New York on business connected with the organization of two new companies.

with qualities which enable him to choose good selling feature scenarios, actors to suit the leads, and secure the best markets for his productions.

Maurice Lobel, traveling representative for the World Film Corporation, is always springing something new. The latest feature he brings to our attention is his baby girl, which he had on exhibition for the first time shortly after midnight, July 31.

pings. During carbon testing it is our laboratory's practice to measure the value of droppings of every carbon tested and compute them to the basis of cubic centimeters of droppings per inch. Heavy droppings are generally encountered on very high alternating current.

The Life of Carbons

The life of a given grade of carbon naturally depends on the current used. For example, a trim of carbons which are consumed at the rate of two inches per hour at 55 amperes A. C., will burn at a rate of three inches per hour at 65 amperes.

In concluding, herewith are given a few useful pointers which help to eliminate some of the operator's troubles which sometimes occur during burning operation of the carbon arc.

Carbons should always be securely clamped in the holders, as there is always some expansion after carbons start to burn. Carbon holders should be kept clean and should be gone over at least three times a week. By carrying out the above suggestion you insure good contact in holders, longer carbon life, less spindling, and droppings, and no heating of carbon holders.

A fan or overhead draft should not play upon the arc direct. This increases condenser breakage and requires constant manipulation of the arc to obtain steady burning. This is an extremely important point to observe and is never neglected by the best operator.

The setting of carbons during each and every trim should be given proper care and attention. At various times trouble is experienced because of the use of improper trims. Never overload your carbon with current. The trims necessary depend on the nature and amount of current.

Trims on Direct Currents

For alternating current we advocate the use of cored carbons exclusively, the same size upper and lower. The 5/8-inch projector carbon has been the standard for A. C. work when the amperage ranges from 35 to 60. Above 60 a 3/4-inch carbon is recommended.

On direct current various trims can be used, and it has been found that it is important to pair these as uppers and lowers according to amperage used, to obtain best light, efficiency, and operating conditions.

Above 20 amperes and up to 50 a 5/8-inch cored positive carbon is in general use, while for the negative lowers 7/16-inch cored or solid, 1/2, 9/16 and 5/8 cored or solid are employed. If the arc is properly handled, the use of a solid lower on D. C. results in better crater formation, increases in screen illumination, also burning quality is improved.

Projector carbons are made from 7/32 of an inch in diameter to one inch, the former taking about 4 to 6 amperes of current, while the latter will carry 100 amperes.

But no matter how good the carbon may be, if it is carelessly set in the machine, or at the wrong angle, the results must be unsatisfactory. The manufacturers of these particular carbons have experts constantly at work, experimenting and studying how to get the best results with the use of their product and they have formulated a few brief general directions.

Initiative of the Operator

Much depends on the individual wishes of the particular operator and he must find out for himself the means to get what he desires. These directions are not intended to take care of any but the most ordinary cases. But if they are followed wisely, a steady, brilliant white arc will be obtained that is unequaled for picture projection.

In setting carbons for direct current the all-important feature is to get on the upper cored carbon a well-defined crater directly facing the condenser lens. Any setting that will secure and maintain this position is satisfactory, and the followng is but a suggestion founded upon general experience.

On direct current both carbons should slant backward at an angle of about thirty degrees. For starting, the carbons should be exactly centered—that is, so that a line through the center of one carbon would pass through the center of the other. The distance between the two carbons varies from 3/16 to 5/16 inches, depending wholly upon the varying strength of the current, and must be determined by each operator.

Noting the Formation of the Crater

When the carbons are thus adjusted, the current should be turned on and the formation of the crater upon the upper current should be noted. If in this position the crater faces downward the lower carbon should be slightly advanced.

Should the lower carbon be too far advanced, a "shirt" will form on the back of the lower carbon and the point of the lower will come between the crater and the lens. If, on the contrary, the lower carbon is too far back, the crater will face downward or even backward.

The one position to be sought is that in which the crater directly faces the lens and the lower tip of the carbon does not come between the crater and the lens.

On alternating current the two carbons of the same diameter are placed at the same angle, thirty degrees, as for direct current. The carbons should be in perfect line and slightly closer together than for direct current. If the carbons, however, are set too closely together, the craters will face each other and a large part of the light will be lost. When perfectly adjusted a crater will form on both upper and lower carbons, and should face the condenser as squarely as possible.

The Big Carbons and Cartons

Though the Charles L. Kiewert Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., are justly proud of their Bio carbon and its excellent light and noiseless properties, still they are just a bit prouder of the carton or box in which the carbons are put up.

According to this company the Bio package is the first package ever put out which not only keeps the carbons clean, being practically dust proof, but is also damp proof, giving the operator no chance to complain of soft carbons as long as he keeps the package closed. This carbon, say the Kiewert people, comes closer to giving a calcium effect than most other carbons.

Though a poor operator can get an extremely poor light from even the best carbons, according to Mr. George Kiewert, the manager can do much by making sure that the operator is using the right size carbons in his machine. Mr. Kiewert also advises against all attempts to treat the carbons, such as immersing them in a salt solution, etc., as most of these stunts tend to deteriorate the carbon in place of improving it.

Though theatre audiences are, as a majority, totally ignorant of the effect of good carbons on the picture they see, they do know when the light on the screen is poor and will not bother with a house that shows poorly lighted pictures.

THE REISINGER-"ELECTRA" CARBONS

TO every operator of a motion picture machine the question of carbons is a vital one, since success or failure depends entirely upon the light-giving quality of the carbons used.

The carbons imported by the firm of Hugo Reisinger and Company, and which are sold under the trade name of Electra, have always given the greatest satisfaction wherever used because they are made from the highest grade raw material. This product is manufactured within the factory, thus insuring a steady, uniform level of excellence in the output. The greatest care is taken to produce a carbon of accurate diameter and perfect straightness.

SPECIAL FILM REVIEWS

"The Fable of the Coming Champion that Was Delayed." (Essanay. Wed., July 29.)—This is another of George Ade's Fables, and to say that it is as good as the others is about as high praise as can be bestowed. It makes a delicious piece of fun.

The championship bout ought to be a battle royal, but that is just what it is not, and that is where the fun comes in. It turns out to be a very mild and tame affair, and the would-be champion goes back in mortification of spirit, but with greater wisdom, to his grocery duties. The moral is: "In many professions many are called, but few chosen."

"The Mother Heart." (Selig. Two reels. Wed., July 29.)—This picture is a burning denunciation of modern conditions in the society life of our cities, developing a theme that must appeal to all with singular force and directness. The sham and artificiality of so-called high life is revolting to a young girl, brought up in its midst but with a yearning for simple love and motherhood.

The feeling of revulsion becomes so strong that she leaves home, and finds what she desires in the heart of an earnest young shepherd who lives close to nature on the Western plains caring for his flocks.

"The Lure of the Car Wheels." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., July 29.)—The wanderlust is so strong in the hobo that he puts up with almost anything to live his nomadic life. But the sight of a pretty girl overcomes all this in the young tramp in this picture; he settles down, reads law, and becomes successful, being elected mayor.

The girl engages herself to him, but all the time she loves another. He learns this and takes to the road again, boarding a box-car at the wedding hour and leaving the bride waiting at the church. The manipulation of the vision of the car wheels that comes to the ex-tramp and lawyer every now and then is exceptionally skillful on the part of the photographer.

"The Gunman." (Reliance. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 1.)—An absorbing drama adapted from the story by George Patullo. The locale is the West, the action exciting, and the photography perfect. Sam DeGrasse is excellent as the gunman.

The rest of the cast consists of Eugene Pallet, Miriam Cooper and F. E. Turner. The foreman of the ranch, who is a cattle thief on the side, employs a gunman to apprehend the thief, and informs him that he has suspicions of one of the cowboys. But the gunman finds out the truth, makes the foreman give his consent to his daughter's marriage to the cowboy, and all ends well.

"Moonshine Molly." (Majestic. Two reels. Sunday, Aug. 2.)—Robert Harron, Mae Marsh, and Wallace Reid make this picture. Due to their excellent interpretation of the leading parts, it cannot help but meet with success, although the story is somewhat poor. A revenue officer, disguised as a school teacher, meets Molly, the sweetheart of Jud, a moonshiner. He learns the man's identity and he is captured, but later is rescued by his followers. Because he sees that Jud and Molly love each other he lets the boy go.

"The Property Man." (Keystone. Two reels. Saturday, Aug. 1.)—The wonderful and mirth-provoking Charles Chaplain appears in this comedy. His work is excellent. As a property man he is not so good, from the business standpoint, but before the picture is half over the whole house will be in tears from laughter. The whole show goes wrong, due to his flirtatious, neglectful and idiotic ways. The picture ends in a free-for-all hose fight. Mack Sennett appears in a minor part.

"In Temptation's Toils." (Kleine-Celio. Two reels. Tuesday, July 28.)—Francesca Bertini, who by this time is well known to motion picture goers, as she recently appeared in "Pierrot the Prodigal," which ran at the Candler Theatre, New York, appears in this story of great human interest.

It tells how a woman, unwillingly spurned by a man who once loved her, plans revenge, but love conquers and with its triumph comes the woman's redemption. Albert Collins and Emilio Ghione support Miss Bertini. The picture is marked throughout by its artistic scenes, both interiors and exteriors. The photography is excellent.

"This Is the Life." (Eclectic Film Company.)—This comedy, the idea of which is taken from the popular song, makes rattling good fun. There is plenty of movement that keeps the audience guessing just what is going to happen next, and what does happen would bring a laugh from the most sullen misanthrope. The chickens that Uncle finds in the city causes him considerably more trouble than those on his farm.

He gets in the wrong hotel room when he returns through the fire-escape after a midnight escapade, but the explanations to his wife are satisfactory, and the couple go back to their chicken farm without any serious dent in their domestic tranquility.

IN THE DAYS OF "THE DEADWOOD"
Scene from "Salomy Jane" (California Motion Picture Corporation)

Weights and Measures." (Victor. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 17.)—When one sees a Victor with J. Warren Kerrigan and Vera Sisson playing the leads he expects to see something better than the ordinary. His expectations will be fulfilled if he is lucky enough to see this picture. It teems with interest from start to finish, and does not contain a slow moment.

The dishonest mayor of a Western city tries to "get something on" the district attorney, and employs a young girl to implicate the hero. But she falls in love with him, and after surmounting numerous difficulties they are married.

"The Madman's Ward." (Victor. Two reels. Fri., July 31.)—A drama which gets away from the conventional lines of the usual release. Florence Lawrence, Charles Craig, William O'Neill and C. J. Brownell make up the cast, no others appearing. The scenes, which takes place on an island, are picturesque. The subtitles are in verse.

The mad fisherman cares for a child that he found, the sole survivor of a wreck. Only one other fisherman is allowed to see her. One day a stranger comes to the island and the old man in a rage shoots at him but hits the girl. Seeing what he has done, he throws himself over a cliff.

"Firelight." (Eclair-Universal. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 5.)—The action is a little slow but the plot is absorbing, the photography excellent, and the acting of the best. The picture will appeal to the older people of all classes and will doubtless bring tears to many eyes. The popular pair, O. A. C. Lund and Barabara Tennant, play the leading parts.

Money and power constitute the ambition of the married man. Both he has, but desires more. His wife, sitting by the fire with him, recalls a number of bygone scenes, and finally the death of their child. A strike had been pending in the man's factories, but through the counseling of his wife he gives in to his employees' demands and afterwards devotes more time to his wife and home.

"Buddy's Downfall." (Vitagraph. Wed., July 22.)—Every man who remembers his change from short to long trousers will appreciate Buddy's experiences. Buddy has just reached that important period in a boy's life when he is striving toward man's estate and trying, too, to make a deep impression on his feminine acquaintances. Long trousers, he considered his greatest means of conquest. But they are hidden from him, and imagine his discomfiture when he must sally forth to keep an engagement without them.

"REMEMBER YOUR CHILD!"
Scene from "Firelight" (Eclair-Universal—Two Reels—August 5)

"The Seventh Prelude." (Essanay. Two reels. Friday, July 31.)—The mysterious murder of an old millionaire, who was a fine musician, has baffled every effort of the detectives to discover a clue. Every night the daughter hears Chopin's Seventh Prelude just as her father played it, and is being slowly driven into hysteria. Her fiance and his chum undertake to unravel the mystery and they unearth the fact that the uncle of the girl, who has been made her guardian, has placed a talking machine in the house to play this music and drive her out of her mind so that he may manage her fortune. This leads to his arrest for the murder, and later to his confession.

The mystery is admirably concealed until the end, and the spectator may or may not suspect that the uncle is the guilty person. At any rate, his interest in the unraveling of the plot is keen, especially when the whole thing is made so real by the good acting of the principals.

"The Brand of Bars." (U. S. Film Corp. Three reels. Aug. 9.)—A sensational and exciting melodrama of the West, which will be appreciated fully by the lovers of this sort of picture.

Lawrence Peyton and Natalie De Lonton appear in the leading parts. Several hot battles between Indians and cowboys are staged, ending with a scrimmage between the United States troops and Indians. A reformed convict goes West, where after hard work, he becomes foreman of the ranch. All is going well when an old cellmate turns up and tells his employer of his past. But the heroism of the man against tremendous odds and popular opinion proves his worth and win for him the hand of the ranch owner's daughter. The photography of the print shown is poor.

"The Man with a Future." (Lubin. Two reels. Wednesday, Aug. 5.)—Scenario writers should bear in mind that it is a very unusual person indeed that can shift from one environment to another totally different and still be perfectly at home. This film presents a woman brought up among crooks, who then marries a lawyer and moves in an absolutely changed sphere of life without her husband's suspecting for a moment what her antecedents are.

But if we can just get this fact out of our minds, the picture is an absorbing drama, with several fine climaxes where the woman is confronted by the associate of her father. The scene in the courtroom when she saves her father and exposing her own past, is intensely dramatic.

"A Woman Laughs." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., July 20.)—This picture presents a story of the complicated love affairs caused by an adventurous flirt. But the complications are not always quite clear, sometimes almost too intricate for the spectator to grasp the point of the story. Kathlyn Williams plays the coquette, and endeavors, with fair success, to make her heartless laughter over her conquests seem plausible and realistic. Charles Clary, Edwin Wallock and Harry Lonsdale give satisfactory support.

"MILITARY TRAINED DOGS OF BELGIUM"

(Pathe—Split Reel)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AT present the interest of the whole world is centered on Belgium and the heroic defense that that country is making at Liege, and the immense amount of trouble that they are causing the Germans. Nothing could be more appropriate at this time than a picture dealing with that country, and this one which shows the good use that the Belgians put their dogs to in the ways of war will be received well wherever shown.

The dogs are attached to small machine guns mounted on bicycle wheels, and, with the aid of the soldiers, can draw them through narrow paths, where a horse could not gain access. The Belgian soldiers are shown on maneuvers, and no one will find it unentertaining to witness their methods of warfare, which we are lucky to see at the present time.

Views in Dakar, the principal town in French West Africa, start this reel.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY"

(Thanhouser—Eighth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

UP to this episode the conspirators have directed all their attacks on Florence Hargreaves, the daughter of the vanished millionaire, and always they have been refuted by the faithful Jim, who, although only a reporter, seems to possess as much time and money as he desires. Now there is a new turn to affairs and the conspirators, realizing that Jim is a great obstacle in their path, center their forces on him.

They lure him from the newspaper office with the promise of a big scoop. On a desolate street they substitute a pasteboard cover for the customary iron disc which covers a manhole. The rest is easy, Jim steps out of his cab, walks on the trap, likewise into it, and falls into the sewer. Next he is seen floating out of the sewer in another part of the city. He is picked up by two men and returns home.

The most dastardly plans of the male conspirators having gone awry, it now remains for one of the weaker sex, the countess, to take matters into her hands. She promises to be successful in her attempt to separate the two. By well-laid plans the lovers are brought to her home as Florence enters, the countess pretends to faint, and falls into Jim's arms; thus the title of this episode, "The Wiles of a Woman."

Florence thinks Jim false and demands an explanation, and the bewildered Jim is wondering what needs explaining when the second reel closes.

Here is a new situation indeed. The conspirators have for a time been successful. What will be the outcome of the next issue? And how long will the two lovers remain estranged? are questions that loom up in the minds of the spectator and seem almost unfathomable, besides causing the next installment to be awaited for with undiminished interest.

"THE VALLEY OF THE MOON"

(Bosworth, Inc.—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

IT must be admitted that Jack London's stories are admirable for reproduction in motion pictures. We have seen "John Barleycorn" and "The Sea Wolf," and now we have "The Valley of the Moon." It makes a splendid picture, and does not, as is so often the case, lose by being thrown upon the screen. Mainly this is because Jack London writes red-blooded, stirring tales, with plenty of action on every page, and this is just the kind of story that can be told in films.

All of the great host of readers of "The Valley of the Moon" will not miss anything to speak of when they see the pictures, and those who have not so far had the good fortune and pleasure to read the book, will get the same enjoyment in probably much less time, a special desideratum in this age of hurry and haste.

Mystle Stedman is picked for the difficult and trying part of Saxon, and she achieves a distinct triumph. There is no chance to miss that fact that she is descended from pioneer stock, of the men and women who braved the dangers and hardships of the plains. She puts just enough fire and impetuosity into the part, without destroying her innate and deep-seated gentleness and affection. Jack Conway is Billy Roberts, the pugilist-turned-teamster, and although without the enormous physique of Jack London's hero, he is a big, raw-boned, muscular man, and succeeds in conveying an impression of abundant endurance and latent strength.

There is something very real about every scene. The players have made the sincerity and force of the characters stand out above all else. When it becomes necessary to show strikers and strike-breakers in an angry clash, there is a mob riot that is unlike the makeshift affairs so often palmed off, and it seems that we are actually viewing violence and destruction of life and limb.

The wandering spirit is strong in the veins of this strong-bodied pair, and when it seems that everything is against them in the city and their happiness can never come to them there, the call of the country beats strong and they set out to find happiness in the great valleys and mountains of the West. The spot that will satisfy them must be so perfect, that it hardly lies on this earth, but in a Valley of the Moon. They find it hemmed in by lofty mountains, and its name is Sonoma, which is Indian for the Valley of the Moon. Here they stop, with peace and content and happiness in their hearts. Every man who has felt the drudgery of the city has had the same longing, but without the daring to face about and obey the call, he has not won this freedom and supreme happiness.

"THE TREY O' HEARTS"

(oGld Seal—Fourth Chapter)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HOWEVER much the third part of this serial fell below the high mark set by its predecessors, this part amply makes up for it. Water is again the scene of action, and it is almost safe to say that the public is provided with a spectacle in this instalment that it has never seen before and will not see again for some time to come.

That scene is a large sailing vessel coming toward another, in which Alan Law, both the sisters and their parties are sailing. The spectator is shown this large vessel approaching slowly but never erring from its course, which leads it right into the other. It is seen to tear its way through the side of this ship, and then slowly back out.

THE RESCUE OF JUDITH

Very naturally the other boat sinks, and all the occupants take to the water where they renew their desperate fight which the collision interrupted. It is no easy matter to swim around in the water for fifteen minutes with one's clothes on, but when it comes to fighting, pushing each other under, and even using fists, the actors that play the principal parts are deserving of great praise. After quite a time in the water they manage to get into boats which floated off the lost ship.

Alan, Rose and the captain are aboard a small rowboat while the other party takes possession of a motorboat and is giving chase to the other when the picture closes, leaving one to guess at the outcome of the chase; but also leaving a lasting impression in his mind of the realistic collision which he has just seen. The whole scene is over in less time than it takes to tell it, but the trouble it caused the producer and the company was plentiful.

Two boats were bought especially for the purpose at considerable cost, and after the water had been cleared of the "innocent bystander" with the greatest of pains the police interfered, and it was only after much persuasion that they let the thing proceed.

This instalment is called "The Dead Reckoning" and will be realesed on the 23rd of August.

"SHANNON OF THE SIXTH"

(Kalem—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture will appeal to those who love a true-blue war drama produced well with wonderful scenery, clear photography and a well-laid love story running throughout the entire play. Two large battle scenes are shown in a great amount of space, but they are well worth it; they are so realistic that one can hardly realize that he is witnessing a sham battle rehearsed for the camera. It is obvious that a great amount of time and trouble was spent.

The picture is adapted from Edward E. Kidder's famous drama of the same name. The time is the half-way mark of the nineteenth century, when England had all she could do to suppress the obstinate natives of India. Their numerous outbreaks form the nucleus of the picture, and their suppression brings about the two furious engagements so vividly depicted on the screen.

The love story that runs through the film is tender though unconventional and differs from the average. The only fault is that there is not enough of this story to hold the continuous attention of the spectator. It is not apparent enough to connect the numerous scrimmages and battle scenes that crowd the film.

"THE PERILS OF PAULINE"

(Eclectic—Eleventh Episode)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

A BOLD and intrepid young lady is Pauline, and the more we see of her the more impressed are we by her pluck and daring. At the same time it must be confessed that she needs a chaperone to watch after her and to keep her out of danger, rather than this guardian, who will stoop to any scheme to get her out of the way. The chaperone might prevent her playing into his dastardly hands and risking her precious life when there is no earthly reason for doing so, except to afford us exciting entertainment, and what more potent reason could there be? Perhaps a chaperone might handicap Miss Pauline's efforts in this direction, and as she succeeds so well in holding us in suspense, we ought not to complain.

With plotting and counter-plotting, scheming and rescheming, this episode holds the spectator breathless in his anxiety to know whether the young lady will escape the wicked net that Owen is drawing around her. We know that she is rushing madly and blindly into the mouths of roaring lions. Will Harry save her? He does his best, but a plunge down a precipice in her automobile keeps her from being devoured by the ferocious beasts.

OWEN REVEALS HARRY'S COUNTER PLOT

This is so interesting, that in a few words it must be told how it comes about. Pauline is all eagerness to get to the wedding of a friend. Owen, the monstrous rascal, has become desperate in his efforts to get rid of her and get her money, so he hires a lion-trainer to let loose his beasts near Pauline when she arrives at the wedding.

Harry learns of the wicked plot and gets her automobile and chauffeur out of the way so that she cannot go. But the gardener is an ex-racer, so never at a loss what to do in an emergency, she persuades him to drive her in another car. He goes too fast, loses control and dashes over an embankment. Harry, always on the spot at the right moment, having followed in a taxi-cab, rushes on the scene and pulls her from under the wreckage, apparently none the worse for her roll over the cliff. She gets up, and with that never-say-quit spirit of hers, is ready and determined to continue on to the wedding.

"THE GILDED KID"

(Edison—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

SO many of the comedies enacted before the camera depend solely for their effect upon horseplay, upon beating and knocking over and kicking and general free-for-all fights and rough-house. It is not so strange either that a great part are of this character when the effect upon the average audience is noticed. But there is another kind of audience, in the minority perhaps, that does not get much amusement out of this rough and tumble sort of thing; rather it appreciates a comedy based upon a clever idea and worked out without bodily harm to any of the persons concerned.

Such a comedy is this latest written by Mark Swan and produced by J. E. Williams. The whole plot hinges on a wager made by a youthful spendthrift and his rival for the hand of a pretty girl. The spendthrift had been helped out of so many scrapes with money by his wealthy father that he had become known to all the policemen, and the bet was that he could get arrested inside of three days, the loser to remain away from the sweetheart for six months. Arthur Housman as the Gilded Kid is delightful in the way he takes each successive turn-down from the police. At last he takes another prisoner's place, but, of course, this prisoner never comes back, and in a cell the poor fellow is left while his rival walks off with the girl.

"LAY DOWN YOUR ARMS"

(Great Northern—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

BARONESS BERTHA VON SUTTNER was a noble advocate of peace and used her pen, her talents, and her fortune in opposition to war. In her novel, "Lay Down Your Arms," she pictured with horrible realism the disastrous effects of war upon family, city, and nation, and made it an eloquent plea for the abandonment of this barbarous method of settling disputes between nations. An adaptation of this novel upon the screen by the Great Northern Film Company comes with almost prophetic timeliness at the moment when all of Europe is plunged in war.

War is pictured in these four reels, but with such undeniable

reality that there is no danger that any martial feelings will be aroused in audiences that might lead to outbreaks. It is not the pomp and circumstance, the pageantry and the splendor of war, as it appears on dress parade; but the hard, terrible, overwhelming reality of battles and mangled bodies of horses and men, of distress in business, of disease that follows in war's wake.

The production must have required enormous outlay to present with so much vividness these battles, in which great numbers of men are engaged, shells hurled, and houses and churches destroyed. It is evident that the pictures are not mere illusions produced by the trickery and skill of the photographer, but are pictures of actual scenes. Before this background of war and its horrors there is an appealing story of love and family life, into which war bursts with heart-rending cruelty. No more pathetic scene could be enacted than the burial by the aged count of his daughter Rose, who has been carried off by the cholera brought from the battlefield and camp. Martha, the other sister, has married a young officer. Tilling, although her sentiments are strongly opposed to warfare. Her entreaties finally prevail with him to give up military life, but not until after tragedy has come into the family. Each of the principal players, Augusta Blad as Martha, Fritz Petersen as Rose, Philip Bech as the Count, and Olaf Fonse as Tilling, prove themselves fully equal to the trying task of interpreting this sad but powerful story.

"THE LAST VOLUNTEER"

(Eclectic—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A BONA FIDE war drama, not professing to be connected in any way with the present struggle, will meet with great success at the present time, simply because

THE DEATH OF RAOLPH

"war" is on the tongue of almost every person in the world and every person knows that actual pictures of the present war are unobtainable. But this picture deals with an imaginary situation in Europe which precipitated war, and the spectator is given such a vivid idea of the horrors of warfare that he can readily imagine the present case in Europe.

The battle scenes are most realistic, even an aeroplane is seen dropping bombs on the opposing forces with deadly results, and through the whole picture runs a beautiful love story, just strong enough to knit the political controversies and battle scenes together, and never for an instant allowing one's interest to falter.

Still another essential in favor of the success of the production is its able cast. Irving Cummings takes the part of Prince Ludwig, head of the province of Saxe-Tholberg. Eleanor Woodruff as Katrina, the innkeeper's daughter, makes a charming heroine. Paul Panzer, the well-known heavy of "The Perils of Pauline" is excellent as the ambassador of Austrania. Robert Broderick, E. C. Hoyt, Mary Gray, Harold Crane and A. H. Barstar complete the cast.

Ludwig, in his wanderings about the palace grounds, meets and falls in love with Katrina, but he is unable to marry her as a political marriage is necessary to avert war. Katrina's brother is thought to have killed the Austranian ambassador while the other is attempting to procure plans. The Austranians demands his execution. Katrina confesses that she committed the crime. This causes the war. When it develops that the Austranian sharp shooters are killing all those who attempt to signal another division of the army, Katrina rushes out and raises the signals, but is killed in so doing. This heroism wins the war, but the prince causes the nation to mourn.

"Virginian" First Lasky-Paramount Release

FUN WITH THE DRUMMER
Scene from "The Virginian" (Lasky-Paramount Feature)

THE first release of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, through the newly-formed Paramount Pictures Corporation, will be Owen Wister and Kirk La Shelle's thrilling Western tale, "The Virginian," with Dustin Farnum in the title role.

"The Virginian" in five parts and four hundred scenes, is looked upon by the Lasky people as their best production to date. Certainly from the magnificent opportunities afforded by the book, a most interesting visualization has been made a possibility.

Many of the scenes in "The Virginian" were laid in the Calistoga, California country. A cast of three hundred players, including James Neil, Winifred Kingston, J. W. Johnston and Cecilia De Mille, daughter of Cecil B. De Mille, Lasky's director general.

"The Virginian" will be released September 7. A special matinee will be given to the reviewers early next week.

Good Lobby Display Draws Crowds

Wyanoak Reproductions of Mary Pickford Recently Shown in Numerous Theatres Attracts General Attention for Its Artistry

THE successful houses throughout the country are dressing their lobbies artistically, and with an attractiveness that will permit only the display of the highest class of subjects, in suitable frames, and proper designs that will attract the attention of those who enjoy pictorial views and who do not feel abashed at standing to look over those that the manager or owner displays for their benefit as an advertising medium.

There recently was displayed at a number of houses throughout the United States a hand-colored reproduction of Mary Pickford. Instantly it was favorably commented upon by the press, and the rush on the publishers was so great that they could hardly fill the demands.

This artistic piece of work was furnished by the Wyanoak Publishing Company, New York, and the firm expressed surprise at the numerous demands, in view of the tendency to use the display which had marked the business up to the present time.

The motion picture exhibitor had come to the realization that his lobby was one of the heart beats of his success, and adjusted himself to the conditions that the progress of the industry demanded.

A FORD DETROIT WEEKLY

The Ford Automobile Company, of Detroit, is putting out a Ford Detroit Weekly which embraces 1,000 feet of film pictures taken at Belle Isle, on the streets and around Detroit. Twice in the film the Ford automobile appears either in a street scene or in a picture of some portion of the big plant. Three Detroit theatres are now running the picture, The Empire, 191 Woodward avenue, the Amus-U, River Rouge and the Grande, Delray. The picture is then sent throughout the state. The Ford company has installed equipment for making the pictures at a cost of about $20,000.

CELEBRATING IRELAND ON THE SCREEN

WALTER McNAMARA, president of the company bearing his name, who recently returned from Ireland, where he took pictures for a drama to be entitled "Ireland a Nation," has had a varied career. He has been an engineer on a power schooner, built Otis elevators, was an editor, a politician, a pantomime comedian with Wilkie Bard, and founded the Fabian Society.

Mr. McNamara was born at Lismore, County Waterford, Ireland, but has spent most of his life in this country. He has been in the motion picture field only eighteen months but during that period he has won a reputation as a man with original ideas who works with a purpose.

WALTER McNAMARA

Mr. McNamara entered the film field by writing scenarios for the Universal Company. He created some of the biggest sellers of the company. Later he was commissioned to write dramas featuring King Baggott. One of them, "Officer 175," made quite a hit wherever shown. His production, "Traffic In Souls," made his reputation.

His latest production, manufactured for his own company, "Ireland a Nation," will be released shortly.

SCREENING A FUTURITY

The Walter Miller Feature Film Corporation, with offices at 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, is now producing a four-reel feature entitled "The Futurity Winner," introducing Marvelous Miller, one of the greatest jockies in the world.

For the feature race of the picture Mr. Miller uses the horse Colin, the winner of so many races on the Metropolitan tracks. The picture, which will be ready for release about the middle of September, is staged by Edwin Middleton, formerly with the Biograph Company.

The Operator's Exchange

SIX PASS ROCHESTER TESTS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Rochester, N. Y., August 13.

The third and last test for motion picture operators was held on July 28 by the local commission which issues licenses to operators. Twenty candidates tried the test, and of that number but six passed. That brings the number of licensed operators in Rochester up to seventy-four.

It is said that there is a scarcity of operators here, and that several men are holding down two jobs apiece, working their allotted hours in two different houses, or working two shifts in one house.

There will be no more examinations for motion picture operators for several months, so that those who failed to take the test on the first three examinations, or who took the test and failed, will have to wait some time before having another opportunity. Fire Marshal E. O. Wheeler is in charge of the examinations.

The Rochester branch of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, No. 253, is growing rapidly. This branch is for motion picture machine operators. It was formed but a short time ago, but already has forty-five members.

As but seventy-four licenses have been granted by the local examining board, and as fourteen of those were issued to managers of theatres who qualified as operators, it will be seen that there are but fifteen licensed operators in the city who have not joined the union. Of those fifteen, six have signified their intention of joining by making application for cards.

Every union operator in the city has succeeded in obtaining a license.

The union meets on the fourth Sunday of each month.

MANHATTAN MEANDERINGS

Brother Cecil Wood has temporarily severed his connection with the Atsco Company and left for the road with "Cabiria" for a southern tour, which, it is rumored, will extend over a period of fifty weeks.

Motor equipped Simplex machines with aluminum bases will be used, and with Brother Wood on the job, perfect projection is assured.

Several first-class operators have filed their names with me for positions, and any exhibitor desiring the services of an experienced operator, and willing to pay for said services at a rate commensurate with their ability, may communicate with me, and I will furnish the names and addreses of several really good men.

Brother Joe Abrams, who is well known through his connection with the Nicholas Power Company, is now the proud father of twins, who arrived during the past week.

Brother Van Orsdale has been very conspicuous lately, through the daily trip that he takes up and down Broadway in an automobile. This managing is pretty soft at that, eh Van?

Brother Cowan, of Local No. 182, called at the office of the Atsco Company during the last week, and needless to say he was welcome.

Brother Cowan is a live wire and is welcome at all times in the office of any up-to-date company.

I understand that Brothers Teddy Greenberg and Henry Wanamaker have organized as the World's Famous Film Corporation and will devote all their efforts to pictures of the feature type.

At the regular election of officers of Local No. 249, the following were elected for the ensuing term:

President, J. J. Schaefer; vice-president, H. R. Kaughlman; corresponding and financial secretary, W. E. Kennamer; busines agent, Jas. H. Croshy; guard, A. J. Warren.

The date and time of meeting was also changed to the second and fourth Sunday of each month, at 10:00 a.m.

Brother V. O. Gittus has returned from the road, arriving Sunday, after playing "Neptune's Daughter" for the last twelve weeks, three of which were played in Philadelphia and nine in Pittsburgh.

Brother Tom Costello left for Buffalo on Friday evening, to play one of Shubert's latest productions, known as "America." I am given to understand that this is a very massive production, taken from their great Hippodrome spectacle of last season, and that it will register a hit is a foregone conclusion.

Brother Chas. Siler was also engaged to go to Montreal with another company of this same production, but the date was cancelled. This cancellation is thought to be due to the fact that Canada may become involved in the discussion now attracting the attention of the entire world and prevailing in Europe.

Speaking of the European situation: What are we going to do for carbons if this condition exists for the next six months

This is a good opportunity for the American manufacturer of carbons to improve the quality of his product and corral the market before the German manufacturer recovers his footing.

An Error and An Improvement

In an issue of recent date, I stated that there were no practical operators on any of the examining boards of the different cities throughout the state of New York, with the exception of Rochester.

Since that time it has been called to my attention that I made an error in that statement, as the city of New York has a practical operator on the examining board in the person of T. J. Coghlin, who at one time was employed as a demonstrator by the old Cameraphone Company.

Since the advent of Mr. Coghlin's appointment, or detail, to the board, I am given to understand that only about one in sixty who have been examined within the last few weeks have succeeded in obtaining the so ardently sought certificate.

If you will remember, at the opening of the school, which was inaugurated by the Y. M. C. A. on May 1, it was stated by Mr. Wynkoop, the electrical engineer in charge of the electrical inspection department, who attended this opening, that about 11 per cent of the applicants for licenses were passing the examination at that time.

I maintain that the examination, as conducted even now, has a whole lot of room for improvement, for the questions pertain almost entirely to the electrical connections and the fire hazard.

Fires have a habit of occurring while the film is passing through the mechanism of the machine, and insofar as I can ascertain, no questions are asked as to this, the most important part of any projector.

The present up-to-date projector is practically fireproof, anyhow, but at the moment of this writing none are FOOL-PROOF, and this examination is to eliminate the careless and incompetent. Such being the case, will someone kindly inform me why, in these days of automatic shutters, and other safety devices, we have more fires than we ever did in the days when we ran the film into bags, and magazines were unknown.

I repeat, that I am very glad to hear that there is a PRACTICAL OPERATOR on the Examining Board of the License Bureau, and hope that there will be a noticeable improvement in the class of projection resulting from this fact in the very near future.

W. D. Chaney.

PHILADELPHIA GLEANINGS

Brother Orville Harvey, of Local No. 307, died at his home on Saturday night, July 25, after an illness that lasted for several years. Harvey was one of the organizers of the Philadelphia operators and was active at all times, having served on more committees than any other man in the local. He was always ready to help any fellow operator at all times. His death was a severe blow to his many friends. Local No. 307 sent a floral design to the family which was a very pretty reproduction of the I. A. T. S. E. emblem. It stood six feet high and three feet wide.

Brother P. K. Johnson has just returned from the road, having been out with Lyman H. Howe nineteen weeks.

Why did the operators object to clause B? They don't have to pay the extra $5, and if they get it they can thank the committee—if they get it.

Have you played the new game of pool yet? Block pool. How is it played? Nobody knows. Oh, I almost forgot; there is ONE that knows the game. Brother Koff, of the Local, knows. He invented the game, and he says it is great. It ought to be. He is the only one that can play it as yet, but there will be a grand demonstration of the famous game of KOFF'S BLOCK POOL at the rooms of Local No. 307 on Wednesday night, August 12, given by Brother Koff himself. The boys of 307 will all be there but Koff.

The photoplay "Evangeline" is now in its third big week at the Garrick Theatre and still going big. The projection is in charge of Phil "Quo Vadis" Quigley.

Brother George Bothwell, of Local No. 306, was in town last week with his little Simplex and attended the meeting of No. 307. George was formerly a Philadelphia boy and was quite at home with the boys of No. 307. George has developed into somewhat of an orator.

Pete Marx is now in charge of the projection room at the Leader Theatre, taking the position left open by the death of the late Orville Harvey.

W. W. Evans, of the Calehuff Supply Company, will shortly go on his vacation, and Walt says that he is looking for a place to rest, and wants to get about fifty miles from a picture show. You might as well try to get away from seeing a Ford motor car, Walt.

E. L. Caster, who now is connected with the United Features, was formerly a motion picture operator. Strange to say, Caster never worked in a theatre, but he ran a picture machine with carnivals and circuses for many years and can tell the operators of to-day many good stories of the trials and troubles of a gas man. He says you operators have it soft now alongside the jobs he held during his experiences with a circus.

Lou Krouse, the busy business agent of Local No. 307, I. A. T. S. E., deserves a great deal of credit for the way he has handled the situation in the town here, and has not only added more operators to his list of friends, but he has got the support of the majority of the exhibitors in the town, and has proven himself the right man in the right place.

John Hughes, of the Owl Theatre, has greatly improved his projection at the theatre by the installation of a Power No. 6A. John deserves the machine, as he has had a Power No. 5 for two years and has not lost a show in that time.

The operators in the town are looking for that ball team. Where is it? We were promised it a long time ago, but as yet there has never been anything done in the way of getting the thing going.

Robert Taylor, the chief operator (whatever that means) of the Family Theatre, has invented an attachment for a pool table which makes the game very simple. Taylor won't let it out, but we will get it yet, and when we do we will tell you all about it. Until then we will have to wait.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Los Angeles, August 10.

Wilford Lucus, Miss Cleo Madison, George Larkin and other members of the "Trey o' Hearts" company, were at San Pedro last week, making the exteriors for the sixth series of the Gold Seal serial, which will be given the title of "The Crack of Doom."

Francelia Billington, Billie West, Sam DeGrass and Gene Palette, under the direction of Jack Adolfe, are producing a two-reel picture, "Through the Dark," for the Reliance release.

Pauline Bush is playing opposite Joe King in a story of an artist's life, being directed by Joseph DeGrasse, at the Universal Hollywood studio. Carman Phillips and Lon Chaney have prominent parts in this one-reel release.

Grace Canard is being featured in a milady Raffles picture, produced by Frances Forde. This will appear under the title of "The Mysterious Hand," on the Universal program.

A Joker Burlesque

Allen Curtis and his company of fun-makers are staging—for the camera's eye—"In the Clutches of the Villain," which is not nearly so had as it sounds. It is a comedy for the Joker hrand, in which everyhody works but mother.

An order for twenty-four monkeys was placed last week hy Supt. James Barnes of the Universal Zoo, with a New York importer, and it is expected the animals will arrive soon hy express.

Dorothy Gish is to be star in a Majestic suhject directed by W. C. Cabanne. The title of this is "Granny," and portrays the sacrifices of a poverty-stricken girl in order that she may secure a home for her aged grandmother.

How an outlaw is reformed through the influence of the sister is told in a picture produced at the Majestic studio this week hy Jack O'Brien. The title of this production is "Sierra Jim's Reformation," and is replete with thrilling Western scenes. R. A. Walsh, Wallace Reid, Gertrude McLynn, Eagle Eye, Dark Cloud and Fred Burns appear in the cast.

Cabanne Prepares Big Feature

Wm. Christy Cahanne, is at work on another psychological three-reel feature to be released under the title "For Those Unborn." Blanche Sweet is being featured, and among the prominent ones in the cast are W. A. Lawrence and Frank Bennett.

The picture will tell the story of the sacrifices of a woman who secretly learns she is a victim of the white plague, and gives up her beloved husband and happy home rather than transmit her disease to children.

Charles Chaplin, according to members of the Keystone laugh creators, has at last discovered his best work—the impersonation of women. This week he produced a picture under the name of "The Face on The Bar Room Floor," in which he did the 1920 flirt act, playing opposite to Charley Murray.

F. I. Beebe, formerly of the San Diego Sun, is the new puhlicity man of the Universal west coast studio, having succeeded Elliott Clawson, who resigned to accept a similar position with another company.

Players Ride Lumber Chutes

Henry McRea and company of 101 Bison players are home from Hume, California, where they filmed the exteriors for a two-reel picture to be released under the title of "Lure of the Lumher Jack." Some of the players rode lumher down the flumes where the current had a speed of sixty-five miles an hour and excellent pictures were made.

An expose of fictional graft in the building of the great Los Angeles aqueduct, costing $30,000,000, is soon to be made by motion pictures. The scenario for the two-reel suhject is now completed, having been written hy Robert Rinehart, formerly editor of the Municipal News, of Los Angeles, and the picture was filmed last week under the direction of Leon Kent, of the Western Lubin studio, with Velma Whitman taking the part of the heroine and saving her friend, the contractor, from death.

The members of Mr. Kent's Lubin company are at Dead Man's Canyon, north of Los Angeles, where most of the exteriors will be made ahout the great siphon. Many scenes will show the construction of the remarkahle water supply tuhe, which have not heen used in pictures.

Arthur Allardt, who has been with the Flying A company at Santa Barbara, is here spending a two weeks' vacation. Mr. Allardt formerly played with Thanhouser, Majestic and Universal companies, and finds many former acquaintances now in Los Angeles.

"Damaged Goods" in Films

His most recent work was with the Richard Bennett company that played here in "Damaged Goods," at the Mason, which is now at the American studio, where the play is being filmed under the direction of Thomas Ricketts. A new translation for the motion picture version was made and the motion picture presentation will have a numher of additional characters not used by the road company.

Art Gibson, of the Sterling comedy company, was shot in the hand a few days ago, the wad of the blank cartridge penetrating to between the bones of the palm. The injured member was dressed at the Universal hospital.

Anna Little, leading woman of the Universal special feature company, appeared before the camera for the first time in the role of a society woman, playing the title role in the two-reel picture, "Caroline," which is a comedy, the first in which Miss Little has ever played. In the ahsence of Otis Turner, who directs this company, now on his annual vacation, William Worthington, who plays leads and character parts, is directing the production, and taking the part of an American railroad magnate.

Herbert Rawlinson will portray the part of Prince John of Balzovia; Frank Loyd, the valet of the Prince; Helen Wright, Mrs. Carson, a socially amhitious woman; Miss Little, Caroline, her daughter; Laura Oakley, Mrs. Asterholdt; and Beatrice Van, Gay Asterholdt.

Expensive Settings

One of the coming releases of the Lubin company, filmed at the Glendale studio, will be the four-reel subject, "Menace of the Real," a psychological story, in which Cleo Ridgely plays the leading part.

For elahorate settings, Lorimer Johnson, director at the studio of the recently organized Santa Barbara Motion Picture Company, at Santa Barbara, has the advantage of other producers. The company is composed of wealthy men of Santa Barhara, and when Johnson wants a big scene he invites the wives of the company memhers to come to the studio and bring their silverware, cut glass, art collections, and costly bric-a-brac. In a five-reel feature now heing produced, "The Envoy Extraordinary," a story of 1916, in a recently made scene the setting was valued at between $25,000 and $30,000, and many of Santa Barbara's leading society women took part in the ball filmed.

George H. Melford, managing director of the Kalem Glendale studio, has just completed a two-reel comedy in which Douglas Gerrard, the romantic Irish actor, the star of many of Mr. Melford's productions, plays the character part of an eccentric Jew.

The title of the film is "Mickie Flinn's Escape," and one of the leading characters was a large Dane. Among those who took part in the comedy are James Horn, Will West, Cleo Ridgely, Paul Hurst and Marin Sais. Mr. Melford held a bachelor party last week, at Bear Lake, he and six of the men of the company being there to make a picture and enjoy a few days of fishing.

Effect of Pictures on Juveniles

Donald Crisp is producing a picture now which exemplifies the good of motion pictures on boys. In this particular one is shown how the screen hero became an example for a cowardly boy, who later hecomes heroic himself. Paul Willis and Mary Alden are playing prominent parts in this production.

Arthur Mackley was the sheriff again last week. This time in the film "Every Man Has His Price," in which he is playing the lead in addition to directing. The sheriff accepts a hribe for release of a prisoner, and returns it to the party who had been swindled.

Thomas Persons, resident manager of the Selig Zoo, Edendale studio, and the company producing Western drama at Glendale, arrived home last week from a husiness trip to New York and Chicago. He will now give practically all of his attention to the remodeling of the Zoo and the preparation for the puhlic opening about September 1.

In celebration of the sixth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Arbuckle, Wednesday evening, August 5, Mr. and Mrs. Charley Murray entertained at dinner, at the Brentwood apartments.

Detective Writes Bank Script

Director Eddie Dillon recently had the script prepared for No. 6 of the "Bill" series, in which Tammany Young is featured, and the negative was completed last week. Mr. Dillon is anxious to know just how this series is taking, but refuses to judge the merit of the offering by the demands made at the local film exchange.

"Since the Fourth of July I have little faith in exhihitors," the Komic producer said. "The day before the Fourth some theatre owner phoned to the film exchange while I was there and asked for a patriotic picture for the Fourth. He was told there were no new offerings that the exchange would recommend. 'Well, how about that Majestic picture, "The Battle of The Sexes," the theatre man asked, and then I left to keep from laughing."

Irene Hunt and Vester Pegg, the champion rider, were featured last week in a two-reel railroad story, "In the Nick of Time," from the story of that title appearing in the Railroad Men's Magazine, produced hy Fred Kelsey, of the Reliance-Majestic studio. The principal character part is being taken hy Richard Cummings, the versatile performer, who is known from coast to coast for his excellent vaudeville productions.

During the moments that Jack Adolfi, director at Reliance, was not kept husy answering questions relating to his native land, Germany, he produced a two-reel picture recently, "The Bank Burglar's Fate," from a scenario by a famous detective, employed by a hankers' association. In this Sam DeGrasse played the role of detective, Gene Paulette, the thug, and Billie West was the heroine.

Elliott Joins Lubin

Fourteen years on the leading stages of London, three consecutive years as lead at the Royal Theatre, Drury Lane—an engagement which secured a pension of 350 pounds per year for life—nom'nated for membership in the Lambs Cluh of New York, hy John Drew, and for the past year under the management of Daniel Frohman as lead, is the theatrical record of the most recent stage star, Frank Elliott, who has affiliated with the motion picture-producing industry at Los Angeles. Mr. Elliott came to the west coast at the termination of his Frohman engagement on Orpheum time, and closed at Los Angeles, when he became interested in the film drama and its great possihilities.

Mr. Elliott has contracted with Capt. Wilhert Me'ville, managing director of the Western Lubin studio in South Pasadena, for a number of small productions consisting of one reel, with the view of hecoming acquainted with the technique of the photo drama preparatory to opening a studio and manufacturing plant of his own in the future.

"My experience, which has been very meagre," Mr. Elliott said, in speaking of his plans, "has taught me that American manufacturers do not take sufficient time for preparation and filming pictures to secure the best results. At the Royal Theatre more than one year was spent with "The Whip" hefore a puhlic performance was given, and I helieve if such painstaking producing is accorded pictures the results will be far more satisfactory.

"But please bear in mind that, in the language of the western American, I am a tenderfoot. I came to California to learn of the making of motion pictures, as figures show that fully 70 per cent of the negative film made in the United States come from in and about Los Angeles, and so far my trip has

Fifteen Years in a Film Man's Life

Harry R. Raver Began His Career With 50-foot Subjects in 1899—Now He Is Handling World's Biggest Pictures

A MAN whose career in the motion picture industry is well worth studying is Harry R. Raver, who has worked himself to a commanding position by sheer brains and persistency. Mr. Raver is the man who brought "Cabiria," the Itala Film Torino masterpiece, into America. He is founder, president and active head of the All Star Feature Corporation; secretary and treasurer of the Itala Film Company of America, a New York corporation; secretary and treasurer of the Itala Film Company of America, a Delaware corporation, and secretary and treasurer of the Exclusive Supply Corporation.

HARRY R. RAVER

He was one of the first men to handle the short-length subjects, fifty feet each, made in 1899. Now he is handling "Cabiria," which is 11,500 feet long, and the greatest production in the history of motion pictures.

Fifteen years of experience serve as an avenue of approach to Mr. Raver's present position. Back in 1899 he was associated with Bostock's Zoo at the Philadelphia Exposition. At that time films came in fifty-foot subjects and were all single scenes, either topical material or some simple incident. But Mr. Raver saw the enormous future of the motion picture and decided to get in the field. So he bought a projection machine and some films.

Mr. Raver went on tour through the West, playing at all the "opera-houses" in smaller cities and the towns. At that time there were no permanent theatres devoted to motion pictures. Later other subjects were added, among them "McKinley's Funeral," but they were all short pictures, with no special pretensions to artistry.

When "The Great Train Robbery" came out, in 1904, Raver and Darnaby operated this and "The Alps," an electrical show, under canvas. "The Great Train Robbery" alone took in more than $30,000 in twenty-eight weeks that year, or something more than $1,000 a week. When one remembers that this sum was taken in for a thousand-foot picture ten years ago, it will easily be seen that there were real showmen in those days.

This showing rather justified Mr. Raver's confidence in the motion picture industry.

For some time Mr. Raver managed moving picture theatres for William H. Swanson, in Chicago. Later he managed Swanson's exchange in Omaha, and then ran other offices, one in Washington, D. C., and one in Baltimore.

In those days the trade conditions in the motion picture business were constantly changing and more perilous than they have ever been before or since. So when the Eclair Company of France wished to invade America, it wanted an unusually capable man for the position of general manager, and for that place Harry Raver was selected.

Raver's business ability won him quick recognition, and when the Motion Pictures Sales and Distributing Company was formed he was a director in that organization.

STERLING HAS NEW FILM IN PREPARATION

The Sterling Camera and Film Company announce that they have in preparation another multiple-reel feature to follow "The Land of the Lost," but of an entirely different character from that picture or "Over Niagara Falls."

Negotiations by mail and cable are coming in daily for the Australian, South American and Canadian rights for "The Land of the Lost."

NOTED PLAYERS MOVE

On account of the great increase of business of the Noted Players' Film Exchange, which is handling "The Greyhound," the offices of the company will be moved from 1482 Broadway to 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, where it will handle this and other large features.

JULIUS KLEIN

Julius Klein, the New York City manager, and Jerome Lewis, the New York State manager, are conducting the business, and they cordially invite every exhibitor to visit them in their new quarters and get acquainted with them.

LESLIE WINS "POSTAGE STAMP" SUIT

There was brought to an abrupt close, in the Supreme Court, on August 6, a very curious suit instituted against "Arthur Leslie and another." According to the papers in the case, the plaintiff in the suit was Lillian Walker, of the Vitagraph players. Neither Mr. Leslie nor Miss Walker knew of the suit until called into court.

It appeared that Leslie had included the portrait of Lillian Walker in a series of stamp portraits of photoplay stars.

Miss Walker declared that one Pakas, of the Pakas Company, Inc., had brought to her some papers and after stating that it would involve her in no litigation or expense, had induced her to sign them. She had not read the papers, her affidavit related, and had no intention of suing Mr. Leslie. Furthermore, she stated, she had given the defendant full authority to the use of her photograph and its reproduction, and had never given to the Pakas Company any exclusive right to its use.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Reporter on the Case." (Selig. Wed., Aug. 5.)—Reporter Jimmie solves a murder mystery and saves a woman from the false charge that has been made against her on circumstantial evidence. Eugenie Besserer appears as the woman, and, of course, Guy Oliver is the reporter.

"The Second Sight." (Vitagraph. Wed., Aug. 5.)—Poor Ponsonby in his hurry loses his glasses, and with them goes his temper. Everything goes wrong then, but several circumstances, among them a "bear" escape, bring him to his senses and his good temper returns.

"The Fable of the Busy Business Boy and the Droppers In." (Essanay. Wed., Aug. 5.)—George Ade has a plentiful supply of funny situations to draw on for his "Fables," and there is no diminution in their effectiveness. Each one is novel and fresh and entirely different from the others. Here is another, so what need more be said.

"When War Threatens." (Kleine-Cines. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 4.)—When the nation is on the verge of war, a young officer of the navy foils a dangerous hand of spies, and because of his heroism, wins the hand of the admiral's daughter. No actual battle scenes appear, but the picture holds the attention from heginning to end. The photography is excellent.

"Slippery Slim's Dilemma." (Essanay. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—They give poor Slim the smallpox by painting spots on his face while he sleeps, and then he is quarantined so that he cannot see Sophie. The irresistible effect of his serenading makes this destardly plot necessary. Victor Potel is laughable in his character of modern troubadour.

"The Man and the Master." (Biograph. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—Contrasting the home life of two families, one rich and the other poor, this picture is worth while. The poor family receives our sympathy, but the other is brought to kindness after much suffering has been inflicted.

"Memories of Men's Souls." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—Van Dyke Brooke and Clara Talmadge are cast in this beautiful story of love that went wrong through a mistake. The guardian of the girl prevented her marrying the man she loved, and after many years she is a widow, but her dream of happiness is shattered by learning that the man she loves is the head of a family.

"A Daughter of Eve." (Lubin. Two reels. Aug. 6.)—A rural drama in which the credulity of a farmer is played upon by a slick promoter, but a young lawyer prevents disastrous consequences and wins the farmer's daughter. Some merriment is afforded by bucolic constables in pursuit of the promoter.

"The Locked House." (Vitagraph. Fri., Aug. 7.)—John Bunny has become the mayor of Smithtown, and he fears that assassins are trying to make away with his important person. Detectives guard his precious life, but his wife takes these for conspirators. Very amusing and laughable entertainment.

"A Siren of the Desert." (Lubin. Fri., Aug. 7.)—She lures a young miner from his sweetheart, to whom he has plighted his troth. Thus two hearts are broken when she refuses to marry him and sets out in obedience to the call of the desert. Superbly acted by Lillian Wilson as the siren and Paul Parr Smith as the young miner.

"The Skull and the Crown." (Selig. Fri., Aug. 7.)—A James Oliver Curwood comedy of the complications that arise when a young man and a young woman play insane unknown to each other, the one pretending to be Hamlet and the other the Queen of Navarre. The joke ends by their falling madly in love with each other.

"Simple Charity." (Biograph. Fri., Aug. 7.)—A re-issue of an old Mary Pickford film. It is a hitter but unjust arraignment of organized charity and its red tape, which allowed a destitute family to suffer and the father to die of want while conducting an investigation into the merits of the case. If one such case may happen out of the thousands that are dealt with——but the picture is not fair.

"Broncho Billy's Fatal Joke." (Essanay. Sat., Aug. 8.)—Broncho Billy shoots gold into the old prospector's claim and the shock kills him. This popular hero then proved his metal hy giving up his own claim to the prospector's daughter instead of selling it for $100,000. Of course it came back to him later, for we see him already falling in love with the girl. Very touching little play.

"Carmelita's Revenge." (Selig. Sat., Aug. 8.)—Instead of revenge it is kindness that Carmelita bestows upon Jack, who had jilted her for his first sweetheart. The situation that leads to this change in the Mexican beauty is well drawn and almost, if not quite, convincing.

"The House on the Hill." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 8.)—This picture portrays the awful tragedy and the anguish that burns in parents' hearts when they realize that their children are selfish and ungrateful. The lesson is finely brought out.

"They Would Bandits Be." (Biograph. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 8.)—A rollicking Western farce that will please the children and make merry the grown-ups. Three mollycoddles see the success that a bandit has with a buxom shrew whom they all love, so they decide to follow his example and be "bad men," with what disastrous consequences only the picture can show. On the same reel with "The Deadly Cheroot."

"The Deadly Cheroot." (Biograph. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 8.)—With "They Would Bandits Be." This burlesque farce makes a reel of more fun than the Biograph company has sent out in a long while. There is one long laugh while the cheroot-maker is trying to keep the iceman from lighting the cigar that is loaded with explosive.

"Love and Flames." (Lubin. Sat., Aug. 8.)—One would think by this title that there was a burning love story waiting to be seen, but the flames, alas! are not the flames of love. They are the flames of the loved one's dear home, which Baconrine's crack fire department cannot extinguish. Their efforts and the pestering lovemaking of Percy Montmorency make right much mirth.

"Through Life's Window." (Vitagraph. Mon., Aug. 10.)—One of those heart-interest dramas that are strong if well acted hut flat if the players do not put life into the parts. With Maurice Costello, Marie Weirman and Charles Eldridge in the cast, one may be sure that the full beauty and dramatic power of a story of a husband's voluntary sacrifice of his position for another man will be realized.

"The Condemning Hand." (Biograph. Mon., Aug. 10.)—A commonplace theme treated with conviction by a capable cast. A young man leaves prison but cannot leave behind the supposition in the minds of others that he is guilty of a theft that he did not commit. He runs away, and his mother has to stand trial. At the moment when he has returned to take the blame, a confession comes from the real culprit.

"Willie." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 10.)—A detailed picture of how a mollycoddle is changed into a man by the taunts and pranks of the cowboys, and when his spirit is at last aroused he turns in and thrashes every one of them. He is then acceptable to the father of the girl he loves and returns to marry. Punctuated with many laughable situations. Wheeler Oakman is Willie.

"Stopping the Limited." (Essanay. Tues., Aug. 11.)—Dan gets the best of father-in-law and marries the daughter. He is not only forgiven but is presented with a check to huy a decent automobile. It all turns out thus happily, because the runaway couple is the means of Bangore becoming a stop for the limited, which father desired so earnestly.

"He Wanted Work." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 11.)—A comedy in which John and Matty Edwards again prove their abilities as funmakers. John tries to get work, but the unions object to his color. Thereupon he fools them all by disguising himself, but, alas for him, a hose disturbs the whitewash. On the same reel with "The Cook Next Door."

"The Cook Next Door." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 11.)—A cook inherits a fortune and goes to live in a fashionable section. She gets even with the snohs who are her neighbors by heing more of a cook in manners than she ever was. She then surprises them all by attending a party and acting as a most genteel young lady, and fascinates the district heau, and yet refuses to marry him. It is shown on the same reel with "He Wanted Work."

"David Garrick." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 11.)—A costume drama of a love affair in the life of the "Little Mimic." Clara Kimball Young is a charming and beautiful Ada Ingot and James Young plays the great actor in such a way as to make his characterization real. The atmosphere of the eighteenth century has heen caught with accuracy by both director and players.

"The Jungle Samaritan." (Selig. Tues., Aug. 11.)—There is a most exciting scene in this picture of a man's barehanded struggle with a leopard in the jungle. He finally overcomes the beast and then tames it into friendship. The story built around this incident is of a young fellow who becomes a wanderer from home and is lost in the jungle. When he returns he finds, just as he is about to go away again, that his secret love is reciprocated.

"Andy Learns to Swim." (Edison. Wed., Aug. 12.)—Andy is a splendid little comedian and he makes a fine picture out of any one that he appears in. This time, by stealing off and learning to swim against his mother's orders, he gets in heaps of trouble, but all this is forgotten when he saves a little maid from drowning, and is given the due acclaim of a hero.

"In Lieu of Damages." (Edison. Sat., Aug. 22.)—A welcome picture that shows the hardships enforced upon the survivors of workingmen who have met with accidents during their work. A hard-pressing paymaster buys off the widow's rights to damages for a mere pittance. The picture will awaken the sympathies of all audiences by its pathos and will hold by its dramatic qualities.

"All for a Tooth." (Edison. Mon., Aug., 10.)—Mrs. C. J. Williams, William Wadsworth and Yale Benner play the leading parts. There seems to be no connection between a number of events that are shown in this comedy. The wife of a country farmer has a false tooth and the loss of it combined with reading a book causes the husband to have an awful dream.

"A Tale of Old Tucson." (Edison. Tues., Aug. 11.)—An exciting picture and one that will bear comparison with the best. Mabel Trunnelle, Herbert Prior and John Sturgeon appear in the leading roles. The old American living in Mexico must either pay his debt to the Mexican with money or with his daughter. Fortunately he is saved from the latter road by a gambler who proves that the Mexican is a swindler. The old man dies, the gambler reforms and marries the girl.

"While the Tide Was Rising." (Edison. Sat., Aug. 15.)—A three-cornered story of the villain, the hero, and the girl, which is given excitement and novelty by the imprisonment of the girl with the tide gradually rising to overwhelm her. Just when it seems almost certain that she will perish, the gallant young fisherman-hero rushes in and saves her.

"Old Man Higgenbotham's Daughter." (Kalem. Tues., Aug. 11.)—Old man Higgenhotham is such a temperance crank that he drives his daughter away from home when she marries a fellow whom he once saw drinking a glass of beer. The young couple and their bahy, two years later, set out to visit their parents, accidents happen, they get separated, and the old folks rescue the bahy. The hahy naturally heals all hreaches in the family.

"The Storm at Sea." (Kalem. Tues., Aug. 18.)—The cameraman has outdone himself in a reproduction of the flashes of lightning, the downpour of rain, and the tossing of the angry hillows during a terrific storm at sea. This makes the picture stand out ahove the average. The story concerns the three-cornered love affair of a young fisherman and two sisters, and is interpreted hy those admirable players, Helen Lindroth, Alice Hollister and Harry Williams.

"Sherlock Bonehead." (Kalem. Fri., Aug. 21.)—Another of the never tiring Marshal Nielan comedies, with Ruth Roland and John E. Brennan contrihuting to the fun. It is all a merry chase after a smuggler, and the young man from the city, disguised as a detective, captures him and falls into the arms of his sweetheart, to the disgust of the Cbief of Police and Sleuth Sherlock.

"The Forbidden Trail." (George Kleine. Tues., Aug. 11.)—From the simple life of tbe convent Frances enters society and marries a grizzled old sea captain. She meets youth and the inevitable bappens. The eloping couple are discovered and hoth pay tbe penalty, their lives. It has many strong situations. The photography is good and the story strong.

"The Adventure of the Pickpocket." (Edison. Mon., Aug. 17.)—Another comical experience of Octavius, the amateur detective, is the suhject of this reel. It was filmed at Coney Island, the crowds that collected while the picture was being taken add greatly to its effectiveness. Octavius captures Chicago Nell, a notorious pickpocket, entirely hy mistake, as usual.

"The Old Fire Horse." (Edison. Wed., Aug. 19.)—Mark Swan has taken what would not seem the least hit comic to the average person, an ex-fire horse, and around this charging steed—when a bell rings—has woven a first-rate comedy. The borse doesn't put out a fire, but prevents a disastrous elopement.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Universal Ike Jr.'s Honeymoon." (Universal Ike. Tues., Aug. 18.)—This comedy shows the adventures of Ike, his sweetheart, her parents and the sheriff on board a train. Some of them are funny and others a little vulgar. As a whole it will please.

"Universal Ike in the Dangers of a Great City." (Universal Ike. Tues., Aug. 11.)—There is a lot of chasing and falling down in this picture. The finale, in which Ike's would-he mother-in-law hreaks the prison bars and beats up the whole force is the best part of this reel.

"On the High Seas." (Imp. Two reels. Thurs., Aug. 20.)—All the scenes take place on a schooner in this entertaining drama. The son of the wealthy ship owner is made to work on board one of his father's ships. Besides making a man of himself, he reveals the true character of the villainous mate, but not until the latter has killed the captain. The son marries the captain's daughter. Alexander Gaden and Dorothy Phillips appear in the leading roles.

"The Divorcee." (Powers. Fri., Aug. 21.)—Edna Maison plays the lead. The wife tiring of her husband's indifference and drinking habits is divorced. Later he tries to marry her again as he knows she has inherited a large sum of money. She refuses him. Later she gets a position as maid. A young man falls in love with her and marries her. Bound to cause all to "sit up and take notice."

"A Romance of Hawaii." (101 Bison. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 22.)—A drama which intermixes industrial and educational inserts in a very clever manner. It is, like its predecessors in this series, an interesting picture. William Clifford, Sherman Bainbridge and Marie Walcamp are the principals. The plot is melodramatic and rapid in action. Scenes in the sugar mills and fields as well as along the fishing banks are introduced.

"The Diamond Nippers." (Joker. Sat., Aug. 22.)—A real sidesplitter with Max Asher, Boh Vernon, Louise Fazenda and William Franey in the leading parts. The scenes are laid at the seashore and a great part of the action takes place in the water. Two country gentlemen and their wives are the victims of the "diamond nippers," but they finally capture them and hand them over to the police.

"Pass Key, No. 2." (Joker. Wed., Aug. 19.)—A real sidesplitter with Ernest Sbields and Bess Meredythe. Two lovers and their sweethearts attend a dance and at some time throughout the evening, each of the four is jealous of the other three. Returning home they find a drunkard disporting himself in their rooms. Much laughter was produced by this picture.

"The Hedge Between." (Rex. Sun., Aug. 16.)—An excellent drama produced hy Rohert Leonard, and acted by Mr. Leonard and Ella Hall. Pretty scenes and fine acting mark the picture. The young girl wbo has grown up in the company of her conservative father and governess meets her next door neighbor and one day elopes witb him.

"A Bowl of Roses." (Rex. Aug., Thurs., Aug. 20.)—To the happily married man every rose in the bowl bring memories of former love affairs. After the spectator has seen into bis mind the man's wife appears. Robert Leonard and Ella Hall play the leads.

"The Miracle." (Eclair-Universal. Sun., Aug. 16.)—The story of this picture is far from clear. The photography and scenes are the strong points of this photoplay.

"Vivian's Best Fellow." (Crystal. Tues., Aug. 18.)—There is not enough connection hetween the events of this comedy to awaken past interest. Vivian elopes with a city man, marries, and later returns home. Quite a few laughs are produced. Vivian Prescott plays the principal part.

"The Slavey's Romance." (Victor. Fri., Aug. 21.)—This is the story of a young inventor who, when he was on the point of being swindled, was aided in the nick of time by his admirer, the servant in his hoarding house. Margaret Prussing and Harris Gordon play the leads in this drama, whicb is somewhat inferior.

"Memories of Years Ago." (Frontier. Sun., Aug. 16.)—An old man visits the scene of his hoyhood, which recalls memories of days gone hy, the time when he was in love with a pretty girl who refused him and accepted another who turned out to he a drunkard and later lost his life. Not knowing any of the faces he sees he starts to return. In the hotel be meets the woman, now old and grey, a physical and mental wreck due to the effects of liquor. This is a tragic yet absorbing picture. Arthur Allardt, Dolly Larkin and Walter Rogers play the leads.

"Universal Boy Series, No. 3." (Imp. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—In this picture Matty Roubert, the Universal Boy, joins the boy scouts who visit Washington to offer their services to the United States in case of war. He talks with Secretary Garrison. Later a sham battle is fought by the scouts, which will interest the children.

"Honor of the Humble." (Victor. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 14.)—This picture contains a fine story, hut the ending is, for some unknown reason, put on in a weak way. Florence Lawrence, William O'Neil and Matt Moore are the principals. The scenes were taken on the Palisades, New Jersey. The Count is in love with his gamekeeper's daughter, but he thinks that he doesn't love her. In the finale he is made to see his mistake and all ends well. Several stirring hand encounters occur.

"A Strong Affair." (Sterling. Mon., Aug. 10.)—Bitter batred causes the rejected lover to place limberger cheese in his rival's shoe. The results, although a little vulgar, are quite funny. A side-splitting mix-up with the police and the townsfolk ends the picture. No stars appear.

"At Three O'clock." (Sterling. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—At three o'clock, Sterling, who is unsuccessful in love, has made a date with a professional assassin to die. But his girl relents and loves him again. And then they incur numerous hardships in escaping from the assassin and his associates. This p.cture is a laugh throughout.

"Some Crooks." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 11.)—On the same reel with "Willie's Disguise." A numher of crooks start to fighting among themselves while robhing a house. There is not enough connection hetween events to cause mucb interest. Vivian Prescott plays the lead.

"Willie's Disguise." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 11.)—On the same reel with "Some Crooks." Willie disguises himself as his father and upsets his parent's love affairs. Quite a few laughs result from tbis half-reel.

"Out of the Depths." (Rex. Sun., Sept. .)—A picture that is different and one that all will enjoy. Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson lead a large cast. An Italian who ruined the sister of a countryman in Italy is pursued to America, where he is put out of the way before he does more barm.

"Kid Regan's Hands." (Rex. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 24.)—Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little and Frank Floyd are the principals. A charitable and lovahle prize fighter is a rare thing, but there is one in this picture, and hecause of his kindheartedness he wins a girl. The producer evidently knew something of the prize ring, as these scenes are realistic.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Winning of Denise." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 21.)—Jean, the agent of a large fur company meets and falls in love with Denise, the daughter of Pierre, the owner of a rival fur company. He forhids their marriage until Jean saves Pierre's furs from a robher. After this Jean goes into partnership with both Denise and Pierre. There are many snow scenes which lend northern atmosphere to the picture. A realistic fight occurs between Jean and the robher.

"The Robbery at Pine Creek." (Broncho. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 19.)—Through the efforts of a clever detective the innocent man accused of murder is exonerated and the guilty one apprehended. The methods of the detective are absorhing to behold. The action takes place in the northwest. The plot is well developed but might be condensed.

"The New York Girl." (Keystone. Two reels. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—A rollicking comedy with Mabel Normand and Mack Sennett leading the cast. It does not contain as much slapstick work as is usual in this brand, most of the laughs resulting from the idiotic facial expression of the comedians. The New York girl flirts with the proprietor of the country hotel, but throws him over in the end for her city beau.

"Recreation." (Keystone. Split reel. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—On the same reel with "Tbe Yosemite." Charles Chaplain appears in bis characteristic, kicking, brick throwing and flirting role in this half-reel, which keeps one in a continual laugh.

"The Yosemite." (Keystone. Split reel. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—On the same reel with "Recreation." The bigh mountain peaks and heautiful waterfalls of this valley form a most enjoyable scenic.

"The Face on the Bar Room Floor." (Keystone. Mon., Aug. 10.)—Only a reel and not a hit too long. This picture is a burlesque on the tragic story of the broken down man, who, in this case was once a famed artist, hut who lost his wife hecause of another man. Tbe narrator recites this tale in the bar room, and afterward draws his wife's face on the floor. The sub titles of this sidesplitting picture are written in poetry.

"A Coat's Tale." (Keystone. Sat., Aug. 15.)—Two coats, the owner of one, a burglar and a tailor, are the suhjects around which this amusing comedy is woven. An uproarious chase puts an end to the picture.

"Ethel's Teacher." (Komic. Sun., Aug. 9.)—The lover masquerades as a feminine teacher in order to be near his sweetheart. While on the heach it becomes known that be is a man, and a chase follows, ending with a free-for-all fight. This is not as good as most Komics.

"The Butterfly." (American. Wed., Aug. 12.)—A pleasing offering with Winifred Greenwood, Ed. Coxen, Charlotte Burton and George Field in the leading parts. Both the serious and the gay sisters are in love with the same man. The latter wins him. Later when the wife becomes tired of domestic life, it is her sister that prevents a separation and causes a reconciliation.

"Our Mutual Girl." No. 30. (Reliance. Mon., Aug. 10.)—Margaret meets Daniel Frohman, who tests her dramatic ability. On her birthday Mrs. Knickerbocker presents her with some rare jewels from Tiffany's. A burglar puts a dog in her home who steals the jewels and brings them to his master, who waits outside in the street. Kid Joseph happens along and seems to recognize the burglar. He bears a marked resemblance to Dunbar, but we are not told his identity.

"The Sheriff's Prisoner." (Reliance. Wed., July 29.)—The outlaw who has killed the young woman's husband settles his core by submitting to a blood transfusion operation to save the woman's life. This so weakens the outlaw that he dies. Eugene Pallet plays the lead in this pretty drama.

"Suzanna's New Suit." (Beauty. Tues., Aug. 11.)—Margarita Fischer and Harry Pollard as wife and husband again. Wife starts home to mother when hubby won't buy her a new dress, but instead of home she goes to a bargain sale. Her husband thinks she has been killed in a wreck, but the two are united in the finale. A light comedy that will amuse.

"Her Duty." (Princess. Fri., Aug. 7.)—An inferior offering that has not much to recommend it, and rather poorly played. Due to the plotting of her employer's daughter the stenographer is dismissed. The other woman then persuades her to give up her sweetheart to her, with the promise that she will aid her invalid mother. This she does. Muriel Ostriche and Boyd Marshall play the leads. Both have done better.

"The Guiding Hand." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 4.)—An exceptionally clever story by Philip Lonergran, but hardly worthy of two reels. Mignon Anderson as a blind girl is not as good as some would be. Morris Foster, Arthur Bauer and Carey Hasting complete the cast. The blind niece of the rich family is the means of bringing about the happiness which has long been lacking. She is cured of her affliction and is married to the son of the house.

"Stronger Than Death." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 11.)—This picture is not clearly produced. Mignon Anderson and Harry Benham are the principals. The son, to save his father from ruin, consents to marry the daughter of his creditor. At the wedding the image of his true love rises before him and he succumbs. News that the girl of his heart has died causes his death.

"So Shines a Good Deed." (Reliance. Wed., Aug. 12.)—A striking and well-developed story of a criminal who gives himself up to the law to save his sister's husband. Vester Pegg is the principal actor. There is not enough depth to the drama to cause it to be extraordinary.

NEWS WEEKLIES

Hearst-Seilg News Pictorial, No. 46. (Selig. Thurs., Aug. 6.)—This series jumps from one side of the Atlantic to the other and gives a marked contrast in the scenes presented. Society and society's amusements at our fashionable watering places are first shown; then we are carried across the water to the seat of war and see the Servians getting ready for the defense of their land.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 46. Beginning with scenes at home, such as the motor-boat races on Lake George, the swimming contest in Indianapolis, and the race for the Astor cup between the "Resolute" and the "Vanitie," this series as was inevitable, ends with war scenes. The Servians getting ready to resist Austria are photographed: first the officers inspecting ammunition and preparing the guns mounted on muleback for service, and then the cavalry in battle array.

COURSE OF LECTURES AT LASKY STUDIO

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., recently hit upon an idea, which so appealed to the various heads of the Hollywood Studio that the plan was adopted at once, and from all reports has proved to be as valuable as it is novel.

The projection room at the Lasky studios is large enough to accommodate four hundred people. "Why not use it for other purposes" thought Mr. Goldfish, and forthwith suggested to Cecil B. DeMille, that a course of lectures to the artists of the Lasky Company could not but be of a material benefit; consequently, Richard Walton Tully lectured the Lasky players on the "Art of Pantomime."

Wilfred Buckland spoke to the assembled players on "Emotion by Suggestion"; Cecil B. DeMille talked on "Creation and Originating," and Mr. Lasky, who is at present visiting the coast studios, talked to the artists on the "Importance of Make-up."

Lectures will be given by various members of the executive staff on Chemistry, Photography, Toning and other subjects of importance.

So impressed were the directors at the studios, with the scene, that a wire of congratulations was sent Mr. Goldfish, telling him of the success of his plan and the system of tri-weekly lectures was adopted as a permanent feature.

ALLEN M. DAVEY MARRIED

The marriage of Allen M. Davey to Margaret M. Bronaugh in Los Angeles, Cal., on June 30, has just been announced.

Mr. Davey is a photographic expert in the Universal plant at Hollywood, and is rated as one of the finest camera men in the business. He is a brother-in-law of David Horsley, president of the Centaur Film Company, and was born and brought up in Bayonne, N. J.

GABY NOW ACTING FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS

Gaby Deslys, the celebrated variety star with a reputation in two continents, who was engaged by President Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players, just before she departed for Paris a few weeks ago, has already begun work for that company at its London studio.

A special play has been written around the star, and will undoubtedly show off her abilities to the best possible advantage. It deals with a chorus girl who becomes a famous actress and the rage of Paris in a day.

This is why it is called "Her Triumph." It goes without saying that Gaby can fulfill every requirement of the part. Harry Pilcer, her dancing partner, will appear in support.

been very productive of good. This is the ideal place for picture-making."

"Turned Back" is the vehicle Francelia Billington, of the Majestic company, is being featured in by Director Jack Adolfi. A burglar in attempting to rob a house makes a prisoner of a physician who has just been called to treat the burglar's sick infant. Sam DeGrasse and Eugene Pallette also appear in the cast.

Stevenson Revett, an English actor who came to this country from Australia, following the close of the Louis Waller "Blue Bird" company in Sydney, has accepted a position with the Balboa Feature Film company, where he will be under the direction of William H. Taylor.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Box Office Attractions Company, of New York City, arrived in Los Angeles for a stay of a few days with officers of the Balboa Feature Films Company at Long Beach. The entire output of the Balboa studio is sold through the Box Office Company.

In sliding down a fire hose from a second story window, Miss Irene Hunt, Reliance company star, playing lead in a sob sister picture, "For the Last Edition," being filmed under the direction of Fred A. Kelsey, received a row of blisters across the inside of each hand. The actress was playing the part of a reporter who had been imprisoned in a room in order that a story would not appear in the city edition of the paper. There was but one way in which she could escape—via the fire hose—and she made a realistic scene, even if it did cost her blisters.

William H. Taylor, who played the role of Capt. Alvarez in the Vitagraph six-reel production of that title, has completed his first subject for the Balboa Feature Films, at Long Beach studio, consisting of four reels.

The picture has been projected at the studio and General Manager H. M. Horkheimer was so well pleased with Mr. Taylor's work that he wrote him a letter that night in which he stated the production was the best the company had so far produced, and closed with a statement concerning a material increase in salary for the director-actor.

Mr. Taylor, in addition to directing the production, played the lead, and was very ably supported by Miss Neva Delorez Gerber, who played opposite. The first prints of the picture will be shipped to the Box Office Attractions Company, the Balboa Company's selling agent, within a few days.

"The Magic Cloak of Oz" is the second subject to be taken up by the Oz Film Company, which is producing the J. Frank Baum fairy tales in motion pictures. In this James Crosby, who has charge of the photography, will introduce some very novel effects, which will require stop work, blocking out and triple printing combined.

In the absence of Mack Sennett, now in New York City for a month, O. H. Thompson is acting as business manager of the Keystone plant and Roscoe Arbuckle is director-general.

Roscoe Arbuckle made everybody on the Los Angeles downtown streets sit up and take notice one day this week when he staged a regular Dockstader minstrel parade with a band of twenty-six, and sixty in the march. The picture will be used in one of the early Keystone releases, "Queen of the Ebony Club." Arbuckle was "the queen" of the parade, and as a big, fat and shiny mammy he was some attraction.

Thomas Nash, president and general manager of the Nash Animal Picture Company, is in New York City, arranging with his representative, Stanley Twist, of World Tower building, for distribution of the company's latest productions, "The Mysterious Man of the Jungles" and "Unto the Darkness," the former three reels and the latter four.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

Two of the largest houses in Rochester, N. Y., "swapped" services recently. The change was not intended to be a swap, but when one of the houses gave up a service, the other promptly took it, and dropped its own service, which was just as promptly assumed by the other. The houses involved are the Victoria and the Colonial. The Victoria, managed by John J. Farran, had the General service. In fact the house had used that service ever since it opened, and the fact that Manager Farran made up his mind to drop it came as a surprise. He had a slight disagreement over his inability to secure a certain film when he wanted it, which brought the trouble to a focus.

He took over the Universal service, and the Colonial subscribed to the General. Everybody seems satisfied with the arrangement.

"At the End of a Perfect Day" is another of the two act Flying A subjects on the order of "In the Firelight" and "In the Moonlight." It will be released on Monday, August 3.

Andy Clark, who figures so prominently in the Edison "Andy" series, has discarded his baseball uniform for a bathing suit. But the change is only temporary, until the picture finishes "Andy Learns How to Swim."

Sally Crute, the Edison leading lady, may be found on any Sunday or holiday in her fisherwoman's garb at Sound Beach on Long Island Sound. A mess of forty flounders in one day is no mean catch for a beginner.

Colonel W. F. Pascoe has given up the management of the Carlisle Opera House, Carlisle, Pa. Frank Hilt, former manager, will probably act again in that capacity.

Society at Frankfort, Ky., is taking full advantage of the motion picture as a means of entertainment, and theatre parties, which began to come into vogue here only a short time ago, are now frequently resorted to by some hostess who wishes to give an especially delightful entertainment.

One of the most recent of these motion picture theatre parties was that given by Lucy Pattie Zeigler in honor of her cousins, of Richmond, Va.

Gentlemen:-

In selecting the policy of films and the particular style of entertainment to be presented at my new HIPPODROME THEATRE, in Buffalo, (which will undoubtedly mark a new epoch in New York State theatres, inasmuch as it has a seating capacity of 3000, and represents the last word in modern theatre construction,) I would naturally not enter into any arrangements without having given the matter careful consideration and making a detailed study of the picture programs of the market at the present time.

The result of my investigation brought me to the conclusive belief that in the PARAMOUNT PROGRAM I might find the perfection of the feature film policy, without the defects which marked it under the unsettled feature conditions of the past year, and with all its advantages multiplied, through the construotive plans of the PARAMOUNT COMPANY.

One of the most important considerations is the fact that the greateet efforts of all our prominent theatrical producers will be available for filming at the hands of the FAMOUS PLAYERS, LASKY, and BOSWORTH COMPANY.

The fact that I have seen fit to contract for SHEA'S BUFFALO HIPPODROME, for the exclusive Buffalo use of all PARAMOUNT releases, is the strongest endorsement which I can give to the PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORPORATION.

With best wishes for our mutual success, I remain

Very truly yours,

M Shea

Others of the largest and best known theatres throughout the United States who have contracted for Paramount Pictures are:—

The Strand—New York
People's Amusement Co.—Portland, Ore.
Saxe Amusement Enterprises—Milwaukee
Regent Theatre—Rochester

—and many other prominent theatres too numerous to mention here.

About the Paramount Program—

San Francisco, Aug. 5tb, 1914.

America's pioneer weekly change house, first theatre in the Far West to recognize Paramount Pictures' possibilities, has just closed an exclusive contract for exhibition in San Francisco. After an eventful year, due largely to the exclusive bandling of films made by the principal contributors to Paramount Pictures, we look forward with greater bopes for increased results during the coming hear. We congratulate you on your achievement of combining the World's Greatest makers, and cbeerfully recommend your service, to any exhibitor, as worthy of being presented to the highest class of theatregoing public.

Wishing for our future success, I remain,

GRAUMAN'S IMPERIAL THEATRE,
(Signed) D. J. GRAUMAN, Pres.

Los Angeles, Cal., August 6th, 1914.

I am jubilant over tbe fact that I have been successful in obtaining from you the exclusive first-run service of the Paramount Pictures Corporation productions in this city. I have, as you know, used all of tbe Famous Players, Jesse L. Lasky and Bosworth productions in my Broadway Theatre during the past year, and have proved tremendously successful. Mr. Hodkinson, you and your associates have done a wonderful thing in combining the interests of these great companies and I believe that you can and will make good your promise to give the exhibitors using the Paramount Service the greatest program of feature productions that money and brains can produce. In looking over the first three months' releases of the Paramount Pictures, I feel safe in saying that with them I can defy any competition and I feel that my business is on a sounder basis than ever before.

Wisbing you the success that you deserve, I am,

TALLY'S BROADWAY THEATRE,

Pittsburgh, Pa., August 3, 1914.

Previous to the introduction of your features "The Lubin" was strictly a five-cent house. Famous Players films have enabled us to elevate the tone of our little "Playhouse of the Movies," and, what is more important, we are getting ten cents always. With "Paramount Pictures" we expect to add materially to the quality of our reputation for good shows, and are preparing to install quite a number of reserved seats at twenty cents.

LUBIN AMUSEMENT CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Boston, Mass., July 31, 1914.

We have used Famous Players Pictures last season in all of our houses, and can faithfully say that we have more than pleased our patrons, and our houses have become very popular by using same. We are also frank to confess to you that we feel very fortunate in having signed up the "Paramount Service" for all of our houses for next season.

GORDON BROS. AMUSEMENT CO.

Boston, Mass., August 8, 1914.

Being greatly impressed by the wide-sweeping possibilities of the "Paramount Pictures" program of unusual merit motion picture productions, a group of the leading promoters of high quality motion photography in New England leased The Park Theatre, Boston, Mass., and formed The Park Theatre Company. The Park Theatre is to offer exclusively "Paramount Pictures," cbarging admission prices of 15 to 50 cents. The location of "The Park" is one of tbe most favorable theatrical locations in New England, and with "Paramount Pictures" as its drawing attraction, it is most confidently anticipated that even greater triumphs are in store for this playhouse under its new policy.

PARK THEATRE COMPANY,

New Haven, Ct., July 30th, 1914.

I am very glad to see your efforts on the uplifting of the Motion Picture Industry have started by affiliating with such a magnificent organization as the Paramount. After looking over the field on features for the coming season I came to the conclusion that if your program will be on a par with what you tell me, then you are going to have the greatest program that has ever been presented to the public. The public is being educated more every day to the better grade of picture releases. I really think you have affiliated with a winner, not saying what a Godsend it will be to the exhibitors who wish to run a high-class program.

S. Z. POLI THEATRES,

Providence, R. I., July 27, 1914.

As a motion picture exhibitor I have always been a firm believer that "quality counts" first and foremost. As a result I am among the first to sign contracts for "Paramount Pictures" Service. I am convinced that this unparalleled service will prove the greatest blow ever struck for distinctive high quality in motion pictures and the most powerful "boost" yet registered as a decided uplift to the motion picture industry in general.

CASINO THEATRE,
(Signed) CHAS. H. WILLIAMS.

Louisville, Ky., August 8th, 1914.

Having used, during the past year, all of the productions of the Famous Players and Jesse L. Lasky's Studios for four days each, it was with pleasure I have learned of the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. This combination of the foremost producers of bigh-class motion picture dramas will no doubt create a prestige for the theatre using these productions similar to that enjoyed by the legitimate theatres of high class. Having closed a contract for all of the releases of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, I would cheerfully recommend, speaking from experience, this program to any manager desiring the very highest class in motion picture productions.

THE MAJESTIC THEATRE COMPANY,
(Signed) L. J. DITTMAR.

Exhibitors who want the best pictures are contracting for Paramount Service. Have YOU done so? If not, write your nearest exchange immediately. First Paramount release August 31st.

"WITH SERB AND AUSTRIAN"

(Austro-Servian—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE war now raging across the water will call for many films dealing with it, and the Austro-Servian Film Company has the honor of releasing one of the first. With such a title and such sensational paper that accompanies the films it will be strange if one seat in the houses showing it will be vacant; it is almost certain that it will be a sure money getter, especially if shown for only one day at each house.

From the title one is led to expect scenes of carnage on the battle field, charges, explosions, and aerial warfare; these things we see minus the latter event. A number of battle scenes are shown, but the spectator realizes that they are not actual battles, even though they may have been taken on the other side. They are exceptionally realistic and add a number of thrills to the picture which would otherwise be only a pretty love story.

The sub-titles of the picture are up-to-date; and reading them causes one to forget his surroundings and imagine that he is in Europe listening to gossip of the war. They are quite lengthy and are fully explanatory. Their only fault is that they are slightly incorrect as regards grammar.

The story is woven about an Austrian prince who is sent to Servia to obtain plans of their fortifications. He is successful, but while there he falls in love with the daughter of the king of Servia, and for her sake he does not deliver the papers to his country. These two characters are played by Ralph Stuart and Clara Joel.

It is obvious that some of the scenes were filmed here in New York City, but these are few and by those unacquainted with New York will not be noticed. On the whole the picture will please as anything at all connected with the present war will surely do. An atmosphere of impending catastrophe seems to be prominent throughout the entire four reels, and he will be very hard to please indeed who does not term it entertaining.

AMERICAN FILMS LOSE GROUND, SAYS CONSUL

The year 1913 showed considerable progress in the cinematograph industry in Italy, according to Consul-General John E. Jones, at Genoa, not only in the widespread use of Italian films and the increased number of motion-picture theatres, but also in the financial results obtained.

The cinematograph is becoming more and more an Italian industry and foreign films are becoming fewer in Italy. Generally American films lost ground in Italy in 1913.

RECOGNIZES CALAMITY ANNE

On a recent visit to Los Angeles a group of Flying A stars, including Louise Lester, Jack Richardson and others, dropped into Brink's café for dinner. They had just been seated when a little boy, accompanied by four grown-up people, took a table close by. The child with curiosity looked about. His gaze rested upon Louise Lester. With an excited cry the little fellow jumped down from his chair and ran to his mother.

Pointing in the direction of the players, the child called out at the top of his voice: "Oh, Mother, there is Calamity Anne." All eyes were now focused on Miss Lester. Finally the mother of the child arose and apologetically explained: "Kindly pardon my little son, but Calamity Anne is the heroine of his childish romances and adventures. I am Mrs. ———," and she named a very prominent society woman, "and I am pleased to have met Calamity Anne in real life."

READY TO FILM "SHORE ACRES"

Headed by John H. Pratt, the former leading man and director for the Reliance Company, who has been for the past six months allied with the All Star Feature Corporation in the capacity of master of the studio and assistant to Augustus Thomas, the All Star Company of players, numbering twenty-seven, will leave in a few days for Maine to begin the production of James A. Herne's immortal drama of down East folk, "Shore Acres."

Mr. Pratt for the past few weeks has been co-operating with Louis Reeves Harrison, the writer of the scenario. "Shore Acres" is planned by the All Star Feature Corporation as the next release following Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale."

CHURCH SHOWS BIBLE SCENES IN THEATRE

Trenton, N. J., Aug. 12.

The Airdome, on South Montgomery street, recently opened, is being used Sunday evenings by the Inter-Church Federation for the holding of religious services. The meetings are largely attended and it may be that it will be decided to throw Bible views upon the screen.

"Pathé's Weekly, No. 49." (Sat., Aug. 8.)—Pictures that deal with the European crisis in any manner will surely be welcome at this time, and for this reason this bi-weekly will be a valuable asset to any program. A number of German dirigibles are filmed. A fine picture of five hundred and fifty French aeroplanes spread on the ground and a number in the air follows. The U. S. S. "Tennessee" leaving this country with seven million dollars on board to aid the stranded Americans shows another side of the war, and a large number of French reservists leaving on the "Lorraine" from New York is interesting. A picture of King Albert of Belgium is shown. Other pictures in Europe and a few domestic views complete this reel.

"Universal Animated Weekly, No. 126." (Universal. Wed., Aug. 5.)—Views of the French and German troops are interesting at the present time. These scenes are well photographed. A picture of the French airship which has already been destroyed in the war is shown. The start of the life boat "Lundin" across the ocean is timely. Hy Mayer's famous cartoons end the reel.

"Animated Weekly, No. 127."—Rulers of various European countries in final inspection of their fighting forces; the closing of the New York Stock Exchange; departure of the "Tennessee" with eight millions of gold for aid of stranded Americans abroad; the swimming of Commodore Elionsky, bound hand and foot, through Hell Gate; the Beach Day celebration at San Francisco; and cartoons by Hy Mayer.

"Mutual Weekly, No. 85."—The subjects for this series are as follows: The mobilization of the Servian army for the War with Austria; Hector, the educated dog; a bird's-eye view from the top of the Pyramids; Governor Fielder and Secretary of War Garrison reviewing Jersey militia; the auto races in Paris; Ezra Meeker's journey across the continent; the largest shoe in the world; new records established at Portland, Ore.; the hottest natural spring in the world; deck sports aboard a big Atlantic liner.

"Mutual Weekly, No. 86."—The subjects shown this week are as follows: Crowds in New York City watching bulletins of the war; motor boat regatta at Lake George, N. Y.; the visit of "Two Moons, an Indian chief, to President Wilson; forest fires menacing Portland, Ore.; opening of the Cape Cod canal; burning bridge near San Antonio, Tex.; a picture of Mrs. Wilson taken shortly before her death.

ECLAIR SCIENTIA

"Culture of Tea in Ceylon." (Eclair. Split reel. Sun., Aug. 9.)—Tea grows in such a small part of the earth's surface that very few of us of the millions who drink the delightful beverage know anything about how it is grown and prepared for market. All of this is shown on this film, and it just makes one's mouth water as one gazes and wonders how so much goodness can come out of these little dried up particles of leaves. It is on the same reel with "Through the Streets of Old Biskra."

"Through the Streets of Old Biskra." (Eclair. Split reel. Sun., Aug. 9.)—This is one of the most picturesque cities of Northern Africa. It is in Algiers right in the midst of the desert, being built around an oasis. The lovely palm trees shade the crooked, winding streets in which the little urchins play in their scanty white garments. Every now and then a camel trudges by, bearing burdens of femininity on his patient hump. With "Culture of Tea in Ceylon," the reel is completed.

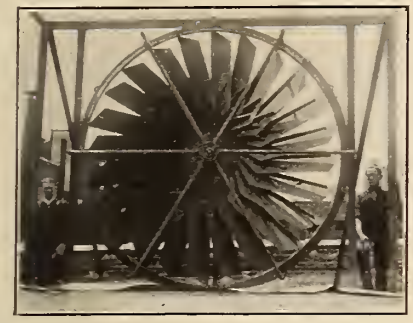
WARNER'S FEATURES

"The Legacy." (Filma de Posse. Three reels.)—A picture of French make, full of excitement, well produced and containing some novel scenes. Because his father died and left all his fortune to his little girl, the dissolute son kidnaps her. The mother is thought to have hidden the child, as she, too, would benefit by her disappearance. A detective is set to work on the case and after a hard chase captures the brother and his accomplices, and returns the child to her mother. The picture is well photographed.

"Life's Crossroads." (Nafcor. Three reels.)—A rich banker has two sons; one is gay and frivolous and the other is sober and business-like. The former marries a society girl and her extravagance is the cause of his ruin. The latter marries a simple girl and with her help he becomes wealthy. A strong contrast is given between the lives of the poor and the rich. In drawing the contrast and enlarging on the important events the producer has left some of the smaller incidents to take care of tnemselves; this they do to a large extent, but a few scenes are so neglected as to appear almost humorous. But as a whole the picture is a good one; it contains a forcible lesson and will be received well.

"The Last Battle." (Milano. Three reels. Tues., Aug. 18.)—This picture outlines the struggle that an honest man endured in overcoming dishonest business methods. It is not as good as most of this brand, but makes a fair offering. A number of mob scenes are shown which are good. The photography is of a high grade throughout.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES



That Gilbert A. Parker and his wife, Edith J. Parker, made false statements when they told him the Dale Theatre, in South Omaha, Neb., was making money, and sold it to him for extensive real estate, is the allegation of Charles Conner in a petition filed in the district court of Omaha, Neb.

The theatre is near Twenty-fourth and O streets, and Parker and Conner live nearby. Conner says the theatre did not make money after he took it.

E. W. Marks will open a new theatre at Forty-fifth and Hamilton streets, Omaha, soon. He has not yet named it. It is built especially as a motion picture theatre, has 650 chairs, two machines, and is ventilated in the best modern manner. He will use the Universal service.

LARGE TYPHOON FAN INSTALLED

The above illustration shows a twelve-foot Typhoon Multiblade Blower installed on the roof of the Drury Lane Theatre, Fortieth street and Eighth avenue, New York City. This photo was taken before the blower was enclosed. It is arranged so that the air is blown down through the roof. The theatre is equipped with 600 seats and the fan furnishes 6,000,000 cubic feet of air per hour.

TYPHOON BLOWER AT DRURY LANE THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY

This provides a continuous refreshing breeze through the entire theatre and keeps the air at a comfortable temperature in the hottest weather.

The Drury Lane Theatre Company has just made a contract with the Typhoon Fan Company to equip all its theatres with the same fans.

"CABIRIA" IN CHICAGO

A novel scheme of publicity in connection with the presentation of the Itala Film Company's masterpiece, "Cabiria," has been adopted by the Chicago manager. "Cabiria" is playing at the Illinois Theatre and at the entrance a lettered panel tells the onlooker the exact number of admissions of each performance.

RAMO MANAGERS MEET

The managers of the Ramo Films, Inc., offices assembled at the offices of C. Lang Cobb, Jr., in New York on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday of this week to discuss the general film situation and lay out a campaign for the handling of the war picture series Ramo is placing on the market now.

Joseph F. Lee was appointed special traveling representative and will devote the majority of his time for the present in the larger bookings of "The War of Wars."

C. A. Maddux, of Kansas City, and William Conn, of Minneapolis, were dropped. Frank W. Foster was returned to the Montreal offices and John S. Egan was placed in charge of the entire Canadian business.

P. J. Hall was retained as district manager of the Minneapolis, Des Moines and Kansas City offices. Two new managers will be appointed for the Minneapolis and Kansas City offices.

FILMING LEWIS TALES

Negotiations for his appearance in a screen dramatization of "The Sunset Trail," a story written about him by Alfred Henry Lewis, has been opened by the Universal Company with "Bat" Masterson, the once famous Western sheriff.

"How clear the pictures are!"

You've often overheard that remark—and it's as strong a commendation, brings as much business as does a favorable comment on the picture story itself.

The "clearest pictures" are on Eastman film because the product is right, chemically and physically.

It is easily identifiable by the stencil "Eastman" in the margin.

5 TIMELY EUROPEAN WAR FILMS
1 GREAT DETECTIVE PLAY STARRING MANAGER McGRAW
1 STIRRING STORY OF A WOMAN'S UNCONTROLLED JEALOUSY
THE PERILS OF PAULINE

LATEST WAR FILMS

THE LAST VOLUNTEER—5 parts; American made—Scenes of carnage wrought by modern engines of destruction at seat of today's war. Fighting in the air and on the ground. 1, 3, 6, and 24 sheet posters.

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH—4 parts—A tale of Franco-Prussian warfare—big battle scenes—bursting bombs, blown-up bridges, severed telegraph wires. 1, 3, 6, and 24 sheet posters.

"WAR IS HELL"—4 parts, in natural colors—showing the havoc wrought by air-craft—awful realism. Daring, romance, bloodshed, tragedy in a story involving the most modern forms of war. 1, 3, and 6 sheet posters.

NAPOLEON—5 parts—A historical drama of the last great struggle for European supremacy when the world's greatest warrior defied the world. Accurate—interesting. 1, 3, and 6 sheet posters.

ALL LOVE EXCELLING—3 parts—A moving story of a woman's undying devotion which carries her through the Crimean War. 1, 3, and 6 sheet posters.

J. J. McGRAW
In Detective Swift

A 3-part feature with John J. McGraw, the world famous manager of the New York Giants, playing the part of Swift, a noted detective. No overdrawn acting—no foolish disguises—a real detective skilfully portrayed in a racing story which starts in New York, and goes half around the world. This film is a "double header"—combines interesting personality of Mr. McGraw with fascinating detective story. And it gets the "double-header" crowds.

IN THE LIONS' DEN

3 reels in natural colors. The story of a woman's jealousy as wild and uncurbed as that of the lions which she keeps as pets. She lures a former sweetheart from his day-old bride and betrays him to the mercy of the beasts. A play full of conflicting emotions and intensely exciting scenes.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Pauline has more friends than any other character on the screen and she is continually making more. She carries her old friends with her into your theatre and lures new ones in. Like Harry, her faithful lover, she is the best sort of a friend to have for she is always ready to tide over a dull season or pull you out of difficulty.

Treasure Trove

By LORING M. HEWEN

Bob and Frank decide to spend their vacation at the beach. They meet Col. Fairfield's two daughters. The Col. has too much regard for his daughters' future to think of letting either of them marry a man not able to properly support them. The boys, however, discover a paper among wreckage on the beach written in Spanish. It tells of a treasure and its location off shore. They are about to discover it when armed Cuban villains approach and threaten trouble. Then the Colonel appears and the villains flee. The boys are now rich and have won the Colonel's admiration.

"The Exhibitor's Medium of Communication with His Fellow Showman"

Volume X — August 29, 1914 — Number 8

$35,000,000.00

LAST week, on this page the following statement was made:

"And those who know the exhibitor field through personal contact, who have spent time and money in circularizing—and who are willing to admit the truth—know that the purchasing exhibitors to-day in this country, men genuinely, responsibly and continuously in business—do not number over seven thousand. It's a fact."

IT is a fact. It may arouse skepticism in the minds of those who have heard the round number of 15,000 to 20,000 exhibitors quoted so often—and so carelessly—that they have accepted these figures as a possible selling field for the makes of pictures and accessories.

These figures may be of value to the statistician; they are critically misleading to the advertiser.

THE exhibiting field is fast getting down: but, to a very considerable degree, it is still shifting.

The store-show, the poorly run, illy ventilated, badly managed theatre—the theatre in general that is unworthy of the name—is passing and at an astonishing rate.

THIS doesn't mean the small theatre. The small theatre well managed, well-equipped and showing good pictures has the equal chance—often a better one—with its larger competitor.

It means the high-class theatre regardless of size, theatres owned and managed by the men who are "genuinely, responsibly and continuously in business."

IF any one doubts the number of shifting picture houses, the following fact is illuminating:

Just recently a letter was sent to all the listed exhibitors of an Eastern State—(not New York). In ten days the follow-up letter went out. About ten per cent. of the latter letters came back.

IN other words, ten per cent. of the theatres of one state had "passed out" in the short space of ten days.

THIS condition is applicable generally. No one knows it better than the man who is dealing directly and checking results.

These "floaters" take money out of the business and do not put it back. They are not only short-time buyers, but generally second-hand buyers.

ON the other hand, the exhibitors worthy of the name, running theatres worthy of the present status of this industry, represent one of the biggest purchasing trades in this country.

At a conservative estimate, the readers of this publication spend for supplies each year the huge sum of THIRTY-FIVE MILLION DOLLARS A YEAR.

THIS sum pays for film service, special features, machines, chairs, curtains, box office appliances, musical instruments, in short, all the equipment pertinent to the modern high-class picture theatres.

It does not include fixed charges such as rent, salaries, taxes, etc.

THESE seven thousand exhibitors put into circulation in the motion picture business nearly three million dollars a month.

They are the consistent, day-in and day-out exhibitors. Their businesses are established and prosperous.

THEY read and pay for a trade paper for its helpful information. They have built up steady patronage and in turn they are steady customers of the manufacturers—to the extent of $35,000,000.00 a year!

HERE you have the purchasing circulation of this field—a big and worth-while one.

It is the advertisers' circulation—his ONLY circulation.

HE PAYS MOSTLY FOR WASTE WHEN HE PAYS FOR MORE.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

SPOKANE TO LOSE BIG FILM THEATRE

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 17.

Spokane will be deprived of its largest picture theatre this fall through the activity of Klaw & Erlanger, who are establishing a chain of theatres throughout the Northwest to compete with those of John Cort.

Klaw & Erlanger have obtained a long-time lease on the American, a fireproof house built five years ago and now occupied by Jas. McConahey with Warner and Mutual "movies." The new lessees will install a dramatic stock company and intend later to use the place for road shows. Mr. McConahey retains control of the Best picture house, formerly Dreamland.

"LEGIT" OUTLOOK GLOOMY IN BUFFALO

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 20.

The war clouds have not affected local exhibitors. Most of the houses are continuing to show to capacity. It seems that everyone will pay ten cents for a night's entertainment, but when it comes to such prices as $1.50 and $2.00, well, as Montague Glass would say, "That's somethin' else again, Mawruss."

It looks as though the local photoplay houses are going to have everything their own way this fall and that the legitimate theatres are going to have a tough fight. The gallery will be a thing of the past locally. The two principal legitimate theatres, the Teck and the Star, open on Monday, August 24.

SHEEHAN FINISHES TOUR

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Box Office Attractions Film Rental Company, returned to New York Thursday, August 20, after an extended trip up and down and across the United States, organizing exchanges, shipping depots, and inspecting the studios and the printing plants of the companies whose output is controlled by the Box Office Attractions.

Every film center and exchange city in the country was covered by Mr. Sheehan on his tour. He returned to New York by way of Canada.

PRICE OF CARBONS GOES UP

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 20.

Local exhibitors are much concerned over the sudden jump in the price of carbons from $29 per thousand to $40.

Manager Harold Edel, of the Strand, was fortunate in being able to procure a large amount of carbons from the Lyric Theatre, which has just changed to stock. Over $100 worth were left at the end of the film season at the Lyric.

Maryland Exhibitors Fight "Country Store"

Baltimore Motion Picture Men Intend to Abolish All Such Inducements for Attracting Patronage—President Pearce Backs Move

Baltimore, Aug. 20.

MEMBERS of the Maryland branch, Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, are going after the "country store," "free dishes," and other catch-penny methods conducted by some of the picture exhibitors in Baltimore.

There has been scattered and rather indifferent opposition to this method of forcing business for some time past, but now there will be a concentrated effort made to have these special offers stopped in this city. A meeting of the members of the Maryland branch was held on Friday night, August 15.

The movement against the "country store" was led by Alexander Anderson, and President Marion S. Pearce placed himself on record as being heartily in favor of abolishing the practice. President Pearce appointed a committee the membership of which includes some of the most active members of the organization, to map out a plan for fighting the evil.

Another meeting will be held in the next few days at which a report of the special committee will be made.

At the recent meeting the delegates to the Dayton convention made reports. Mr. Pearce was generally congratulated upon the honor which had been conferred upon him when he was elected president of the national organization.

This was the first meeting held since the early part of July and the first time that Mr. Pearce has appeared before the Maryland exhibitors since the Dayton meeting. A. F. Gillespey.

Great Demand for Musicians in Buffalo

Scarcity in Orchestras of New Theatres Seems Certain This Fall—Need Drummers, Cellists and Pianists Especially

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 20.

BUFFALO is about to face a scarcity of musicians for motion-picture theatres this fall. Many Buffalo managers are complaining about the trouble that they are having with this end of their business. Most of the musicians who are now at the summer resorts and in the Buffalo Park Band will return next week to their regular theatre jobs and to the local dance halls. Many have already done so.

What the new houses are going to do is certainly an enigma. Buffalo ought to be a good place for musicians who are members of the American Federation of Musicians to locate, especially drummers, pianists and cello players.

There will be openings for two or three good artists who play the latter instruments.

Secretary Harry C. Davis, of the local Musicians Association, is now playing at Crystal Beach, but he is usually at his office at No. 8 East Eagle street every morning. He is a busy man these days, fixing up local theatres with musicians.

C. B. Taylor.

Airdomes Are Ahead Despite Bad Weather

Elizabeth, N. J., Exhibitor Makes Big Profits Regardless of Numerous Stormy Nigths—More Open Air Places Than Last Year

Elizabeth, N. J., Aug. 20.

ELIZABETH is no place for calamity howlers in the film business. The local open-air places have had what might be termed an off season, as far as weather conditions are concerned. There has been an average of two stormy nights each week ever since the opening of the season—nights when the airdomes were unable to open at all.

And there has been more or less cloudy and cold weather right along.

In spite of these drawbacks, one airdome proprietor told a representative of The Motion Picture News that he was still considerably ahead of the game, and unless conditions become far worse than they have been, he will have added two thousand dollars to his bank roll before cold weather compels him to seek winter quarters. Last year this man made a net profit of three thousand dollars for the summer, but weather conditions were more favorable than they have been this season.

There are four airdomes running here now in addition to a new roofgarden. Last year there were only two.

John W. Hawkins.

ADVERTISES BY BALLOON ASCENSION

Natchez, Miss., Aug. 19.

Manager Eugene M. Clark, of the Baker Grand Theatre, evolved a new stunt for Natchez the other night to advertise "Through the Clouds," an attractive balloon film.

Mr. Clark, after advertising the event extensively, had a balloon ascension in front of his theatre, a clever little aeronaut dropping a parachute which contained a number of tickets to the theatre.

THE CORNER IN FILM CHEMICALS AND THE WAY OUT FOR THE MANUFACTURERS

A Stock of Chemicals Sufficient for a Year and a Half Has Disappeared Into the Hands of Unknown Purchasers, But Even With the Threatened "Corner" These Articles Can Be Made in America—The Film Producing Companies Here Can Smash the Speculator

ALARMING reports have been circulating among the trade concerning the shortage of certain chemicals affecting the manufacture of motion picture films. These reports are based on half truths, and in some cases are practically misrepresentations designed perhaps for purposely misleading those engaged in the industry.

The statements are as follows:

Chemicals like hydrochinon, metol and its substitutes, because they are manufactured in Germany, will not be obtainable in this country while the war abroad lasts. Consequently, it is alleged, producing companies are depended upon a limited supply of these chemicals for their photographic developing processes.

The moment the quantity now on hand is exhausted it will be impossible to develop picture films. Hence, these chemicals must constantly raise in value until they become almost priceless, as no more can be brought from Germany.

With this prospect in view speculators are supposed to be cornering the market, holding the chemicals for top notch prices. This is the basis of the panicky story skilfully circulated.

Supply of Chemicals Will Last

But will the supply run out absolutely?

While the supply imported from Germany is limited and is now in the hands of a few dealers, except in numerous cases where concerns using the chemicals laid in a large stock in anticipation of an attempt to corner the market, hydrochinon and metol can be manufactured in America.

As there are no secret processes in the hands of German makers preventing chemical manufacturers in this country from entering the field, and no ingredient which cannot be made here, nothing can stand in the way of domestic manufacture of these important substances.

Hydrochinon and metol were not made in this country for no other reason than that cheaper labor in Germany enabled the manufacturers on the other side to undersell Americans in competition with them.

Cheap Labor Helps Competition

As the question of labor is now eliminated by the war, which has taken away all the workmen employed in the hydrochinon and metol factories, nothing stands in the way of the American manufacturer. The law of supply and demand will regulate the matter. The makers of these chemicals here should, and it is to be hoped, will open their factories and put on the market all that the motion picture producer needs.

Indeed, one large manufacturer, formerly in this field and forced out by foreign firms, has declared that on the assurance of support from motion picture producers he will go back into the business.

Recently when five firms handling these chemicals were approached for their statements regarding the situation it was learned that large importing houses had been amply provided with a supply calculated to last a year and a half. It was also admitted that this supply was now about exhausted.

It seems curious that there should be such a sudden disappearance of the chemicals when heretofore there was always enough kept in stock to supply the trade for that period. While it might be, as charged, that a large quantity of these chemicals has been deliberately withdrawn from the open market to create an impression of scarcity, film men need not feel the alarm the news is expected to cause the trade. As said before, the home manufacturer stands ready to meet the situation.

Newspaper Scare

All this scare about the film business becoming handicapped by the war shutting off the supply of chemicals for photographic developing is due largely to the daily newspapers in search of sensational material for their columns.

To be sure, the price of hydrochinon has more than doubled, but this increased figure has not affected the leading film makers as the majority always carry about six months' supply ahead all the time.

When they are in the market at the end of that period American manufacturers will have put on sale enough of these chemicals to automatically bring down the price to a reasonable amount. It may be somewhat above the normal price heretofore, but it will certainly be far under the present "corner" prices asked for these chemicals.

To come down to figures. At the beginning of this week hydrochinon was selling at $5 and more a pound, while before the war the product could be obtained at a dollar a pound retail. Metol, usually sold at about $5 a pound, was quoted at more than $12, and will no doubt continue to jump without restraint.

Activity of Speculators

Several men in the business could not resist the temptation of speculation, it is said.

No consideration is shown old customers. They have to pay the requested price and take what is given them without any discussion.

Is it true that there was no stock on the American market when war was declared, and that it will be impossible for any one to get chemicals before the war is over? No, by no means.

Is it true that chemicals for photographic development can only be made in Germany? No, they can be made right here in the United States.

Where Are the Factories?

What then has become of the stock of metol and its substitutes which several firms in New York had on hand a few days ago and which was calculated to last at least a year and a half? Has it all been consumed or sent back to Germany, or what else has happened to it?

Some of the big film concerns, we know, have purchased chemicals for a period of about six months, but many of the film manufacturers who are busy making films and have no time left for speculation have attended to their business, not suspecting what was going on. These film makers buy chemicals when they need them. What will they do now? Will they have to pay the exorbitant prices and be obliged to increase the prices of films which the bigger manufacturer can afford to maintain at the former prices and thus put him out of business; or will the little fellow close his factory till something new happens and till times are better?

How is it that the big raw film factories do not realize that their failure to supply the market with the necessary chemicals for developing will greatly harm their sale of amateur films, in view of the increase of expenses for developing?

How is it that in a big country like the United States of America, which can practically afford to live independently of any neighbor or foreign country, is at the mercy of another country and its industry menaced because several products are supposed to be made or furnished by only one European country, said to fear no competition, which is thus able to impose its own conditions or put you out of business entirely at will.

Fallacious Explanations

Certain people explain that it is impossible to produce the photographic chemicals in this country for reasons of quality of the tar; others say no carbolic acid can be found, it has to be made purposely; while in Germany it is a by-product or a residual product. That is all well to say; but the truth is that foreign competition as far as photographic chemicals are concerned, is due mainly to cheap labor, which can only be found in Germany and which has caused all the American manufacturers who tried to enter the photographic chemical field to soon go out of business.

Some foreign manufacturers made the people of this country believe that their chemical products are made by a secret process, or are covered by very strong patents. These stories are not true. Similar products, if not better, are or may be produced in other countries. There are no patents to prevent any manufacturer from making good photographic chemicals.

The whole matter is a question of trade marks and nothing else. There is no doubt that the same product may be called any number of names without infringing on anybody's rights.

The speculators will soon be caught in the trap which they have prepared for others. Their indifference to the needs of old customers; the disdain they have shown the American consumer will only serve to encourage former manufacturers to start their factories again. The American producer of chemicals never had a better opportunity to start in business again.

Chemical Manufacture in U. S.

Before the American manufacturer gets ready, the speculator will get a chance to sell a part of his goods at his own prices, but in a near future he might have some stock left on his hands because there are sources for obtaining photographic chemicals which certain speculators have never suspected.

In other words, the situation is as follows:

Photographic chemicals were made in this country, but as soon as the German importers settled here they put the Americans out of business. No competition from another country than Germany was feared by the Germans because their prices were made lower than any other. To-day the German importers are the only purveyors of the American market.

Photographic chemicals could be made in this country if the American manufacturer was encouraged and assured a minimum output.

What the Film People Will Do

Before the manufacturers here are in a position to provide the goods, it would be possible to obtain them from other sources than Germany if an effort was made before it is too late.

The question now is whether the film industry is willing to let things go on as they are and be exploited until the greed of those whom it has enriched ruins the cinematographic trade entirely; or if the people in the trade have had enough of it, and are determined to get together so as to protect their interests by encouraging the national industry.

A despatch from Chicago says:

The prospect of a local famine in chemicals made in Germany and sold there for photographic developing processes is not considered seriously.

The war has not affected any of the large producing firms in the least, as most of them carry on hand at all times a supply calculated to last six months. It is also agreed that by that time substitutes made in America will be found efficient enough to take the place of the German.

Winning Out As "Second Fiddle"

By Teaching His More Powerful Competitor to Advertise and Put on Special Bills, Baggott Created an Overflow for Himself

WHAT would you do if you were the happy owner of a prosperous theatre in a live town and one of the "big" fellows with the capital and the connections to give a better show planted right alongside of you?

That's just what happened to Earle K. Baggott, who had built up a good steady trade for himself in one of the livest cities in the Middle West. Of course, it took the wind out of him for the time—to be strictly honest, it very nearly tore the heart out of him—but he was equal to the emergency, survived the shock, and is now doing just about as much business as he ever did and in the same spot.

How?

"Like everybody else," commented Baggott when asked the question, "just as soon as I heard that a finely appointed theatre, fully three times the size of my place, was to be built on the plot adjoining mine, I nearly threw a fit.

"I had visions of crowds passing my door and never even stopping to glance at the posters, attracted by the stronger magnet of bigger show, the vaudeville, and the better music which I felt sure the management of the larger theatre would offer.

"The minute the doors of that new place opened, my business fell away to nothing. I couldn't pay expenses; in fact, I had very much rather have had ten per cent of my losses than fifty per cent of the earnings. I struggled on for a week or two. I tried giving prizes; cutting prices; special features. Nothing helped.

THEN a bright idea struck me. I had noticed that despite the attractiveness of the theatre next door, and for all the fact that his bills were of the enticing sort, his house was never filled to capacity. I figured up that there was a large enough population in the town to support two theatres of the size of his place, both making money.

"That being the case, thought I, provided he is well advertised, he should pack his house every night. And he wasn't doing it.

"So I had a talk with a pretty wise friend of mine, a young newspaper man connected with the leading daily of the town. I showed him where the business could be increased by proper advertising and sent him out to land my competitor's contract. He, of course, jumped at the idea, went to my competitor, and put up a very attractve advertising proposition.

"In return for a certain amount of editorial space in which the high spots of his offerings were to be set forth in glowing terms, he was to insert a paid advertisement in the daily.

"And he did. And also it worked out very much to his own advantage. Instead of a comfortably filled house, the ads and the publicity stirred up interest enough to jam the house."

It was suggested that the interviewer could not see where Baggott "fit in" to promote the business of his competitor.

"Why that was the wisest stroke I ever did," he answered. "When his house was jammed to the doors and no more could be accommodated, the overflow, rather than be disappointed, came to me, and the net result was that I had a comfortably filled house every night without spending a cent for advertising.

"And every time my competitor offered a special bill, the fact was reflected in the size of my attendance. My place would be crowded. We all profited by it. His overflow has kept me in business."

New York Will Call Amalgamation Meeting

Exhibitor Opinion Throughout State Found Overwhelmingly in Favor of One State League and Convention Will Be Held Next Month—Officers Will Be Elected at that Session—Neff Issues Call for Fourth Anniversary Convention of Ohio State League

THE amalgamation of the exhibitors who are members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League and the International Motion Picture Association in the state of New York is practically an accomplished fact to-day, notwithstanding the disappointment and delay that attended the proposed meeting of the two state executive committees a week ago which was to have been held in New York City.

This is the opinion of the leaders of both bodies of exhibitors throughout the state, as voiced by a prominent motion picture theatre manager a day or two ago.

It has been found, since the postponement of the double executive meeting, that the sentiment for immediate amalgamation among exhibitors throughout the state is overwhelming.

Demand for Union Unanimous

Pains have been taken to sound out practically every league and association man, individually, as well as those exhibitors who have not yet become members of the league, and the former were, with almost no dissensions, for a union as speedily as possible.

The latter were disposed to be enthusiastic over the benefits of a single state-wide organization, and amalgamation, it is said, is likely to be followed by the acquisition of numerous new members from many parts of the state.

Since the prevailing sentiment is for the union of the two exhibitor organizations without further delay, it has been decided to call a meeting of exhibitors from all over New York state, to be held during the last half of September, in whatever city is most convenient for the majority to reach.

This convention, as it may truthfully be called, will be, according to a leading New York and up-state exhibitor, a consolidation convention in every sense of the word.

President Pearce, of the National League, will be present, it is promised, as also will several members of the new executive board of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, Fulton Brylawski, of Washington, among them, is the hope.

To Elect New State Officers

At this meeting, according to the present plans, a new slate of state officers for the re-united state league will be nominated and elected, thus making the amalgamation of the league and the association, as far as New York state is concerned, an actual fact.

"Ninety-five per cent of the exhibitors of New York state are with us, heart and soul, in this movement for a reunited state league," said one of the leaders the other day.

"And not an instant of further delay should be tolerated by any exhibitor who is truly interested in the welfare of the league. The eyes of the whole country are on New York state, watching and waiting to see what the action of the exhibitors here is to be. The psychological effect of our prompt amalgamation upon the other states will be incalculable."

Ohio League to Hold Anniversary Meeting

Columbus, O., Aug. 19.

M. A. NEFF, president of the Ohio State Branch No. 1, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, has issued the following call to all Ohio exhibitors:

"A meeting in honor of the Fourth Anniversary of the Ohio league will be held in Columbus at the Southern Hotel, the place of the birth of our league. Every member is not only invited to attend the Fourth Anniversary meeting but is urged to attend, that you may see the growth and hear and realize the many benefits the exhibitors of the state of Ohio have secured and derived through the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of our state.

"We also cordially invite the film manufacturers, the newspapers, film exchanges, and non-members to attend, assuring them in advance that we will do our best to make their visit pleasant and profitable. The Fourth Anniversary of our league is to be a grand, old-fashioned, royal love-feast, a hearty welcome to our friends, and an evidence of our strength and thorough organization.

Banquet in the Evening

"The meeting will be convened at 2 p. m. Tuesday, September 15, and will adjourn at 5 p. m. A big free "get-together" banquet will begin at 8 p. m. Tuesday evening. Speakers of national reputation will be present and address the gathering.

"The convention will reconvene at 10 a. m. Wednesday morning, September 16, and will adjourn in ample time to give each member an opportunity to catch his train for home. There will be big doings, business and social. Make your calculations now, so you can be there.

"Every question of interest to the Ohio league will be discussed and every member will be given an opportunity to express his views.

"If you are for or against censorship, be there. Let us hear what you have to offer as a solution to the problem.

"If you are for or against a short program, use of motors, Sunday opening, city license, or any other question pertaining to the good and welfare of our business, we will be glad to hear you express them at the meeting. Do not stay at home and then after the meeting is over kick on the action of the meeting.

Urge all to be Present

"Remember, we elect all state officers and a legislature this fall, who will make and enforce the laws for two years. We should know our friends and legislative matters will come up at our meeting and if you are not present, it's your own fault and we will expect you to stand by the decision of the meeting.

"The original eleven charter members will be present with the exception of our lamented brother, Mr. W. O. Yard. However, Mrs. Virginia Yard, his widow, will be at the meeting as the eleventh representative of the original number that organized our league."

NEW KENTUCKY THEATRES

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Louisville, Aug. 19.

The Majestic Opera House, Corbin, Ky., opened this week as a motion picture house. Four reels of comedy and high-class feature films are being shown every night, in addition to an excellent orchestra program.

The new Star Theatre, Louisville, which made its debut as a ten-cent house, has entered the five-cent field and is offering a program of fine feature films at this price.

NO LACK OF BUSINESS IN WATERBURY

Waterbury, Conn., Aug. 20.

Motion picture managers continue to have clear sailing in this city. Practically every manager, when interviewed by the representative of The Motion Picture News this week, admitted that business was very satisfactory. The Star Theatre on Baldwin street put on "The Million Dollar Mystery" Thursday, August 6, and the management was greeted with a capacity house. "Nothing like a well-advertised feature to fill the coffers," is the way he expressed himself about 9:15 o'clock that evening.

"Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery" is now being exhibited at the Broadway Theatre on East Main street and the Eden Theatre on Bank street. The manager of the Eden, Mr. Fernandez, covered his touring car with posters and went about the streets advertising the feature. He had a youngster inside beating a tom-tom. The Eden and Broadway are among the smaller motion picture houses in the city.

CAMERA MAN KILLED BY LIGHTNING

On Tuesday, August 11, Chad Fisher, a Vitagraph camera man, while taking pictures near Grassy Spring Reservoir at Yonkers, N. Y., was instantly killed by lightning.

Captain Lambart, the director, had taken a company of Vitagraph players to this locality and were in the midst of their work when a terrific storm burst upon them and they were obliged to flee for shelter.

They ran to the French House on the Sawmill River road when a bolt of lightning struck the front of the building, killing Mr. Fisher and severely burning and stunning Captain Lambart and Lillian Herbert, one of the Vitagraph players. The other men of the company were so dazed they could scarcely realize what had happened.

WURLITZER ORCHESTRA IN SOUTHWEST THEATRES

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, of Cincinnati, O., and with branches throughout the country, has through its agents, the El Paso Piano Company, recently installed their motion picture orchestras in the following moving picture houses, some being the best in the West:

The Regale Theatre, 210 East Washington street, Pheonix, Arizona; Alhambra Theatre, El Paso, Texas; The Arizona, Pheonix, Ariz., a new and magnificent house; The Tucson, Ariz., Opera House; the Bisbee, Ariz., Theatre; the Royal, Ariz., Theatre, and the Alcazar, 506 El Paso street, El Paso, Tex.

New Corporation Forms Popular Program

Charles O. Baumann, of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, Directs Plans for Series of Unusual Releases Through Second Company

A NEW popular program will be shortly issued by the Popular Photo Plays Corporation, of which Charles O. Baumann is president.

Each exchange booking office that will handle Popular Program releases will be under the control and ownership of men who will have full power to arrange with exhibitors for service direct in their respective territory.

C. O. BAUMANN

The old plan of exchanges managed by "lieutenants" or exchange combinations has been abandoned.

The quality of the productions will be the highest obtainable. The casts comprise players of national distinction and the dramas are written by experienced scenario writers, insuring novel plots and strong characterizations.

Mr. Baumann, the guiding spirit of the company, entered the motion picture field in 1908. His first venture was the purchase of films for rental exhibitors, the prevailing method of distribution in the early days of the business.

The following year he engaged in the manufacturing end, forming the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

He then formed the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company to handle the products of the manufacturers who had followed his lead. As a result of his activity while acting as treasurer, the company built up a very profitable business throughout the United States.

In 1912 Mr. Baumann combined the best plants and brands of the sales company and organized the Universal Film Manufacturing Corporation, assuming the presidentship of the concern.

Later he resigned from the Universal and entered the manufacturing field again with Keystone, Kay Bee and Broncho brands.

Rochester Ranks as a "First Run" City

Service of the Important Companies Divided Up Among Local Exhibitors—The Public Knows Difference Between "Firsts" and "Seconds"

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 20.

THIS city uses more first-run films than any city in the state, outside of New York, according to a local exhibitor, who is in touch with the situation. Rochester buys the first-runs of all of the big service companies, and pays good prices for them, too, showing that the picture business in this city is in a flourishing condition.

Patrons of the films here are discriminating in their taste, and they are likewise "wise" to the business. They know in a minute when a house switches from first-runs to seconds.

Some of the houses split up the first-runs of a given service with others in the city, but in territory which is regarded as non-competitive. One house will take half of the service each day, and the other half, which has been run by another house the same day, is shown on the following days.

Local motion picture patrons who have occasion to visit Buffalo, and drop into the downtown places of that city, often report seeing pictures which have been displayed in this city two weeks earlier. The pictures are new to Buffalo, but they are booked there some time after they are first released.

LONDON FILM AT STRAND

The Strand Theatre, New York, offered "The Valley of the Moon," as the main attraction for the week beginning Sunday, August 16. The picture is adapted from Jack London's popular story of the same name. Besides this picture there will be the topical review showing interesting scenes of the European situation. A Jacobs comedy and the usual travel and scientific studies will complete the motion picture end of the program.

Eastern Canada Undisturbed by War

New Brunswick Exhibitors Using All Films With Battle Settings Possible—Fear of a Shortage of Carbons—Price Already Has Taken a Jump, With Chance of Going Still Higher

Special to The Motion Picture News

St. John, N. B., Aug. 19.

THESE are exciting times in Canada. Interest in the European war is particularly keen on this side of the water, largely because of Great Britain, the Motherland of Canada, being involved.

Competition among motion picture theatre managers and the war is an interesting feature of the amusement world. The attendance at local houses during the heat of summer has been quite satisfactory and there is no complaint so far as St. John is concerned.

Just what effect the war will have upon the amusement business locally is difficult at present to foretell. Thus far there have been few announcements of local business or industrial concerns laying off employes because of an existing or expected depression.

The only discouraging feature up to the present is that some of the lumber mills have been forced to cease operations, but most of the hands made idle have found other pursuits to engage them.

Carbon Prices go up

One of the greatest fears among the local proprietors is the supply of carbons. Most all of these have in the past been brought from the old country and there is said not to be any too plentiful a stock on hand.

Already the price has advanced and there has been a rush of orders upon local supply houses which have been only in part filled because of the demand being excessive.

Whether a substitute can be found or whether the carbons can be manufactured on this side of the ocean as satisfactorily as on the continent, remains to be seen. But the subject is a cause of some perturbation among local film men. The expectations are also that carbons will be considerably advanced in price.

Of course, as in every other city throughout the dominion, the war is the leading topic of conversation wherever friends assemble. On all sides the issues are being discussed.

War Bulletins Flashed on Screens

What then could be of greater interest in the picture houses than matters pertaining to the countries interested, the armies thereof, navies, customs of the people, and particularly news of the conflict?

With commendable enterprise some of the local houses are taking advantage of the situation to maintain their standard of attendance, and war bulletins are the features of many programs.

Probably the new Imperial is the most prominent in this connection. Realizing the general interest in the continental conflict, W. H. Golding, the energetic manager of this handsome theatre, has been bulletining news items through an arrangement with local newspapers and telegraph offices, on a large screen in front of the house.

He also is making announcements from the stage when there has been any important development in the overseas or Canadian correspondence. The service has proven most popular. It has also been quite a drawing card.

Demand for War "Local Color"

In addition to this, every available pictorial dealing with "local color" in the war zone has been commissioned for service, and the local picture patrons of the Imperial, Unique, Gem, Star, Lyric and Gaiety have had the privilege of seeing on canvas the armies and navies of the powers concerned, and scenes in and about the countries in question.

Most of the pictures were of course old releases, but they were quickly adapted to the purpose and the result was an increased attendance.

"God Save the King," "Rule Britannia," "The Maple Leaf," "O Canada" and other British and Canadian martial airs have been featured by the orchestras in the local theatres at every performance, and the national anthems of the allies of Britain have won favor as well.

It has always been the custom in St. John to close an entertainment in a public amusement centre with the singing of the English national anthem.

Patriotism in Picture Theatres

Now it is also given at the opening of every show, generally accompanied with a moving study of the Union Jack fluttering to the breeze—a signal for an outburst of enthusiasm by the audience.

The attendance in all the houses up to the present has been in no way affected by the war, but on the contrary with the aid of the means outlined, has been stimulated.

Prospects are that should there be better and more up-to-date releases made, especially if any can be had from the scenes of activities, there will be a decided increase in the audiences.

But even without this, with the pictures now available and a continuation of the bulletin and slide service, local managers are not apprehending anything but a well sustained patronage for some time to come.

Motion Picture Advertising Officers Re-elected

The Third Informal Conference Held in New York City—A Number of Papers Relative to the Industry Read by Members.

AT the third informal conference of motion picture advertising specialists and manufacturers which was held at the Hotel Claridge, New York City, within the month the following members of the national committee, who were appointed at the Chicago meeting held at the La Salle Hotel in January, were unanimously re-elected:

Watterson R. Rothacker, of the Industrial Moving Picture Company; Charles Stark, of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, and J. Alexander Leggett, of the Pathéscope Company.

The conference was replete with interesting features. The first day was devoted to a discussion with representatives of various national advertising agents on the relation of the advertising agency to the motion picture advertising manufacturer.

The second day's program was as follows: "The Truth About Moving Picture Advertising," by Mr. Rothacker; "Moving Picture Circulation," by Mr. Stark; "Miniature Projecting Machines," by Mr. Leggett; "Municipal Motography," by W. E. Hamilton; "The Ad Film in Selling," by N. F. Sawyer, and "Moving Picture Advertising Achievement," by H. J. Aldous.

Several members of the Panama Commissions were unofficially present and told of the big part motion pictures will play at the San Francisco Exposition.

It was tentatively decided to have the next meeting of the National Committee at San Francisco in February, 1915. A special meeting may be called for either Chicago or New York soon.

KILL CENSORSHIP BILL IN MINNEAPOLIS

Members of City Council Make Thorough Investigation Individually, and Finding That Motion Picture Theatres Are Free From Objectionable Films, Vote Down the Proposed Ordinance of Alderman Chase

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Minneapolis, Aug. 19.

THE proposed Minneapolis motion picture censorship ordinance is dead and will not be brought to life again unless a band of reformers appear in the distant future and decide to reform something they know little about.

The Minneapolis council is against censorship and the ordinance proposed by Alderman Josiah Chase has been tabled. The aldermen have visited all the theatres many times and are well acquainted with the conditions. Not an alderman was found who had seen an objectionable picture or who feared any would be shown. They declared that the ordinary police power will prevent the showing of any films that are not fit to be shown.

The victory for the Minneapolis picture men is due to the fact that the local association, which is allied with the Minnesota Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, has put the picture theatre business on a hard, commonsense business basis.

Exhibitors Substantial Business Men

The old idea that a theatre manager was a "show man," occasionally here and sometimes there, aiming to get what he could out of a town and then going to the next, has been dispelled in Minneapolis.

Among the Minneapolis exhibitors are many men who are widely and favorably known as business men. Their business is exclusively that of conducting motion-picture theatres, but they do it in a dignified, business-like way without any claptrap tricks.

They have joined the improvement and business associations; they have permanent homes and are in general good citizens. They rank with other professional men, and their views are considered on public questions.

As a result of their becoming an important part of the city itself their word was good when information was wanted on the moral tone of motion pictures. These men were asked frankly how often they had seen objectionable pictures.

Their Opinions Respected

They declared they scarcely ever saw a picture that should be even labeled "for adults only," and none of the class that would come under the head "for men only." They told of the efforts of the producers to make the motion picture the highest type of amusement.

Then, too, the patrons of the theatres showed their confidence in the theatre managers. They told their aldermen they were willing for their favorite theatres to choose the programs.

"If the exhibitors are degrading children they are degrading their own," said W. A. Steffes, secretary of the association, "and it would be a pretty hard thing to say of anyone that he wanted the minds of his own children poisoned."

The aldermen in getting their information simply went out individually and obtained the information. Then they went into the committee and voted not to recommend the ordinance to the council.

Exhibitors Don't Run Obscene Films

Minneapolis is motion picture sane to-day and there is little possibility that there will ever be a censorship. The association has stood for a progressive body and every member realizes that a man might play an objectionable film to a packed house once or twice if he were allowed to do so, but in a few days his house would be shunned.

The picture men here wouldn't run an obscene picture for a bonus, because they are not the kind of men that would care to look at such a picture.

An attempt may be made to get a state censorship in the next legislature but with sentiment so strong against it as it is now in all parts of the state there is little fear that the "reformers" will be successful.

The Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association has adopted a new argument to land conventions for the city. E. C. Hilweg, secretary of the association, now goes to the conventions with a motion-picture machine and a roll of films, showing what Minneapolis is like.

Pictures to Bring Conventions

When he seeks votes for making Minneapolis the convention city, he invites groups of delegates to a large hotel room and there shows Minneapolis as she lives, works and plays. The city's business and pleasures are all shown.

It is a convincing argument, and many of the 1915 conventions have been directed to Minneapolis because the delegates would like to see the city again.

Local Topicals "Go Big" in Nashville

Suffragette Parade, the Fall of a Huge Chimney, Baseball Games and Theatre-Going Crowds Popular Subjects

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 19.

MANAGER TONY SUDEKUM, of the Fifth Avenue Elite, Princess and Alhambra theatres, is following in the footsteps of other enterprising film men over the country by having pictures taken of every local important event and showing them on the screen at the Fifth Avenue.

A parade of suffragettes who were here in convention some time back was shown a few days ago, with the result that the big house was filled all day. The demolition of an immense smoke-stack was also taken and shown. Several local baseball parades were given on the screen, and the fatness of the door receipts proved the popularity of the idea.

A special feature which attracted many to the Fifth Avenue was put on by Manager Sudekum recently, when he advertised that from 1 to 3 o'clock in the afternoon film pictures would be made of the entrance of the playhouse, showing everyone who went in or out of the place. The house, it is needless to say, enjoyed perhaps the greatest run it has had since its opening.

A few days later the pictures were shown on the screen, with those who were in them naturally coming back and bringing their friends to see themselves. It was a great and profitable scheme for the local film magnate, and the coffers of the Crescent Amusement Company, of which Mr. Sudekum is president, were richly enhanced.

TURNER TAKES VACATION

Los Angeles, Aug. 17.

Director-General Otis Turner, of the Universal studio, is off for a two months' vacation, and departed for New York to spend the greater part of the time. Greetings galore were sent to photoplayers in the East by the many in Los Angeles, by Mr. Turner, who doubts very much that he will be able to deliver one-tenth of the messages intrusted with him.

"The Pot of Gold" in the Theatre Lobby

P. J. Schwie, Is Sure He Has Found It in the Use of Unique Lobby Displays—No Posters in Sight, But He "Makes the Theatre Talk" with Sepia Illlstrations of Scenes Taken From Each Play, Painted by a Skilful Artist

AT last the fairy tale of our youth, "The Pot of Gold," has come true, and it took a live-wire Minneapolis exhibitor to find the treasure. His method, however, was somewhat different from that of the child who chased the rainbow, expecting to dig up the gold at the foot of the elusive arc. This seeker after wealth had no running to do—he did not even step from his own doorway, or rather, his lobby, to discover the hiding place of the chinking yellow gold pieces.

This sagacious discoverer is P. J. Schwie, manager of Saxe's Lyric Theatre, 720 Hennepin avenue, in that city, who declares that every motion picture theatre can find the pot of gold if he will dig for it. The lobby or front of the average theatre is a liability rather than an asset, as it should be made, according to Mr. Schwie, and the fact that he has made the lobby of the Lyric a business-getter has won him a place in among energetic managers.

"One idea must be kept uppermost in the exhibitor's mind if he is to get the most from his business and the most from his lobby," said Mr. Schwie, in a recent interview. "That idea is that the real legitimate drama of to-day is the photoplay and that it must be treated with the same seriousness and dignity that the older legitimate drama was treated."

No person, Mr. Schwie believes, who wants to become a theatrical leader would plaster the front of his house with flaming posters, and stickers, poorly arranged. He believes that the pictures of the stars and the important scenes comprise the only introduction that patrons have to the play and its players. It should make an appeal and tell enough of the reel story to arouse interest.

AS a result of this conception of the photoplay, the Lyric has no ordinary posters anywhere about the house. A man is employed to "make the lobby talk." When the lobby is "through talking" the theatre is full.

The man selected to accomplish this work is an experienced advertising illustrator. He views each play before it is run for the patrons, and in time to enable him to get out his display. Then he makes sepia enlargements of some of the principal scenes, with the best poses of the stars. These he groups tastily in Flemish oak frames set about the lobby on easles. Around the pictures are artistic hand-illuminated titles and occasionally a word explaining the film.

A look at this attractive advertising matter tells the patron much about the locale of the play. It gives him a good idea whether he wants to see the play for its scenic value or for its dramatic action.

Mr. Schwie stopped at an outlying theatre one day and heard a manufacturer tell the theatre manager that had he known the films would show the interior of some particularly unsanitary factories, he would have taken his entire force to the show.

These scenes were shown in an average motion picture play. The manufacturer had a small, clean and sanitary factory and he thought the play would add to the employees' appreciation of their own surroundings.

THERE was no chance for him to know that these scenes were to be shown. The posters didn't tell him and there was no sign of a synopsis.

"I made up my mind then never to lose a lobby opportunity," said Mr. Schwie. "That is why we display a brief synopsis. The patron can learn whether he wants to step in or go on."

The lobby artist after getting out his advertising gives his attention to the decorations. Baskets of flowers are changed, a hanging redraped, and a few lights are changed in tint. The effect is a changed lobby. In the summer months real flowers and ferns are used, and each week sees an entirely new lobby.

Then, too, courtesy is capitalized in this lobby. The girl at the ticket-window says, "Good evening," if she has the time, and if not she just smiles. There are more smiles at the door, and the ticket takers always speak to a customer they have seen before. As the patron passes out he is frequently asked if he liked the show. This is not said in a loud voice to attract attention of passing persons, but the question is asked quietly and purely from an honest desire to learn how the play appealed to him.

Sometimes a patron says he liked the show but was annoyed by noise or by some other inconvenience. The annoyance is eliminated if possible.

Also this lobby is spotlessly clean. In fact, it is so clean that patrons think they would be doing something criminal should they drop waste paper or other refuse. The brass is polished daily, the mirrors really reflect. Everything shines, from the lamps to the faces of the door pages.

A COOL lobby means a cool and contented patron. Electric fans keep the people who have to wait to get in cool and maintain the good name of the theatre.

At the entrance proper into the theatre, the patron is met by a young colored girl who acts as the usher. The usher is polite, quick and quiet and requests to patrons to fill seats from the front back, are never taken as an offense.

On the inside the same methods are used to make the whole setting of the play attractive. The curtain is at the rear of the regular stage and forms the background of a handsome Italian village scene. The orchestra is playing on the piazza of a villa, a fountain is gushing in the center of the scene and the whole is a realistic and comfortable setting. It lends the required atmosphere to carry out the manager's idea as to what a motion picture should be.

This arrangement also permits of much featuring of films and it gives a greater seating capacity. With the curtain at the rear of the stage, the orchestra stall can be used for seats.

As illustrative of the manner in which the house puts on a photoplay, the production of "Hearts Adrift," by Mary Pickford, may be taken as an example. In the scene where Nina danced on the beach, the curtain was raised slowly, and the picture allowed to fade. Instead of the picture there was the same beach scene, and Mrs. Orville Pretorius, a noted dancer, stood where Nina had danced. Mrs. Pretorius walked from the little stage within a stage, to a point in front of the fountain and interpreted Nina's dance at close range.

FEW such dancing hits have been made in Minneapolis, and as a result of the announcement "Hearts Adrift" played to five houses, or a combined attendance of nearly 10,000 persons. The theatre has a capacity of 2,000 persons when the gallery is included, and the gallery was filled every night of that week. While "Hearts Adrift" was given but one night, there were different Mary Pickford features for five straight nights that week and each play was featured.

Every bit of action in a photoplay is studied by the orchestra leader, and the music is as carefully selected as it would be for a Shakesperean production.

An important and appealing feature in the handling of the Lyric is the fire drill. In case of a fire the ushers are instructed to walk quietly to the front of the house and tell the persons in each row to walk out quietly but without comment. The ushers are to remain until the theatre is cleared, allowing one row to go out at a time.

The audiences are, for the most part, more carefully dressed than the audiences of the regular theatres. A better testimonial for the general standing of the theatre could hardly be sought.

"Some may say," said Mr. Schwie, after the performance of "Hearts Adrift," "that all this costs too much. Well, it costs money but it all comes back, I believe. The artists' work alone triples the cost of the work. The cleanliness, the changing of stage settings, and the other work about the house calls for no special outlay of money."

"BARLEYCORN" FAILS TO SHOCK ROCHESTER

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 20.

The much-discussed film, "John Barleycorn," played for the past week at the Gordon, and, as an instance of how free this city is from the censorship evil, not a word has been said in opposition to its showing here, which is in direct contrast to the attitude assumed in Pennsylvania.

PICTURE TRADES CLUB ENDORSE POLITICIAN

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 20.

The Motion Picture Trades Club of Atlanta, composed of many of the city's leading exchange men, has gone into politics to the extent of formally indorsing the candidacy of United States Senator Hoke Smith for re-election. This action was taken at the last meeting.

Rules and regulations for the betterment of trade conditions in this section are being drawn up and will be presented to the club soon for their ratification.

BUFFALO EXHIBITORS AFTER CLEVELAND HOUSE

Special to The Motion Picture News

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 20.

Harold Edel, Claude Weill and a number of other Buffalo men went to Cleveland recently to look over a theatre proposition in the downtown section of that city on a twenty-year rental basis.

Mr. Edel is manager of the Strand and Mr. Weill, manager of the Premier in this city. The theatre in Cleveland has seating capacity of 1,200.

Will Eliminate Five-Cent Admissions

Elizabeth, N. J., Managers Plan to Charge a Dime During the Coming Winter—Public, Demanding Better Pictures, Willing to Pay More

Elizabeth, N. J., Aug. 20.

IF talk now going on among the local motion picture men amounts to anything more than mere discussion, there will be no five-cent admissions to any of the local film houses next winter.

There is a movement now on foot to establish ten cents as the minimum admission price, and the manager of the best house in the city, who has been playing to a five-cent and ten-cent scale, is seriously considering making twenty-five cents his top figure with a graduation of prices down to ten cents.

Five and ten cent prices prevail in every motion picture house in the city at the present time. In the smaller places five cents is the high price at both afternoon and evening performances, except on Saturday, when ten cents is collected from adults, with half price for children.

While it remains for the managers to fix higher prices, the advance is being brought on by the theatre-goers themselves. Through the bigger theatres they are being educated to demand more elaborate productions. In the old "nickolette," attractions fail to pull.

High-class features and good serial pictures are being called for in sections of the city where the old Wild West thriller and slapstick comedy used to be the biggest drawing cards. Better pictures cost theatre managers more money, but they have to put them on to get the crowds.

Only a few months ago some of the local theatre managers would have laughed at the idea of getting more than five cents for admission, but their views have changed and now most of them are in favor of the increase. Public taste has reached a point where it is said the people will pay the prices if they are given really high class pictures.

Changes have already been made in the prices at some of the houses. At the U. S. Roof Garden Theatre, where five-cent admissions were formerly charged, the price has been raised to ten cents for adults and five for children at night. The afternoon prices have not been changed as yet.

At the open air theatres in East Jersey near First street, ten cents is the admission now. Until a week ago it was five cents.

Dennis J. Shepard, manager of this theatre, told a representative of The Motion Picture News that he was in favor of the increase.

"We can get ten cents as easily as we can get five," he said. "A nickel doesn't make much difference one way or the other to the average theatre-goer. The people want to see high-class pictures, and there is no profit for the picture men in showing a big feature for five cents. We have got to give better pictures to get the audiences, and we cannot continue to put on first-class attractions on the old scale."

Five-cent admissions prevail at the Avenue, Royal and Olympia theatres, which are all located on Elizabeth avenue, within a few blocks of each other, and it is said that the managers of these houses are consdering making an agreement for an advance in their admission scale. John W. Hawkins.

Luxurious "Theatre Intime" Goes to Pictures

Little Theatre, Los Angeles, Designed for Two Dollar Attractions, Will Be Home of High-Class Features

Los Angeles, Aug. 17.

THE Little Theatre, 1324 South Figueroa street, Los Angeles, built and equipped for high-class dramatic productions by a selected company, which was opened January 26 last and continued until March 15, with an admission price of two dollars for any seat in the house, is now to become the home of motion pictures and will be under the management of Frank Egan, head of the Egan School of Music, Drama and Art, located in the theatre building.

This theatre is situated near a very choice residence and apartment house district, and it will be the policy to run only feature pictures of five, six or more reels. But one performance will be given each evening at eight o'clock with matinees on Saturday and Sunday. A string quartette will furnish the music. The opening is now dated for Saturday, August 8. It is probable one or two acts of good vaudeville will be added later. The admission fees will be ten cents for children, adults twenty cents and loge seats thirty cents.

This is without a doubt the most elaborately furnished theatre west of Chicago. The entire basement under the building is furnished for ladies' and gentlemen's parlors and rest rooms, the seats are of an expensive and very comfortable type, while the draperies, hangings and decorations are equal to any in the West. It was the intention of the builders to make this an exclusive theatre for the better dramas, and the enterprise was backed by more than two hundred stockholders, each owning the same amount of stock. There are but 334 seats.

WITH EXHIBITORS ON PACIFIC COAST

Southern California Association Goes Solid for an Amalgamation, After Hearing Tugwell's Report—Chief of Police Threatens Segregation of Sexes in Theatres to Quell Mashers—S. R. O. Houses Bring Complaints from Disappointed Ticket-Purchasers

Los Angeles, Aug. 17.

THIS has been a big week for Los Angeles motion picture exhibitors—their association unanimously decided to affiliate with the Exhibitors League of America; the police in two instances advise regulation of theatres; one house keeps a line out all the time by showing local pictures; and every one of the managers of the larger houses have exceptional business that has changed records for attendance.

At the regular monthly meeting, the second Wednesday of the month, of the members of the Southern California Motion Picture Men's Association, the report of Judge A. P. Tugwell, delegate to the two recent national conventions, reported to the association the action taken at the Dayton meeting and at the close of his remarks read a resolution providing that the local association should affiliate with the Exhibitors League of America. This brought out a very lively discussion, in which purely local questions were involved, but in the end, all members present voted for the adoption of the resolution.

Association Changes Quarters

The attendance at this meeting was small owing to a change of location of the association's headquarters from Broadway to the Mozart Theatre Building on Grand avenue, below Seventh.

The new headquarters are nearer the film center of Los Angeles, being within a block or two of seven exchanges.

Chief of Police Sebastian has given an interview to all local reporters advising that he will ask the city council to frame an ordinance requiring motion picture theatres to segregate the sexes by providing separate sections for men and women who are unaccompanied and for women with escorts.

The chief says a number of complaints have been made by young women who have been insulted in theatres by mashers operating under the cover of darkness. As the women who complain do not wish to appear in court, the police chief claims he is at a loss to know what other means will prevent the continued practice.

Exhibitors, generally speaking, consider this statement of Chief Sebastian as a joke. It is their belief that in one or two instances the motion picture theatres may be places where mashers congregate, but they hold that a woman or young lady attending such theatres should expect flirting and mashers as the theatres in question are located in a section of the city frequented by mashers of both sexes.

Will Fight Segregation

On the other hand all motion picture theatres are as well lighted as the vaudeville and legitimate theatres, and if segregation is necessary in one class it is in both.

If such an ordinance comes before the city council it will be fought by representatives of the exhibitors. By some it is believed to be another attempt of the political machine now in power to control the motion pictures.

According to the police department, complaint has been made because theatres sell tickets when they cannot give patrons seats, and thus make them stand in line until there are vacancies. Those making the complaints urge, and they are upheld by the police department, that managers of theatres should furnish seats for the people waiting.

The complaints were the outcome of great crowds at Clune's Auditorium last week and this, where "The Escape" was shown. On several evenings the line, two abreast, reached from the door of the theatre, through the lobby sixty feet deep and along the sidewalk a full block. W. H. Clune is heartily in favor of affording his patrons every comfort possible, and if the police will grant him permit to use the sidewalk, chairs or seats of some kind will be provided.

Clune Attendance Break Record

The attendance at the Clune Auditorium last week raised by several thousand, the record made for any theatre on the coast, which was that made earlier in the summer at the same theatre. The attendance Monday of the week was far above the average Monday, and every day thereafter business increased.

The picture was held over for a second week and attendance this week is almost as good as last. Mr. Clune anticipates securing the picture at a later date for a one or two week run.

One hour during every afternoon of last week, a cameraman with an Angelus motion picture camera, stood in front of the Clune Broadway Theatre and took the pictures of the people as they passed. This week this set of pictures, together with the regular General Film Company releases that make up the program of the house are being shown to big houses afternoon and evening.

Two weeks ago the Superba, with eight hundred seats, was opened on the same side of the street and less than one hundred feet above the Clune Theatre. The new house attracted considerable of the usual patronage of the older theatre and this plan was used to hold the popularity at Clune's. From all appearances it is very successful.

Manager T. L. Tally, of the Broadway Theatre bearing that name, will not show the same picture more than one week in the future because of the new contract with the Paramount company for 104 releases during the year beginning September 1. In speaking of the attendance when the Mary Pickford picture, "The Eagle's Mate," was run the second week, Mr. Tally stated that the two weeks' business had set a new mark for one picture, but that the second week was not as great as the first, although greater than the attendance on some pictures shown but one week.

Last week the bill consists of "The Little Gray Lady," with Jane Grey in the title role. The attendance was very good. A special feature for the musical program at the theatre this week, played at intermissions by the eight-piece orchestra and great pipe organ, is Marche Slav, by Tschaikowski. This selection, composed during the Franco-Prussian war and intended to portray musically the struggle of the Slav race for independence, was very appropriate and received generous applause.

The composition begins with a funeral-like theme, develops to a big climax, and ends with a triumphal exposition of the Russian national hymn.

Results On a Ten-Inch "Ad"

On the first day the first installment of the "Trey o' Hearts," the Universal serial, was shown at the Alhambra Theatre, 743 South Hill street, Manager Frank Hawkins inserted ten-inch advertisements in the local papers. Each contained a coupon admitting the bearer, if an adult, to the theatre free if presented between the hours of twelve and six on that date.

Mr. Hawkins figured that if one in twenty of the people who saw the advertisement would return the coupon, twice that amount would attend the theatre while the bill is on, as the result of the advertisement, and as 132 coupons were returned he believes he secured very good returns from the ten inches of space used.

E. H. Emmick, manager of the Los Angeles Golden Gate Film Exchange, has returned from a conference of exchange managers called by Sol Lesser, president of the company, upon his return from a business trip to New York City, and brings the announcement that these exchanges will in the next few weeks announce arrangements for complete programs of one, two, three and larger subjects.

According to Mr. Emmick, every reel through the Golden Gate exchanges will have a national star in the leading part, and will be more of the nature of features.

Announcement has also been made by Mr. Emmick that the company purchased the rights for "The Spoilers" and a number of other exceptional features for the state and are now booking them. Other attractions secured are Lou Dockstader in "Dan," Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale" and the "Christian."

Book "Cabiria" for Los Angeles

The first attraction of the Trinity Auditorium, the Los Angeles new home for grand opera, orchestra recitals, etc., which is now being finished, will be "Cabiria." The Auditorium is under the management of L. Behymer, who is now in the East, and because of his absence the opening date is not known here. The picture is now being shown in San Francisco.

Charles S. Armstrong, who purchased the Lyric Theatre, Santa Monica, in July, has refurnished it throughout, as well as having it redecorated. He is now beginning to build up business by showing successful feature pictures of four, five and six reels four nights each week, and small subjects three nights. The big features, he has found, while more expensive, have doubled his receipts and the greatest trouble he experiences is that of accommodating the many who attend. The seating capacity is 285.

PREDICT KEEN DOWNTOWN COMPETITION IN BUFFALO

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 20.

With the opening of Shea's Hippodrome on Labor Day, local downtown exhibitors have got to get on the jump, for competition from this source is going to be of a serious nature. Shea has booked all the Paramount service, conceded by many to be the best in film features. The manager of the Strand has something up his sleeve, which is going to fall out in a few days.

There is no doubt that the opening of the Hippodrome will seriously affect the Olympic and the Family. How long they can survive is only conjectural.

WICHITA FILM THEATRE OPENS

Wichita, Kan., Aug. 19.

The Holland, Wichita's newest motion picture theatre, opened recently, at 118 East Douglas avenue. J. G. Holland is the manager and owner.

One of the features of this theatre will be a weekly film entitled "Jayhawker Events," in which will be shown Kansas happenings.

Lubin Will Invade Serial Field

"The Beloved Adventurer," Ready Sept. 14, will be Issued in One Reel Parts, Each Instalmen Complete in Itself

The Lubin company will release on September 14, and continue to release on Monday of each week following, "The Beloved Adventurer," by Emmett Campbell Hall, featuring Arthur

LOTTIE BRISCOE

V. Johnson and Lottie Briscoe in exceptionally attractive parts.

In "The Beloved Adventurer" each part will be a story complete in itself, yet combining with the other fourteen parts to make a single story of remarkable continuity when the entire series is seen in sequence.

The result is that, while the patron who sees the complete series will doubly appreciate the series, a patron who sees only one or any number of parts will be strongly moved to return for any parts to be shown after his casual visit to the theatre. Without repetition, the main theme is picked up from a logical beginning with each instalment and left in suspense at the end of each instalment, but in that instalment has been told an incidental story of great interest.

Fifteen separate casts appear in the entire series, but Mr. Johnson appears in each, the character of "Lord Cecil," which he portrays, being the central figure in each.

An idea which, it is believed, will prove popular, is the publication in book form of the complete story of "The Beloved Adventurer." Emmett Campbell Hall has written the novel as well as the photoplay. This book is a handsome volume of 160 pages, full cloth binding, with fifteen full-page illustrations consisting of half-tone portraits of the leading players appearing in the series and scenes from the plays.

It will be supplied to exhibitors at a very low cost and will be a source of direct profit as well as a means of increasing patronage by creating an interest in the series.

Scent Plan to Crush Small Exhibitors

Scheme Said to Be on Foot for Gaining Control of Minor Paying Houses in Outlying Districts of Pittsburgh

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 20.

THE motion picture business in the Pittsburgh district is getting better as the days pass, and already a noticeable increase is felt in the number of patrons daily visiting the theatres of this section. A number of managers state that they have almost doubled their receipts during the past week, although they have added no big feature pictures as a drawing card.

It is possible that there will be a clearing out of a number of small theatres in this city before long. The city ordinance officers are watching all violators of the building and other laws, and are ready to pounce down upon the unlucky manager who in any way violates the laws. It is stated that the city officials will see to it that the motion picture house must close when the case is proved against it, as no license to operate will be issued.

There seems to be a well-directed plan in this city to stamp out many of the little men. This is being done in a systematic way and in some sections it is being felt. It is said that where the smaller theatres refuse to sell out, larger and more pretentious ones are erected in the neighborhood for pictures costing more than the smaller man can afford to pay.

This has been done in a number of instances in this city, and it is said that several large men are behind the deal who mean to control the Pittsburgh film houses or break them. A number of managers of the theatres in this section have been interviewed on the subject and have been loud in their denunciation of the ones behind the movement.

This will hardly apply to the ones on Fifth avenue or in the downtown section. It is intended for the ones in the outlying districts that have been making money and upon whom the promotors of the big scheme have cast their eyes, looking forward to getting a chain of theatres in good sections and getting them at a low price.

A Pioneer in Lobby Display

By J. W. Martin

Before Posters Were Provided With Pictures, Meister Had His Own Form of Lobby Decoration—Now That They Are in General Use, He Is Already Looking for the Development Beyond the Lithograph, and His New Ideas Are Pulling Business

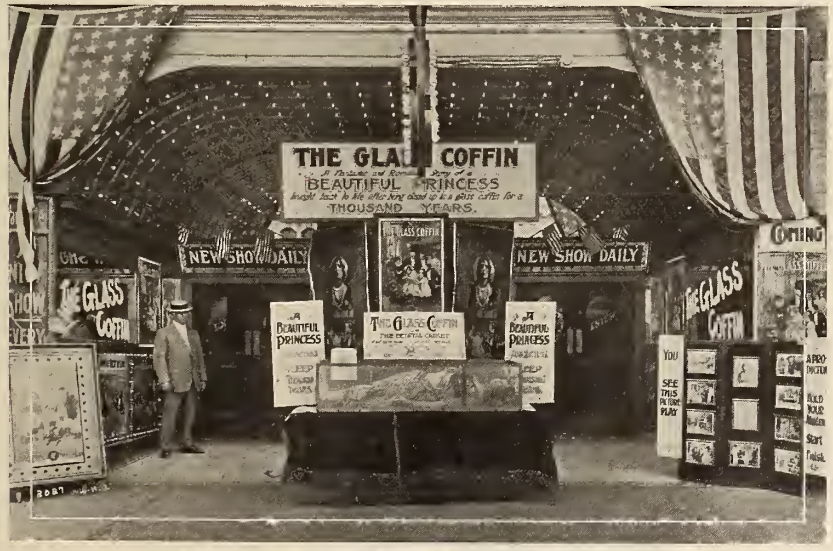
"STUDY your public and give them what they want," is the keynote of the success of Otto L. Meister, probably the leading five-cent picture exhibitor in Milwaukee. Long ago Mr. Meister's fronts made the other exhibitors in Milwaukee and the city as a whole sit up and take notice, by their very originality, if nothing more.

Mr. Meister is part owner and manager of the Vaudette Theatre, 183 Third street, Milwaukee, and long before the days lithographs or paper of any kind was used for pictures, Mr. Meister was hard at work making his front bring the nickels rolling in.

To the present-day exhibitor, when every reel that is turned out has its paper, it seems rather difficult to realize that the time was when no paper was printed by the producer, and it was entirely up to the exhibitor to let his patrons know what kind of picture he was showing.

Naturally, it taxed the exhibitor's originality to the utmost to figure out attractive lobby displays, and this was probably the training that made Mr. Meister so succesful in this particular end.

PROMOTING A REGULAR PROGRAM AT THE VAUDETTE, MILWAUKEE, WIS.



AS the lithographs began to appear, Mr. Meister began to utilize them, until about a year ago, when he built a new front. Then they were more or less relegated to the rear, and lights all flashing and very bright took their place.

His adoption of paper just a bit before it was used by other exhibitors, and now, when everyone else is using paper in the lobby, his haste in finding a substitute for it is characteristic of the man. In building a new front on his house, Mr. Meister surprised his architect by ordering him to make it not round, but square with plenty of lights

Then provisions were made for an artistic display of paper where it would look neat and be out of the way, and the result was that just about the time every other picture exhibitor in town had copied the Vaudette's style of dressing the front, Mr. Meister pulled something new on them.

And now again, in a few months, just about the time many of the competitors will have copied the square or talking front, as the attractive, light front is termed, he will have a brand new theatre costing $100,000, called the White House, and ready to open to the public.

The front of this theatre will be totally unlike anything in the country. It is to be constructed entirely out of white marble and will contain 4,000 Mazda lights. The house will be 50 x 150 and will seat 1,500 people.

HOW OTTO MEISTER ADVERTISES A FEATURE
Scene in the Lobby of the Vaudette, Milwaukee.

BUT it is not with the lobby that Mr. Meister stops. This is only the beginning. After he has gotten his patron's nickels with his front, he is working just as hard to please them after they get inside so that they will come again. To make doubly sure that they will return, Mr. and Mrs. Movie Fan are greeted with a number of signs or posters telling them of coming attractions, and as they go out the exit an usher reminds them of the fact that a Keystone comedy will be shown the next day.

Another small detail, but one that his patrons appreciate, is the rule that no one be seated while an interesting scene or event is being depicted on the screen.

A bell from the coop signals the doorman whenever there is a scene of intense interest on the screen, so that he can hold the people out.

A five-piece orchestra furnishes the music, and particular stress is laid upon the drummer by Mr. Meister. The drummer works just as many effects into the picture as is possible and he is busy every minute of the time he is in the pit.

SINCE he was fifteen years old, Mr. Meister has been in the show business. His early life was spent with a medicine show, a show which changed its program nightly, so that when he got into the picture game, unlike the other exhibitors, he was accustomed to the daily change of program.

From the medicine show he went into vaudeville, working for a long time as a German comedian, and when the motion picture was first put out, Mr. Meister was sure that he saw a great future for it.

He was penniless, however, at this time, and he set out to get the money. Going around from friend to friend, he borrowed $20 or $30 from each one until he had $500, and it was with this that he launched upon his successful career.

As might be guessed, Mr. Meister has some sound ideas regarding his business.

"A house must have the manager's personal attention, and no manager can run more than one house and run it successfully," says Mr. Meister.

The manager must get out on the floor and usher his patrons and get amongst them so that he will get to know them.

OTTO L. MEISTER

"No man can succeed by sitting at his desk and looking wise.

"Only by getting in personal touch with his patrons can a manager get to know what they want, and it is only by giving them what they want that he can please them and build up his business."

And he has proved its truth.

PLAN NEW THEATRES IN LOUISVILLE

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 19.

The Hill Top Amusement Company has filed articles of incorporation in the office of the County Clerk. The capital stock of the company is $15,000 and the debt limit $15,000. The incorporators are George H. Wolford, J. H. Botts, and F. D. Stoll. The company will operate a motion picture theatre in one of the residence districts of the eastern end of the city.

Amended articles of incorporation by which the capital stock of the Broadway Amusement Company is increased to $70,000 were filed here yesterday. The purpose of the increase in the capitalization of the company is, it is said, to provide for the erection of another house in addition to those already operated. No location for the new house was named.

The incorporators of the concern are Louis F. Steurle, D. H. Long, E. W. Klapheke and Joseph L. Steurle.

NEW CAMERA ON MARKET

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Aug 17.

The first product of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company, composed of W. H. Hevren, president, Carl Sternlov, general manager, John Brink, vice-president and Theodore M. Newman, secretary and treasurer, a motion picture camera for professionals and amateurs, has been placed on the market, and was immediately sold to Australian promoters who shipped it to the Island.

The camera has a mechanism different in almost every detail from those on the market now, and weighs but nine pounds for the amateur size and fifteen pounds for the professional, which will use 400-foot reels.

One of the features of this new machine which is attracting attention by local cameramen is the instantaneous focusing device.

BIG TURNOUT AT OZ PLAY

SIGNS IN JAPANESE

A NOVEL idea in lobby decoration was hit upon by George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, to advertise "The Wrath of the Gods." The Alhambra, which is Milwaukee's largest theatre, has a magnificent lobby, though a long and narrow one. It is impossible to handle the lobby display as in the average picture house on account of this fact. Eight-sheets, three-sheets, and even one-sheets are out of the question.

In place of the usual lithographs, Mr. Fischer placed frames on the walls containing artistically painted signs gotten up in Japanese style, containing the announcement of the production and the date that it would play the house. At a curio shop he obtained a quantity of Japanese wind chimes which he suspended from the ceiling of the lobby, and from which hung a small card bearing the name of the picture and the date.

He then further carried out the Japanese idea by having the artist put Japanese letters on the marble panels of the lobby. With this and other bits of Japanese decorations he carried out the idea until the lobby was transformed into a veritable land of the rising sun.

The entire decorations came to but little more than the paper used for lobby display would have cost, and the lobby was the talk of the town, many people going into the theatre just to get a glimpse of the decorations. It goes without saying that the picture was a big success, and much of it Mr. Fischer attributes to his lobby.

FOR RAINY NIGHTS

A. WITTMANN, manager of the Paris Airdome, Morganford road and Juanita street, St. Louis, has solved the rainy night problem in a pleasing and practical manner. In the event of rain stopping the performance the orchestra moves into a dance hall that adjoins the airdome, and those who desire, may dance until the storm is over, and everybody is given a rain check good for another performance at the Paris.

A SMALL TOWN "LIVE WIRE"

AN exclusive motion picture theatre in a $90,000 building, seating 1,036, where music is furnished by a regular orchestra, where the best modern ventilation system is used, where a force of ten employes is kept busy all during show hours, where thousands of people attend and where the most advanced pictures are shown—and you have a realization of the Elks Theatre of Rapid City, South Dakota, "The biggest and best motion picture theatre in the Dakotas," according to A. J. Rose, the manager.

Mr. Rose was recently in Omaha, the guest of exchange managers there. He is one of the lively exhibitors of the central West. "Nothing is too good for me in the way of pictures," he said to the exchange managers. "Give me your best service and your best pictures and I'll pay you for them."

And he gets all he asks for. In a letter he writes apologetically of the accompanying illustration:

THE ELKS THEATRE, RAPID CITY, SO. DAKOTA. A. J. ROSE, MANAGER

"This picture does not show up the building; just the entrance. That's me, on the right, and the others are all employees. And, say, don't forget to send me THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

Remember, Rapid City has a population of only 3,900. But, also remember, it is a true type of the progressive city of this section.

ADVERTISING FEATURES AT THE SODA FOUNTAIN

THE Scenic Theatre, Waterbury, Conn., which had its grand opening a few weeks ago, as told in a recent issue of THE NEWS, has a real live-wire manager in Ray Averill. Mr. Averill is sponsor for what bids fair to be the latest craze in the motion picture world. It is that of naming college ices after popular feature productions.

Mr. Averill says that he plans to visit all the large drug and confectionery stores about the city and have them concoct a "Trey o' Hearts Sundae." "The Trey o' Hearts" serial is being shown every Thursday at the Scenic. It is Mr. Averill's plan to have the feature silent drama advertised in this way. He proposes that the managers of the soda and soft drinks emporiums put posters on their windows and in their ice cream parlors reading as follows:

"Have your Trey o' Hearts Sundae here to-day and see the pictures at the Scenic Theatre every Thursday."

BLUE GRASS LIVE WIRES

A PRIZE of $2.50 in gold is being given away at the end of the first show each night by the Gem Theatre, Maysville, Ky.

"The coolest place in Glasgow" is the advertising slogan of the Lion Theatre, Louisville, Ky. "Lucille Love" and the "Adventures of Kathlyn" have been shown recently at this theatre.

Lee L. Goldberg, manager of the Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., is sending out "Special Telegrams" by messengers to hundreds of patrons of this motion picture theatre whenever there is an especially interesting film on the bill. For instance, when the feature, "A Million Bid," was on the program the "telegram" read, "A Million Bid. Meet me at the Mary Anderson," giving the hour of the performance and signing with one of the leading characters in the play. The effect was surprisingly effective,

BOX OFFICE CALLS

MEN going to the Orpheum Theatre in Canton, O., 205 Tuscarawas street East, find it easy to locate their [illegible]s if they are attending a matin[illegible] because of a system that has late[illegible] been installed by V. L. Schram, manager.

Women who come downtown in the afternoons to see the pictures and expect their husbands to call for them in the late afternoon leave their names at the box-office. The ticket seller gets a report from the usher on where any such woman has taken seat and has the information ready for the husband when he arrives.

PRIZES AS PULLERS

A very attractive business getting booklet issued by the Amaranth Theatre, Brooklyn, New York City, owned by Samuel H. Trigger, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of the State of New York, contains besides the special program for the following week a ten-dollar prize offer for the best article submitted on "The Commencement of Motion Pictures"; the misspelled words in the pages of the pamphlet, and a prize for the correct names of the photoplays from which the illustrations of the scenes reproduced are taken.

BASEBALL ON SLIDES

ANGELICH Brothers, who operate the Rainbow Theatre, Broadway and Market street, St. Louis, have installed a stock ticker in the lobby of their theatre, employ a slide writer, and are giving their patrons all of the up-to-the-minute sporting news and the baseball scores.

Another Feature Theatre to Open in Rochester

The Hippodrome Will Use Paramount Service—Might Raise Prices in Competition with the Gordon, Which Has Same Program

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 20.

WORK on the new East avenue theatre, which is to be called the Hippodrome, and which is to take the place of the present Hippodrome, at Main street east and East avenue, is being rushed rapidly, and it is figured the theatre will be ready to open its doors in the fall.

General Manager Fenyvessy recently closed a contract for the use of the Paramount service for the new theatre. He was compelled to take the service from September 1, though the theatre will not be ready to use it until several weeks later. In the meantime, however, the features will be sold to the Gordon Theatre, which has been using some Famous Players and Lasky features during the past year.

From the fact that the new Hippodrome has taken the Paramount service, it is plain that it is to be an active competitor of the Gordon, showing the same class of pictures, and, presumably, using the same scale of prices.

It would not be surprising if the prices announced by the new theatre are a bit higher than those of the Gordon, as it is understood that the Gordon is figuring on raising its scale a bit in the fall, in order to be in a position to buy some of the highest priced films in the market. At present fifteen cents is the highest price at the Gordon.

The Gordon has been doing a good business all summer long, and because of its regular use of the newspaper advertising columns, is given considerable space in the papers. They always give advance notices of the films, which are changed twice weekly, and also print reviews and criticisms of them.

Nashville Photoplay Theatres Popular

Vaudeville House Finds Success in Motion Pictures—Furnishes Six-Reel at Twenty Cents to Large Patronage

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 19.

THE Orpheum, formerly a vaudeville house under the management of George Hickman, has been transformed into a motion picture palace and is now under the guiding hand of William H. Wassman, proprietor of the Rex and Crystal theatres.

Manager Wassman has been furnishing high-class photodramas of five and six reels at the price of twenty cents.

Manager Wassman has stated that he intends operating the Orpheum as a picture theatre throughout the winter.

The Log Cabin Theatre, a popular motion picture house located at the corner of the Arcade and Fourth avenue, has recently been overhauled and is now operating under the name of the Victoria. Its success remains to be seen.

The Fifth Avenue, Nashville's largest motion picture house, has recently launched into a series of high class film dramas, with leading stars featured, and the change has already proved a marked success. Manager Tony Sudekum is filling the house every afternoon and evening at ten cents per head. His other houses, the Elite and Alhambra, are still being operated on the five-cent plan, with two and three reels a day.

Louisiana Press Association Sees Educationals

President of Conservation Commission Uses Natural History Films in Lecture Before Newspaper Men—Paper-Making Also Shown

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

New Orleans, Aug. 18.

HOW closely the newspaper and motion picture businesses are entwined was never more strikingly shown than at the meeting of the Louisiana Press Association in this city when "A Night with the Movies" was one of the chief features.

President M. L. Alexander, of the Louisiana Conservation Commission, talked for thirty minutes on the resources of the state, showing what his commission is doing to preserve the fish, game and bird life of the state, his talk being illustrated by films.

Dr. Oscar Dowling, president of the State Board of Health, and probably the best-known health crusader in the country, spoke on "Why Candor Failed," dealing with sanitation and illustrated with motion pictures, while other reels showing the operation of a modern newspaper plant and the manufacture of paper were exhibited.

Many of the editors who had regarded the film as purely a means of amusement were intcrested in the educational possibilities and the picture men of the state have gained many staunch friends.

The Way to Harmony

New York, Aug. 18, 1914.

Wm. A. Doque,
Secretary Utica Local Motion Picture Exhibitors Association.

Dear Sir:—Having always deplored the existence of two separate and distinct organizations of motion picture exhibitors—although at one time it was practically unavoidable—I rejoice with the rest of the exhibitors of the country, in the action taken in July last at Dayton, Ohio, which has cleared the road for a solid unification of all exhibitors of America.

I feel personally, that every exhibitor who was identified or allied with the International Motion Picture Association, is in duty and honor bound to abide by the action of the committee on unification which was elected at our convention in New York, with full power to act.

Whether any of us feel that the action of this committee at Dayton was not in full accord with our own individual sentiments and ideas, yet no other course is open to us, if we be really sincere in our oft repeated protestations favoring a single organization of exhibitors, but to accept the action of the committee as final, and govern ourselves accordingly.

From the very inception of the I. M. P. A. our contention was that of the M. P. E. L. of A. would elect a new president and abandon its censorship propaganda, we would come back to the fold. There is no denying this; and now that these ends have been accomplished, by the splendid action of the late president in refusing to be a candidate for re-election, there is nothing left for us to do but prove that we were sincere, and act according to the resolutions adopted by the joint committees at Dayton.

These resolutions provided distinctly, by word and implication, that we members of the I. M. P. A. were to affiliate ourselves with the league in our respective states and locals without the payment of any initiation fees.

Now is not the time for quibbling over words or terms or dignity. Now is the time for action.

In New York state and city our course is a simple one. It is to follow out in its fullest sense, the Dayton resolutions. In New York City we should apply for membership and join the existing local of the league; and in the state, our various locals can secure local charters from the existing state branch of the league. As the state convention will be held in the near future, we will be eligible to vote for officers, and if we be in the majority, will be able to make the state branch our own. So why quibble about "amalgamation," "surrender" and similar foolish terms, if we really mean to get together.

Although not myself a member of it, I wish to show my faith in the committee elected by the association, of which I had the honor of being national secretary, and have already become a member of New York Local No. 1 of the M. P. E. L. of America, in accordance with the Dayton resolution of the joint committees, and shall henceforth, as in the past, do all in my humble power to advance the interests of the exhibitors everywhere, and to promote the welfare of the one great exhibitors' organization, the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America.

Kindly bring this matter to the attention of your local at the earliest possible moment, so that we may all be united in New York state by the time of the forthcoming state convention.

Fraternally yours,
HAROLD W. ROSENTHAL,
639 Fox street.

Wolff Declares Himself For Harmony

THE COLONIAL THEATRE
197 Main Street East

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 10, 1914.
Editor, The Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—I trust you will give me a small space in your valuable journal, as it is my desire to extend the hand of friendship to all exhibitors throughout the state of New York. Peace is at hand, and let all rally to the colors, and support the mother organization, the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America.

Your article in a recent issue of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS is an error, and if it were not for the fact that you went to press so early, you would have been advised, that there would not be a meeting of the league in New York till the regular convention takes place in October. A meeting of this kind, at this time is unnecessary and uncalled for, and is absolutely contrary to the by-laws and constitution. It would not be legal as provided and arranged for at the last convention in Rochester, N. Y.

The Dayton convention has passed into history, has left the ear marks of a clean policy and a progressive organization. So first of all let us cast off the remembrances of the past, and get on the band wagon with colors flying to the tune of "Harmony at Last."

Amalgamation is the word now; let the hatchet be buried once and for all; organize solid every city and town in the state. New York state exhibitors who wish to join now may do so by communicating with me or the state secretary, Mr. W. C. Hubbard, Colonial Theatre, 197 Main street East, Rochester, N. Y., and New York City to Mr. Maurice L. Fleishman, 2226 Seventh avenue. Exhibitors of both organizations in New York should see Mr. Fleishman at once and enroll. Every consideration is being extended to suspended members; they may rejoin the league without any embarrassment whatsoever.

Up-state exhibitors are also invited and instructed to do the same, communicate with the league officers and receive their proper credentials. The opposition may join and affiliate for peace and harmony by making their application, and paying dues three months in advance. No attempt will be made to collect any money for arrears.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America has a new start in life. I trust that the petty jealousies and inside politics be eliminated once and forever; that the slogan will be "honest and upright intentions."

I am proud to say for Rochester that we have been solid to a man since we were organized; have stood by our convictions and pledges. We shall refuse to be influenced by party jurisdiction. We have been through the mill, and know something of the past and will be guided by that experience.

All is buried now, so let us forget. We can grow to big proportions in a short time. Therefore I pass the word to all state exhibitors, "Send in your application and let us make the league as great as the educational force that we represent; live like men and brothers, and unite for the good and welfare of our cause."

The exhibitors throughout this country will need the good influences of this organization very soon. We must have power and strength to fight for our rights, our honest convictions and adverse legislation. Welcome back home brothers, let us get busy and make the next New York state convention a real live issue.

Very truly yours,

A. N. WOLFF.

President Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New York state.

More Proof of the Pudding

The proof of the pudding is in the eating, whether it's really pudding or a trade journal. When a concern in renewing its subscription goes out of the way to volunteer praise of a publication, based on its intrinsic merits, it is pretty safe to assume that there must be good foundation for the statements.

That THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS is becoming recognized as the authoritative trade journal in the industry it covers is evidenced by numerous complimentary letters received in practically every mail. One of particular interest because the writer has found on testing the contents of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS and comparing it with others in the field, that its information is "correct in every detail," to quote his exact words, is the letter recently received from G. A. Edwards, president of the Edwards-Zetler Feature Film Company, 303-304-305 U. B. Building, Dayton, Ohio. The letter follows:

Editor, THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Dear Sir:—We always feel like giving credit where credit is due, and will state that we have made it a point among all our customers to find out what trade journals they take and which ones they like the best; and will state that in the last six months THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS has made a decided hit among the Ohio exhibitors.

Not only that. A bunch of our exhibitors have taken the liberty of sending us a copy of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS with marked pages, thinking possibly we would not have it on our desk. But we have been buying the same from the newsstands, and the information contained in it is correct in every detail.

Hoping that THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS will continue the increase in its circulation, and with the best wishes from the Edwards-Zetler Feature Film Company, we are,

Yours truly,

G. A. EDWARDS, President.

Exhibitor Defies Pennsylvania Censors

Silverman Puts On "The Drug Terror" at Harrisburg Theatre Despite Warning—Confident He Will Escape Fine—Authorities Made No Interference

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 20.

DEFYING the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, from whose office he said he had received a warning not to show the Lubin film, "The Drug Terror," on the screen, Isaac Silverman, owner of the Photoplay Theatre, 221 Market street, displayed three nights ago the picture despite the fact it has not received the state censors' mark of approval.

There was no inteference with the show. Mr. Silverman is president of the recently formed Central Pennsylvania branch of the Motion Picture Protective Association of Pennsylvania, which is on record as opposed to censorship among other things, but he told the representative of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS to-night that he had taken his own initiative.

"I am convinced that the film teaches a strong moral lesson," said the theatre owner. "Judge Umble, of Uniontown, Fayette county, and a large number of welfare workers who have seen it have pronounced it all right, and under the circumstances I am willing to risk the fifty dollar fine, for I don't believe any court will impose it."

According to Mr. Silverman "The Drug Terror" has been shown in Pennsylvania ever since last April, or several months before the censorship law became effective. The censors have heretofore refrained from requiring pictures to be examined that were put on before June 1, the date the law went into effect, and which are still being exhibited in the state. According to the owner of the Photoplay Theatre, however, he was informed to-day by a representative of the state censors that the picture had been ordered returned to Philadelphia for examination and he was warned not to display it in the theatre to-night as he had advertised he would do, but, as he expressed it, he "took a chance" that the film is a proper one.

Colonial Studio Complete in Equipment

New York Company, Now Producing Sir Gilbert Parker's "Seats of the Mighty," Ready to Stage Dramas Requiring Elaborate Settings

THE Colonial Studio, 226 West Thirty-fifth street, New York City, where "The Seats of the Mighty" by Sir Gilbert Parker, is now being produced for the screen, is one of the most complete motion picture plants in the metropolis.

E. J. Carpenter, who has a record of fifteen years success as a theatrical manager, is in charge of the studio.

The property room is located in the rear, on the ground floor, and is under the charge of George Fitch, an expert in his line. The wardrobe room, nearby, is under the supervision of Blanche Townsend, a woman of many years' experience.

Commodious dressing rooms for the actresses are on the next floor. Those for the men players are located on a balcony over the women's dressing rooms.

The main studio floor is thoroughly equipped for staging the most elaborate production contemplated by the Colonial company. The room is decorated with gorgeous draperies and genuine tapestries of great value. A square bank of Cooper-Hewitt lights furnishes the illumination.

The Colonial Studio maintains a department for the production of high-class posters, under the direction of Will Bradley, an art printer.

James D. Law is the president of the company.

Form Company to Make $10,000 Features

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 20.

THE Photo Play Library Corporation, organized for the purpose of producing five-reel special films, which will cost upwards of $10,000 each, has just perfected organization with Martin F. Amorous as president. The company is capitalized at $50,000.

This is Atlanta's first motion picture producing company. A temporary studio and offices have been leased.

Lester and Byron Park, who were until recently owners of a well-known Colorado picture-making company, have been selected respectively as vice-president and general manager and director of distributing agencies.

In adition to making its own pictures, this company will act as its own distributing agent, and for this purpose will establish branches in twenty of the principal Southern cities.

Directory of New Theatres

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The information contained in the "Directory of New Theatres" is gathered by the field representatives of "The Motion Picture News" and the facts and figures in each instance have been verified by them and are authentic. They may be relied upon by members of the trade.

COLONIAL, PASADENA. READY IN JANUARY

THE Pasadena Theatre Company expects soon to break ground for its new theatre building, to be located directly west of the La Casa Grande Hotel, East Colorado street, Pasadena, Cal., and to have the structure ready for occupancy late in January.

According to the plans and specifications prepared by Architect Reginald D. Johnson, the building will cost $80,000, exclusive of the furnishings and equipment, which are expected to bring the total cost almost to the $100,000 mark.

The new theatre, to be known as the Colonial, will have a seating capacity of about 1,500. The seats will be designed for comfort rather than with a view to crowding in the greatest possible number of people.

The structure will be absolutely fireproof. It will have a special heating and ventilating system of the most modern type, and the temperature will remain the same day and night throughout the year, both summer and winter. The stage, it is asserted, will be the largest in the city, and its equipment will be the best that money can buy. The directors say, in fact, that everything about the whole plant will be absolutely the best and most modern the market affords.

It is planned to make the music a big feature. A pipe organ to cost between $7,500 and $10,000, will be installed, and in addition to this there will be a six-piece orchestra made up of top-notch musicians.

The present board of directors of the Pasadena Theatre Company is made up of A. A. French, Ben. H. Leslie, Tod Ford, Jr., and Eric Kobbe.

NEW SALT LAKE THEATRE

SALT Lake is to have a motion picture theatre along the lines of the new Plaza in Denver and similar modern homes of advanced motion pictures in several of the big cities of the United States.

It will be called the Broadway Theatre and will open its doors to the public September 1. The Broadway will exhibit Paramount pictures and the daily illustrated motion news service of the Pathé people.

The new company to enter the amusement field is capitalized at $20,000 with Ralph Schayer, president and manager, and he and G. F. Eckstrom, M. H. Hanauer, D. J. Cavenaugh and H. Salinger, all of Salt Lake, directors.

The interior decorations of the Broadway will be along Moorish lines and a perfect ventilating system, heating and cooling plant will be installed. The opening bill will be "One of Our Girls," a four-reel photodrama by Bronson Howard, featuring in the title role Hazel Dawn.

SECOND FEATURE HOUSE FOR MONTANA

INTRODUCING the Regent Theatre, of Billings, Mont., the second all-feature motion picture house in Montana. Exit the Broadway Theatre, ten-cent motion picture house on North Broadway, Billings.

Announcement of the sale of the Broadway to E. C. O'Keefe, of the Luna Theatre, and B. D. Caldwell, another Billings business man, has just been made. The Broadway Theatre will be closed for extensive alterations and improvements, and when it is reopened, late this month, it will be under the name Regent, with Mr. O'Keefe as manager.

The price paid for the Broadway was not stated, but it is understood it brought a good figure. The transaction includes all furnishings.

The only other all-feature house in the state is the American, at Butte, F. T. Bailey's $150,000 house.

The Regent management expects to show such pictures as the Famous Players series, with the leading actors of the legitimate stage playing in the parts in which they made their greatest hits. These will include such plays as "Brewster's Millions," dramatizations of Jack London's "Sea Wolf," Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," and other great stage successes.

The Regent also will show the General Film Company's masterpieces, featuring such well-known photoplay stars as Francis X. Bushman, Alice Joyce, John Bunny and other favorites.

The front of the theatre is to be remodeled, Mr. O'Keefe said, and other improvements made which will make it one of the most attractive houses in the state.

1,100-SEAT HOUSE FOR POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Poughkeepsie, New York, is to have a modern motion picture theatre, to be located in the building formerly occupied by A. V. Haight & Company, at 10 and 12 Liberty street, which is to be completely remodeled. The proprietor is to be John H. Pye, who, after a careful study of the motion picture field, has decided to give up a life of retirement and enter the motion picture business here. He has filed plans with Building Inspector Cannon. Dubois Carpenter is the architect. The theatre will be opened in the fall.

The theatre will seat 1,100 people, most of whom will be accommodated on the first floor. There will be one balcony. The building will be made absolutely fireproof, and there will be exits to both Liberty and Mechanic streets. The entire three story building will be utilized for the theatre, all the floors and partitions being removed. An attractive front is being planned for the new theatre. Work will be continued steadily until the theatre is finished, which will be about the middle of September.

ANOTHER ST. LOUIS THEATRE

A MOTION picture theatre will be opened about September 1 by the Columbia Theatre Company at 419 North Sixth street, St. Louis. The building, which adjoins the Columbia Theatre, was damaged by fire two and a half years ago and is now undergoing reconstruction.

The new showhouse will be named the Pageant. It will have an ornamental front and all ornaments and decorations will carry out the idea of the Pageant and Masque.

Indian colors will be used both in exterior and interior decorations. Marble will be used largely in the front and vestibule, and just inside will be one of the finest rest rooms in the city for the use of women and children. A maid will be in attendance at all times.

The theatre will seat about 700 persons. The ventilation apparatus will include an air-washing machine for purifying and cooling the air.

The plans for reconstructing the building were made and the work is being supervised by William A. Cann & Co.

$40,000 ROOF GARDEN IN SAN ANTONIO

PLANS have been completed for a $40,000 roof garden motion picture show on the east side of Soledad street in the block between West Houston street and Main Plaza, San Antonio, Tex. It will be erected and operated by W. J. Lytle, Martin Wright and C. T. Fincham.

The theatre building will be of reinforced concrete tile and steel construction. Seats will be provided on the main floor for 2,000 persons. The roof, which will be used in summer, will have about the same seating capacity. The entrance to the theatre will be on Soledad street. Work has already started clearing off the site, and the promoters expect to open the playhouse on or before November 1.

The theatre will be erected on the property just behind the old courthouse building and the two buildings to the north, extending back to the river. This property is about 100 feet wide and 150 feet long. The property was leased for a period of fifteen years from Mrs. Albert Smith, August Pagel and Albert Kronkosky.

The same parties who are erecting this theatre recently leased the new Brady playhouse on the corner of St. Mary's and Houston streets.

Mr. Lytle at present operates two motion picture shows on Houston street and one on Alamo Plaza.

PLAN WILMINGTON THEATRE

DR. S. G. ELBERT will erect a motion picture theatre on the location of the houses at 810, 812 and probably 814 French street, Wilmington, Del. The new building will cost between $25,000 and $30,000. The building will be erected by Dr. Elbert. He will not be associated with any syndicate.

He has purchased 1,500 seats in New York City for the new building. Dr. Elbert asserted that motion pictures would be run in the new theatres as a certainty, and that probably vaudeville would be staged in the new house.

The houses on the site of the new theatre will be razed within the next few months. Plans for the building will be completed in a short time.

UTICA TO HAVE ANOTHER FILM HOUSE

A NEW motion picture theatre is to be erected in Utica, N. Y., at the northeast corner of Sunset avenue, Varick and Spring streets, by Frank Centoletta and Frank Pete, the latter being the former owner of the Dreamland Theatre on Varick street. The new show house will be erected as soon as plans are ready.

1,000 CAPACITY HOUSE

ROCHESTER, N. Y., is to have another motion picture house, and one of its proprietors will be the local postmaster, William A. Buckley.

The new theatre, for which an application has been filed with the building bureau, will be located on Murray street, and will cost about $12,000. It will have a seating capacity of 1,000; 700 on the ground floor, and 300 in the balcony.

Work is to begin at once on it.

Sales and Leases

The Manhattan Avenue Theatre at the southwest corner of Manhattan avenue and 109th street, New York City, built several months ago, has been leased for five years at a rental of $13,000 a year by the 109th Street Theatre Corporation. The property was bought last September from the estate of Jacob S. Bernheimer. The building cost $20,000 to build, according to the estimate filed with the Building Department by the architects last October. It has a seating capacity of 1,003.

Announcement is made that the Moore Amusement Company, of Tacoma, Wash., which has just filed articles of incorporation, will take over the new C Street Theatre erected by John S. Baker, adjoining the Tacoma Theatre, and that the new house will be opened in about six weeks. High-class moving pictures will be exhibited.

By a deal just consummated the moving picture theatre at San Benito, Tex., was purchased from G. W. Becker by Doctors Seiser and Vinsant of that city.

The Bijou, motion picture theatre, Paducah, Ky., has been sold by T. L. Coyle to J. A. Lindell, its former owner.

Frank Montgomery, president of the Montgomery Amusement Company, announces the sale of the theatre at Atlanta, Ga., bearing his name to Niels Esperson, of Houston, Texas. Mr. Esperson already has assumed control.

Ralph DeBruler, to whom the Montgomery is indebted for a wonderful success, will continue as manager. The theatre will be run along the same plan as heretofore under Mr. DeBruler's management.

The Auditorium on South Main street, Waterbury, Conn., has been leased for a period of one month. It is understood that the interested parties intend to show motion pictures there. Should they meet with success it is probable that the lease will be renewed for a much longer period.

Joseph A. Wasserman has leased the moving picture theatre at 897 E. 180th stret, the Bronx, and the airdome adjoining for five years to Samuel Levy at an aggregate rental of $12,000.

Daniel Rentschler will build a two-story moving picture theatre, 42 x 100, in the west side between Rose street and Pomeroy avenue, Kearny, N. J., at a cost of $20,000. The building has been leased to John J. Wilson.

Announcement is made of the sale by John O'Brien of his moving picture business at Ansonia, Conn., to W. L. Blaser and H. I. Bennett, of Norwalk. The purchasers recently secured a lease of the opera house, but Mr. O'Brien's lease had over a year to run.

The Airdome, New Brunswick, N. J., has been sold to A. J. Conover, who owns the land, for $135.

Altogether the Airdome, its scenery, electrical fixtures, seats, etc., costing originally from $3,000 to $4,500, according to various estimates, went for $237.

Most of the scenery and fixtures were purchased by the Star Theatre, of Albany street.

Fitzer Brothers, of the Happy Hour Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., announce that they have secured the lease of three plots of ground on the main street in Syracuse and that they are going to arrange for the immediate erection of a ground floor ballroom. All of the modern dances will be taught and a moving picture machine will be installed to show in pictures just how the Castles and other dancers do it correctly. It is expected that teaching dancing by the aid of the motion picture will in itself prove a drawing card.

Alterations and Improvements

The Pastime Theatre, Maysville, Ky., is to be enlarged and undergo other improvements.

A. Raymond Raff is estimating on plans for interior alterations to the German Theatre building at Seventh street and Girard avenue, Philadelphia. C. P. Berger is the architect.

Rochester, N. Y., boasts another first-class picture theatre, with seating capacity of 1,500, as a result of alterations and additions made by I. M. Salyerds, manager and owner of the Lyndhurst Theatre, at Lyndhurst and North streets, that city. Mr. Salyerds closed his theatre on June 15th, and immediately put a large force of men to work, constructing a balcony, putting in a new ventilating system, and redecorating.

The result is that the seating capacity has been increased from 800 to 1,500, and Mr. Salyerds has one of the best plants in the city.

Alterations to cost $1,000 will be made by Samuel Wheeler to his motion-picture theatre, southeast corner Fifty-second and Sansom streets, Philadelphia.

A permit for remodeling the Empire Theatre building at Shelby and Market streets, Louisville, at a cost of about $1,500, has been taken out.

A Slip of a Girl, With No Previous Experience, Succeeds Where All Men Managers Had Failed—Allows Women to Give Teas and Receptions in the Afternoons and Puts on Pictures at Night

THIS is the story of a little hole-in-the-wall motion picture house in a small town that was a losing proposition for a long time.

It was a financial graveyard, everybody said. More than one man had lost money in it and had gladly let go of it.

But a slip of a girl worked a miracle. She put it on its knees first so that it could crawl, and then she taught it to stand alone, and now it is a regular walking, money-making proposition in the hands of a man who is carrying out the girl's policy. And there's a romance to season the tale.

In the fall of 1908, Lorene Heury, twenty-four, pretty, enthusiastic, possessed of a solid business-common-sense head and comprehending, observing eyes, stood behind a millinery counter, talking with the women who came to buy hats. Early in her life she had wanted to be a prima donna. That dream was shattered, but it left her with a taste for the theatre.

Among the things that her women customers talked about was the motion picture theatre in their town—the pictures they saw. But they told her that they did not like to go. They disliked the man who ran the place and were of the opinion that he was not friendly enough. They put an emphasis on the adjective.

The girl caught the emphasis. And she asked herself if the theatre would pay if somebody who was friendly ran it.

THE town was Chandler, Ind. The population, including the suburbanites who work in Evansville, is 1,800. There isn't any place to go outside of the picture house.

The girl decided that it would pay at least better than the clerkship in the millinery store at $7 per week. She asked several of her elderly friends and they shook their heads gravely.

"Don't touch it with a telephone pole," one fatherly individual said.

But the girl was inclined to trust her own sense of appraisement.

She boarded a traction car and visited Evansville, Ind., where there is a theatorium for every 500 residents, picture houses and saloons occupying all the corners, with the banks jammed up against them.

SHE talked with exhibitor after exhibitor. They all said substantially the same thing. They told her that the small town inhabitant was stingy and would not patronize programs regularly.

Still they did not convince the girl. She had been born with a stubborn will and self-confidence enough for three people.

She went back to Chandler. She saw the exhibitor of the little theatre. He told her right out that she could have the theatre and he would take her note, but he wouldn't be liable for the debts. She assured him that she would look out for the debts. She signed the note after she had brought down the price to one-half of what he originally asked. She got a bargain, providing, of course, that she could make it draw people who would pay ten cents admission. She had made up her mind that she would not reduce the price.

The first thing she thought about was house policy. There had been a policy at the millinery store not to give credit. That was all the practical lesson she had ever had in matters of policy. But she had intuition.

SHE knew that she wanted to be friendly. Her women friends had given her the tip that the other management was not so.

About this time she read of the social center efforts being undertaken in Wisconsin. It gave her an idea. She decided to make her theatre a social center for the neighborhood.

Her policy was then defined. There would be only night shows—the house being given over in the afternoon to women's clubs, children's parties, and the like. She included every sphere of social activity.

Then she wrote the presidents of all the clubs that she had taken over the theatre, and that it would be improved, made attractive, and then turned over to them each afternoon.

She concluded that a name would be important. She called it the Little Queen, and when she had effected the renovation, it was true to the name. It had an inviting appearance outside and a "linger-longer" atmosphere inside.

She didn't stop there. She gave the editor of the weekly paper an advertisement and made such eyes at him that he gave her first page position, a whole column and a half.

She found her publicity caused people to inquire.

The theatre opened under the auspices of all the women's organizations. She had invited them, reminding them that this was a woman's enterprise.

THE first night went over big. She explained her purposes from the footlights. She said she wanted to put home life into her little theatre and make it a part of their everyday affairs.

After a month the crowds continued good, but she had another idea. She advertised again and chatted with the editor until he wrote a news article that hereafter it would not be fashionable to have a party unless all guests wound up the evening by going to the Little Queen.

That idea caught on. She reserved sections of the house for the special guests and saw that all their names got into the society column of the weekly, which was a premium that did not cost anything.

The whole town went to plugging for the new exhibitor. It soon became necessary to enlarge, and she moved to a new building specially built for the Little Queen.

But a meddlesome film man came along after she was established and saw that the Little Queen was run by a regular "little queen" and wondered why somebody else hadn't discovered the fact. He took her to Evansville. But the theatre she built still stands a monument to her judgment, energy and business sense.

SEGALL SELLS QUAKER CITY THEATRE

The Baltimore Theatre, 5026 Baltimore avenue, Philadelphia, was sold recently by Charles Segall to John W. Bright for an undisclosed consideration, subject to a mortgage of $34,500. Rumor has it that Bright paid nearly $40,000 for the property.

The Baltimore is one of the newest theatres in West Philadelphia, and seats about 450. It is well equipped and one good feature is the large and well-ventilated operating booth. The projection equipment consists of two Power 6A machines, Compensarc and Radium Gold Fibre screen. The pictures are well projected. The house uses licensed service with occasional good features.

BEN ABRAMS OPENS ATLANTA OFFICE

Special to The Motion Picture News

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 20.

Ben Abram, representing the Photodrama and I. S. P. Film Companies, has opened offices at 409 Rhodes Building.

He is one of the oldest men, in point of service, in the motion picture game and is a welcome addition to the colony.

REMODELLED LYRIC OPENS

One of the most auspicious theatre openings that has ever occurred in New York City took place on Tuesday evening, August 18, when Morris Needle opened the doors of his renovated house, the Lyric, situated at Seventh avenue and Twenty-third street, New York City. The Lyric, which was formerly the Auditorium, has been remodeled at a cost of $7,500 and has a seating capacity of 600.

Later in the evening a dinner was held at Cavanaugh's arranged by genial Sam Trigger and Mr. Needle. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ince and Mr. and Mrs. Morrey, of the Vitagraph Company and William Wright, of the Kalem Company attended this function as well as the other.

Both Mr. Trigger and Mr. Spedon complimented Mr. Needle on his managerial policy which is to furnish four reels for ten cents unles it is absolutely necessary to run more.

Others present at the gathering were R. L. MacNabb, former vice-president of the association and George Wiley, former secretary. Grant Anson, treasurer of the association and W. E. Rogers, councilor, were present. All present agreed that the opening was a great success and complimented Mr. Trigger and Mr. Needle on the management.

FAMOUS STOCK THEATRE YIELDS TO FILMS

E. F. Albee announces that the stock policy of the Crescent Theatre, Brooklyn, has been given up and that the theatre is being remodeled for motion pictures, singing and orchestral entertainment. The stage will be converted into a conservatory with flower palms and fountains, while a $20,000 Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra will occupy the musicians' pit. When it opens on August 31, the Crescent will be to Brooklyn what the Strand Theatre is to Broadway.

The Crescent Players were for years the foremost stock organization in the country and prospered exceedingly. Of late, however, it has become impossible to secure enough releases of dramatic successes to provide new material.

BRISK OPENING FOR KENTUCKY HOUSE

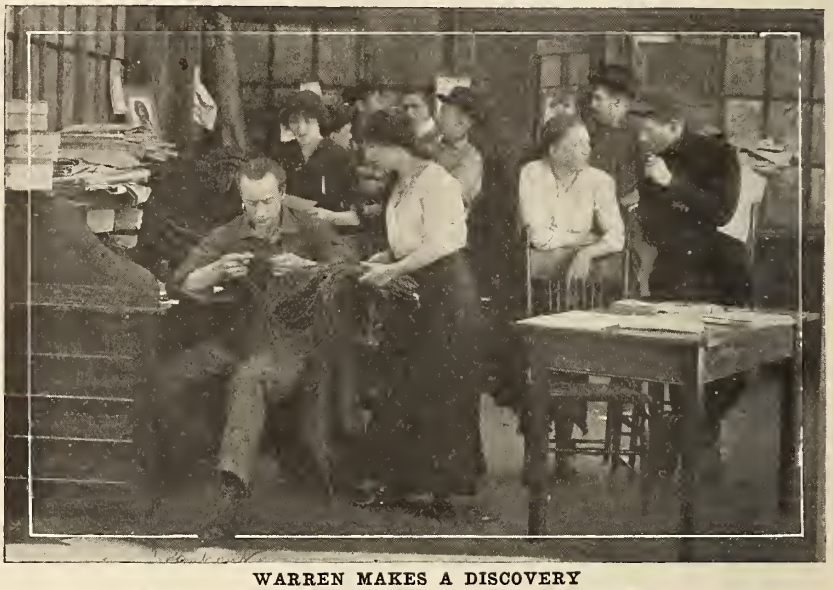
Louisville, Ky., Aug. 19.

The Kentucky Theatre is the latest motion picture house to open at Dawson Springs, Ky. The manager, George W. Jacob, states that the attendance at the initial show was 500, although the seating capacity of the theatre is only 270.

Matinees will be given daily from 3 to 5 p. m,, with a continuous evening performance from 7 to 10:30 p. m. Licensed films exclusively.

"Lost Paradise" First Paramount Release



A Famous Players Success Depicting Life To-Day, Featuring H. B. Warner, Will Be Ready for the Trade August 31

THE first release of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, scheduled August 31, is a Famous Players production, H. B. Warner in a drama of capital and labor, "The Lost Paradise," by Ludwig Fulda and H. C. DeMille, collaborator in the Belasco-DeMille successes.

The subject marks Mr. Warner's first appearance in motion pictures. He is well known for his success in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" on the legitimate stage.

The production was exhibited at the Strand Theatre during the week of the June exposition.

"The Lost Paradise" portrays with vivid realism the gigantic struggle between the two master forces of modern industry. H. B. Warner assumes the role of the man who strives to reconcile the contending elements, and who is willing to sacrifice name and fame for the woman he loves. The production ought to make a powerful Labor Day feature.

Circus Local Color for Lasky Picture

Company Has Arranged with Barnum and Bailey Show for Filming "The Ring Master at Winter Headquarters

GENERAL MANAGER SAMUEL GOLDFISH, of the Lasky Feature Play Company, has arranged with the owners of the largest circuses in America to "borrow" the equipment of one of their organizations for the production of "The Rose in the Ring," George Barr McCutcheon's book, which, under the title of "The Ring Master" is being screened by the Lasky company with the star, Theodore Roberts, in the title role.

"The Ring Master" is a story of circus life, with the leading characters a frail young girl and a powerful 'ring master.' Mr. Roberts is fully equipped, histrionically, for the difficult role.

Either Bridgeport, Conn., headquarters of the Barnum and Bailey show, or Baraboo, Wisconsin, winter quarters of the Ringling Brothers, will be the site of the locale.

By correspondence Mr. Goldfish hopes to prevail upon the circus people to have enough of their performers remain at winter quarters for a few weeks so that they can be used in the picture. Two reels of "The Ring Master" will be made with the circus as atmosphere and the remainder at the Lasky studios.

Theodore Roberts, a warm friend of Otto Floto, of Denver, expects to leave Hollywood, join a western circus at Vallejo, Cal., and travel several weeks with the tented entertainers to gather local color. Oscar Apfel will have charge of the directing. A. Gondolfi will be the cameraman.

WORLD FILM BUYS "GERMANIA"

Leading Players Film Corporation have sold the United States rights for the Saveia film "Germania" to the World Film Corporation.

How Exhibitors Advertise

"AD" MATERIAL IS WHERE YOU FIND IT

IF ever there should be a roster of persistent picture personalities established, A. Wittmann will occupy a prominent place on the list. When the Paris Amusement Company, of which he is the head, was planning the Paris Airdome, on Morganford Road and Juniata street, St. Louis, it was found that a large tree on the ground would be directly in front of the box-office. Most managers would have had the tree cut down, but not Wittmann. Instead he spent two hundred dollars on the tree, had it trimmed and wired for electric lights, and now the "Paris Christmas Tree," as the people in the neighborhood call it, stands at the entrance of the Airdome a thing of beauty, and at night its towering branches shimmering with hundreds of red, green and blue lights, acts as a beacon to the people for blocks around, telling them where they can spend a pleasant and profitable evening.

Mr. Wittmann has always been a persistent and original advertiser. He seems blessed with that happy faculty of turning every circumstance into advertising material; even the disagreeable things are utilized.

Once when he was managing a house in the early days when audiences were not as well behaved as they are now, he found it necessary to admonish certain patrons about their expectorating habits.

This is the slide he used: "If you are used to spitting on the floor at home, spit on the floor here, we want you to feel at home." This announcement, with its keen sarcasm, caused a laugh, offended no one, and accomplished its purpose.

Another clever idea of Mr. Wittmann's is to print all announcement slides in both German and English. There are a great many Germans in the neighborhood of his theatre, and while most of them can read English, it pleases them to see the language of the Fatherland on the screen.

DECORATIVE "ADVERTISING"

Until recently, the Allendale Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., has had a large and unsightly lot on the east side of the building. Now Manager Kaliska has given the use of this lot to J. H. Rebstock, one of Buffalo's largest florists, to use as a plot to grow his landscape plants. The plants will add greatly to the beauty of the Allendale and its surroundings.

MAKING HIS LOBBY A MAGNET

JAMES F. JACKSON, manager of the Savoy Theatre, Atlanta, is one of those live exhibitors who's always on the job in hours and out, too.

LOBBY OF THE SAVOY, ATLANTA, GA.
James F. Jackson, Manager.

The accompanying picture weekly shows a startling effect gained by Mr. Jackson in the decoration of his lobby, which offers an inviting contrast to those who pass on the hot pavement. Green moss covers the floors in every nook and corner, while hanging gray moss, birch bark and branches give the lobby the air of a real and inviting woodland retreat.

To add to the realism of the elaborate scene, tiny fireflies flash from the moss and branches at night. The effect is all the manager expected.

"RIGHT" ADVERTISING AND ITS VALUE

THE value of the right kind of advertising to a motion picture exhibitor was never better demonstrated than in the case of the Gordon Theatre of Rochester, N. Y. The men who are back of this theatre are shrewd showmen and before the place was built they realized the necessity of advertising.

They planned to make it a "feature" house and knew that in order to draw the crowds the features would have to be properly exploited. In carrying out this idea they engaged a local newspaper man to give part of his time as press agent, paying him a modest salary for his services.

The Gordon books two big features a week, changing Monday and Thursday, the whole program consisting of about eight reels. These features are advertised in exactly the same manner that a dramatic production is handled. Although windows and the billboards are used occasionally for display, the newspapers are chiefly depended upon to keep the public informed of the Gordon's attractions.

The press agent, being an experienced man, knows how to write clever little stories of the films and the players, which the papers are glad to print and which the people read with avidity. Plenty of cuts are used and bright, snappy, newsy stories are built around these cuts, arousing in the minds of the people who read them a desire to see the films.

The Gordon's advertising bills run from $50 to $100 weekly and once in a while where big billboard space is used, go above the latter figure.

It has been found, however, that the newspapers are the best result "getters" and they are now being used almost exclusively. The tremendous value of advertising was shown again only last week, when the Gordon showed Louis Tracy's story, "One Wonderful Night." This film was exploited by the press agent in exactly the same manner that he would have handled a regular dramatic production and the result was that the Gordon Theatre was jammed for three days, while the other houses were starving. The amount spent in boosting this film was ridiculously small in comparison with the results.

Advertising was instrumental in bringing to the Gordon 9,044 paid admissions in one day this spring, when Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country" was the feature. Mary Pickford is a great actress and a wonderful drawing card, but unless everybody knows that she is coming the exhibitor will not cash in as he should.

That's the Gordon's theory and that's the way it handles features.

"Tell the people what you have got and tell them in a manner that will make them want to see it" is their creed and it has been successful.

The Gordon considers a press agent one of its best investments. Besides knowing the game more thoroughly than a man with less experience, he relieves the manager of all the annoying detail which goes with the promulgation of publicity.

A PIONEER ADVERTISER

LEE L. GOLDBERG, manager of the National Theatre, Louisville, Ky., is probably the only pioneer theatre manager in that city who still is in the game.

"My connection with the motion picture enterprise began about ten years ago, when the industry was in its infancy, not only in Louisville but in the whole country," said Mr. Goldberg, who was first connected with the Hopkins Theatre, which was a reconstruction of old Music Hall, in its day a famous playhouse.

"Ten years ago vaudeville also was new in Louisville, and pictures were put on to wind up the bill. The pictures, as a rule, carried a train robbery plot with all the lurid trimmings which caught the fancy, not only of the gallery gods, but staid men and women also. At that time," he says, "there were only two motion picture theatres in the city, each of which gave only one reel of pictures.

"In 1908 O. T. Crawford, of St. Louis, leased the Hopkins and the theatre became an exclusive motion picture house. The Hopkins at that time was advertised as the largest motion picture theatre in the world, which claim then undoubtedly was justified. Anyway, this made good advertising, and with a change of program twice, and sometimes three times a week, the pictures created a big sensation.

"Also," says Mr. Goldberg, "it was through my efforts that the Hopkins became the first user of newspaper space in exploiting pictures in this city."

Universal Actor Battles With Shark in Pacific

J. Warren Kerrigan Almost Loses His Life While Swimming in California Surf—Wrist Watch Saves Him from Fish's Jaws

Los Angeles, Aug. 17.

WHILE acting before the camera in the breakers on the coast of Southern California at a point midway between San Pedro and Redondo, J. Warren Kerrigan, featured by the Universal in Victor dramas, was attacked by a man-eating shark and suffered severe lacerations on his left leg and right shoulder.

A small wrist watch is said to have saved his life. When the shark first attacked him, it tore a seven-inch gash below the knee, in his left leg. Mr. Kerrigan was drawn under the water for an instant and the teeth of the big fish tore into his shoulder.

He grappled with his enemy, but the big fish was too slippery for him. At this instant, however, the watch caught and clung fast to the fish's head. Mr. Kerrigan thinks that the stem of the time-piece caught in the shark's eye, as, had it caught in its mouth, he would probably have lost his hand.

Its attack checked for an instant, Mr. Kerrigan fought his way to the surface and swam shoreward. He was hurried to an emergency hospital at San Pedro, and when it was ascertained that none but flesh wounds had been inflicted, he was removed to a Los Angeles hospital, where he was cared for by Dr. Lloyd Mace, the Universal physician. The actor is now again with his company.

The accident took place during the filming of the drama, "There Is a Destiny," a romance of fisherfolk.

Screen Acting Helps Opera Singers

Fernando Michelena, Father of California Corporation Star, Declares Motion Pictures a Great Histrionic School

"ACTIONS speak louder than words," said Fernando Michelena, recently in discussing the advantages that accrue to an opera singer who spends some time in studying and playing for motion pictures.

His daughter, Beatriz Michelena, one of the prominent sopranos on the American stage, is at present the star of the California Motion Picture Corporation's productions. She has assumed the leading roles in "Salomy Jane," "Mignon," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and several other film presentations now under way at the studio near San Rafael.

Fernando Michelena will easily be recalled by the opera-loving public of America as one of the greatest tenors that ever sang "Faust," and as leading tenor for Emma Abbott.

"I entirely approve of my daughter's venture into the motion picture art, for it means the development of precisely those faculties for acting that are usually ignored by opera singers —I mean the histrionic faculties."

Mr. Michelena continued:

"No word is uttered, yet the artist must make her meaning plain. She must demonstrate the truth of the adage, as I have said that actions speak louder than words.

"How often does one hear an aria sung with the pantomimic expression that should match the fervor of the words? Very seldom. That is what the motion picture teaches. No aid of melody, nor even of prosaic speech is lent to the artist. She must so enact the scene that the thought is conveyed, vividly and distinctly through the medium of the only universal language—pantomime."

New Pathe Director Produces First Play

George Fitzmaurice Brings Out "The Brahmin Diamond"—Material Obtained at First Hand from Several Years' Residence in India

GEORGE FITZMAURICE, of Pathe, who this spring stepped from the ranks of scenario editors to become a director, announces the completion of his first picture, "The Brahmin Diamond."

Mr. Fitzmaurice spent nine years in India and he has drawn upon his knowledge of the unchanging East in this picture for the scenario. The story gives the adventures of a sacred diamond stolen from a Hindoo idol, the strenuous efforts of the Hindoo priests to recover it, its various changes in ownership, and the way in which it causes separation between a charming girl and her fiance.

The cast is excellent, comprising well-known players from the "legit." Among them are William Rosell, who played the lead this past season in the New York success, "Marrying Money"; Edna Mayo, of "Help Wanted"; Ernest Truax, who plays the lead in "The Dummy"; Paton Gibbs, of "Madam X," and Helen Hilton, of the original New York production of "Fine Feathers," and other theatrical successes.

Editor's Note.—This department is prepared to answer all questions from exhibitors relating to the use of music in connection with photoplays, and to suggest suitable music for current pictures. Correspondence will be welcomed

HOW OPERATOR AND PIANIST CAN CO-OPERATE

PICTURE houses of to-day, while greatly improved, enlarged and have better films, projection and music, still have "trouble on the screen."

The operator for a moment has turned away from looking at the picture to fix a carbon, and is adjusting his motor or taking a drink of water —in fact, is doing something that takes his attention from the screen. Now comes a dark patch on the screen, a jump and picture "out of frame." This lapse may last from a fraction of a minute to 2 or 3 minutes or until the operator has seen the fault and remedied it.

Sometimes it is the pianist who pounds on the upper notes on the piano to attract the operator's attention, or the drummer gives a few loud taps on the drum, but more often it is the audience that stamps its feet. It seems to me that there is no excuse for this sort of thing, and the best remedy is to have a buzzer in the booth connected to a button conveniently located at the piano.

A few theatres have this and its working is so satisfactory that the wonder is that all theatres do not see the advantage and install one. The operator cannot be watching the picture all the time, but the pianist or player of the "one man orchestra" in playing for the pictures at once notices if anything goes wrong on the screen and can signal immediately.

A set of signals could be arranged, viz.: two short rings, frame up or fix light; a long and short ring for faster, or short and long for slower, etc.

Another case where the buzzer comes in handy: The operator in most cases does not "follow the picture" or action of the film. He has all he can do to keep his light right and project the best picture possible. If the action or plot of the picture could be helped by turning a little faster or slower, in the pianist's opinin, he need just signal the operator.

Again, sometimes there is a white background and a very perceptible "flicker" which a little faster turning by the operator would correct. This flicker might pass unnoticed by those in the rear of the house, but to the pianist and the audience near the screen it "gets on the eyes." The operator knowing that the picture is being watched can feel easy and center his attention on his machine glancing through his port hole now and then, and he knows if he misses anything a signal will call his attention.

MANY CHANGES IN BUFFALO ORCHESTRAS

THE Strand orchestra, Buffalo, N. Y., will be changed almost completely this fall. George A. Bouchard, former director of the Strand, goes to Shea's Hippodrome as organist. Dave Edel, drummer, goes to Colorado. Arthur Fuessi leaves also. Ivan Shapiro, formerly first violinist at the Strand, will return as second violin and Alfred Fahlbusch, one of the finest violinists in the state, will take the first stand at the Strand.

Miss Ruby Belle Nason has been engaged as organist and Victor D'Ana, a talented local cellist, will take the cello stand. The remainder of the orchestra will keep their places. This orchestra will without doubt be the best in the city. Many local musicians will be surprised to hear that Mr. Fahlbusch has entered the Strand orchestra, for Buffalo will certainly miss him. He was concert master of the Buffalo Municipal Orchestra and whenever large concerts were given by the local singing societies he always played first violin.

Mr. Fahlbusch is one of the local men to whom leaders look when they have "big" jobs. Louis Weiser, the relief pianist at the Strand, also goes to Shea's Hippodrome. Manager Edel has certainly had his hands full with the music proposition during the past week.

SEATTLE THEATRE HAS $11,000 ORGAN

THE management of the Alaska Theatre, the new Seattle photoplay house that opened in July, were disappointed at that time by some delay in the shipping of the organ they had ordered.

The organ arrived in due time and was dedicated Monday, August 3, with an organ recital. The instrument has caused a great increase in attendance. The organ cost about $11,000 and the theatre $125,000.

ORGAN ON BILLBOARDS

PROPRIETOR Samuel Goldberg, of the Princess Theatre, 1317-19 Douglas street, Omaha, Neb., has installed the only unit orchestra, or photoplayer organ, here, at a cost of $10,000.

The nearest points where others are in use are Denver and Chicago. His theatre is also the only one using a mirror screen. Amy Ponslowe has been engaged to play the organ. Billboards all over Omaha and South Omaha have been covered with big-letter advertisements of the organ and they attract huge crowds.

NEW KIND OF MUSIC FOR A PHOTOPLAY HOUSE

THE CLEMMER, Seattle, has added several novelties lately, all tending toward "homieness." Elegant palms, costing about $50 each, were placed in the main foyer, and several canaries were put in the ladies' waiting rooms. These sweet singers almost split their little throats when they hear the strains of music from the organ.

As they are remote from the audience, they are only to be heard in the ladies' rooms. The effect is excellent and has caused a lot of comment that has been good advertising for the theatre.

THE ALLENDALE'S CRACK ORCHESTRA

MANAGER William G. Kaliska, of the Allendale Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., now has one of the finest orchestras in the city. He has six men, all prominent local musicians. His drummer is Mr. Ferdinand Asmus, formerly xylophone soloist with the Buffalo Park Band and the 74th Regiment Orchestra. Mr. Asmus renders solos on the xylophone every evening, which are being well received.

NEW SEATTLE THEATRE OPENS LABOR DAY

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 17.

The Liberty, which opens here Sept. 7, will cost when completed $125,000 and will be one of the finest in the Northwest. The theatre will seat 2,400 on two floors, with neither a stairway nor a post in the house. There are no boxes, but a series of loges at the front of the balcony. A gigantic statue of Liberty holding aloft a torch containing 1,200 electric lights is placed directly over the main entrance.

The lamp house or projecting booth will be in the rear of the first floor, allowing an almost right-angle projection. A Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra will be installed at a cost of $24,700. This has arrived and will be ready for use at the opening.

All of the latest methods of lighting, ventilating, and seating have been installed. The theatre is owned and will be managed by Jensen and VonHerberg, the present owners of the Alhambra.

CAMERA MEN AFTER GRAND CANON VIEWS

Minneapolis, Aug. 18.

Twenty thousand feet of film will be used by Charles Russell and Bert Loper, two Colorado men, in giving the world a close view of the wonders of the Grand Canon of the Colorado River. They are now fitting out their expedition at Grand Junction, Col., and Green River, Utah.

The present trip which the men are planning is the second attempt to get the canon into the films, Russell having made a previous trip in 1907, escaping with his life but loosing his pictures.

Government employees at work on a survey of the Colorado and Grand River will help the men over the rapids, and then after they reach the canon proper they will have to shift for themselves Each man will use a steel bottom boat made by a firm in Salem, Ohio.

COMMERCIAL WORKS DOUBLE SHIFTS

The laboratory of the Commercial Motion Pictures Co., Inc., at Grantwood, N. J., is now working on double shifts of eight hours each in order to catch up with the large amount of orders on hand.

Edward M. Roskam, the president of the company, is now dividing his time between the studio and the executive offices of the company in the city.

Mr. Roskam has installed in the laboratory many improvements, the result of ideas gained by him on his recent trip to England and the continent.

Giant Redwood Tree Felled for Film

Sixteen Men Work Two Days to Cut Forest Leviathan—Universal Actors Ride Mile a Minute Down Flume

Special to The Motion Picture News

AFTER spending two weeks roughing it in the government forest reserve near Hume, where the lumber camp of George Hume, of Fresno is located, and making exteriors for two two-reel pictures that will portray the wonders of California, the members of the Henry McRea Universal 101 Bison Company are home.

HENRY McRAE'S COMPANY IN FRONT OF THE LARGEST TREE IN THE WORLD ON THE GOVERNMENT RESERVE NEAR HUME, CALIFORNIA

This is the first motion picture company to penetrate this section of California, so far as is known, but all feel amply repaid for their hardship by the wonders they saw and the pictures secured. After much persuasion the owner of the Hume lumber industry granted them a permit to enter the territory, and later finding the company offered amusement that made the men more contented, gave the picture makers every assistance possible.

For the film, "The Law of the Lumber Jack," the felling of a large redwood tree was wanted, and Mr. Hume ordered one twenty-three feet in diameter cut. It required sixteen men more than two days to fell the tree, valued on the stump at $4,600. This tree, it is estimated was 1,500 years old and more than 300 feet high. In order to make the picture it was necessary to cut away a dozen or more other smaller trees. Excellent views of the cutting, dynamiting, and falling of the tree, together with views before and after were made.

One of the sensations of the picture will be the ride of the actors down the flume, which extends from Hume to Trimmer, and is sixty-five miles in length. The first six miles of this falls about 1,500 feet, and consequently causes the boat or clamp of lumber to travel at a rate of a mile a minute. Four members of the company rode two of these clamps, while Director McRea and Cameraman Al Siegler followed in a flume boat, and directed the acting and ground the film through the camera. The ride was over deep yawning canyons, along steep cliffs, and almost all of the way on wooden and steel trestles. There was nothing for the actors and actresses to hold to, and in rounding curves they were frequently in danger of being thrown off. The six-mile ride was made in six minutes.

During the stay in the lumber camp Marie Walcamp, leading woman of the company, celebrated her twentieth birthday.

Exhibitors Report Excellent Summer Business—J. Frank Hatch Buys 70-Acre Place for the Manufacture of Equipment—East End Cameraphone Theatre, Pittsburgh, Closed for Renovation—Al W. Cross Enters Feature Business for Himself

Special to The Motion Picture News

J. FRANK HATCH, film man and carnival expert, has bought a place of 70 acres at Callery, Butler county, Pa., where he intends to place his workshop, and where motion picture equipment will be turned out and repaired for his many theatres throughout the country. It is also said that one of the film companies will use it as the scene in many of its plays dealing with the working classes.

The East End Cameraphone Theatre is to close shortly to complete a remodeling scheme. The theatre will be closed but a few days while an extra force of workmen are being gathered, so as to rush the work through to completion in the smallest possible time.

When the theatre opens it will be one of the cleanest in the city of Pittsburgh, and will represent all that is entitled to be called the latest thing in motion picture theatres or in equipment, as some of the latest labor-saving machines have been added to the long list of equipment that is needed by the house.

The Feature Film and Calcium Light Company has taken the agency for another rectifier which transforms alternating into direct current. It is said to be more compact and simple than any other on the market. The rectifier not only saves from 25 to 30 per cent of the current but produces a clear, steady light, soft and easy on the eyes.

All other devices that have been put on the market for the changing of the current lose a great amount of the current and are in most instances cumbersome affairs, it is said.

New Theatre for Springdale, Pa.

John Aivolotis will open a new and up-to-date motion picture theatre at Springdale, Pa. It is a modern house in every way, with a seating capacity of 300, and is most handsome in appearance. Ludwig Hommel & Company furnished the equipment, including two Power 6-A machines, booth screen, chairs and other equipment.

George B. Beinlein, of the Feature Film and Calcium Light Company, will be married September 8 to Miss Rose Feld, a well known and most charming young lady of East End Pittsburgh.

The ceremony will be performed in St. Michael's Church, South Side. Mr. Beinlein has already purchased a fine new residence in Carrick. The honeymoon will be spent in the East and the couple will return to Pittsburgh by way of Niagara Falls.

Al W. Cross, formerly traveling man for the George Kleine office in Pittsburgh, has started in the feature business for himself at Room 517 Lyceum Building, under the name of the Hudson Feature Film Company.

He is booking the following features: "The Lineup at Police Headquarters," "Fire and Sword," "Fight for the Black Diamond," "Lure of Gold," "Buffalo Bill," "Hooligan," "Mutt and Jeff," "Bringing up Father" and a number of others.

Off for Vacations

Mr. Seltzer, of the Seltzer Automatic Music Company, recently made a trip East, staying in New York several days. He visited Harrisburg, Reading and Pottsville on business and received an order for a Seeburg motion picture photoplayer to be installed in the New Slater Theatre that opens at Pottsville on August 31.

Jerome Spandau, of the Warner Feature Film Company, left this week for the East where he will remain for several weeks, spending his vacation at Atlantic City. His wife accompanied him. Mr. Spandau will also look after some business for the firm in New York before he returns to Pittsburgh.

N. S. Maisack, manager of the East Liberty Cameraphone, is camping with the Dixie Club at Harmarville, Pa., but returns to the city several times a week to look after the business of the theatre. Maisack is an expert in the water, and next fall will race Kennedy, of New York, a series of races for the long distance back-stroke championship of the world, the title for which the Pittsburgh man now holds.

Book Return Date for Bosworth Film

The Sheridan Square Theatre, of East Liberty, ran Bosworth's "The Valley of the Moon" three days lately with excellent results. It is said that the play proved so popular in that section that so many requests have been sent in for another run for the films that the management of the house has consented to get the feature again for a three-day run.

Warner's Feature Film Company has issued an eight-page brochure on one of the firm's latest releases, "Across the Border." This play is to be shown in Pittsburgh shortly, and it is said that the feature has been booked at a number of theatres in this section.

A. S. Davis, one of the most popular men in Film Row, Pittsburgh, spent several days recently in West Virginia, where he attended to his oil business in that section. He also booked several of his features for showing in several of the West Virginia towns, including Wheeling and Fairmont.

M. Von Monthe is back in Pittsburgh as road man for Warner's Features. He formerly worked from this office but was transferred to Cleveland some time ago.

Good Picture Summer Season

The Sheridan Square Theatre in East Liberty is getting ready to resume vaudeville the first week in September. The summer season of pictures, which is now drawing to a close, has been a most successful one and has been due in a great measure to the careful selection of the pictures shown and the general attractiveness of the house. John T. Harris heads the company, owning the theatre, and Frank H. Tooker is the manager.

"Atlantis" is still holding its popularity. The Weiland Film Company has secured two copies of the motion picture play, and has two men on the road booking it throughout Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia and Kentucky. That the Weiland Film Company has made considerable money on this play seems certain.

Ever since the firm received its first copy it has been booking the film right along. It is said that the company has been renting the picture at a good figure, in some instances on a percentage basis, with gratifying success.

The Columbia Theatre in Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has just bought a gold fibre curtain from the Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Feature Company, and will have it hung so as to put it in operation very soon. The curtain is said to be one of the largest that this company has sold in this section, and from all accounts the others sold to local theatres have been giving the utmost satisfaction.

In Pittsburgh the demand for Paramount pictures has been phenominal. All the houses showing the Famous Players productions have contracted again for the service and a great many houses that did not at first use the service have handed in their contracts.

Eagle Eyed Censors Earning Salaries

The Pennsylvania censors eliminated a scene showing a man and woman struggling on a bridge in "The Evil Eye," one of Silverman's late Apex features.

C. H. Pierce, representing Bosworth, Inc., was in Pittsburgh a few hours as he was passing through on his way to the Quaker City from Chicago recently. He visited W. C. Bachmeyer, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the company.

FAMOUS WAR PAINTINGS IN RAMO FILM

To show the lull before a storm, "The War of Wars," the new photoplay of Ramo Films, Inc., reproduces the famous "Angelus" of Jean Francois Millet, the French painter.

Properly known as the "Angelus du Soir," exhibited at Paris in the exposition of 1867, its two peasants, man and woman, who stop work in the field when they hear the bell of a distant church tolling the "Angelus," became the most famous figures in modern painting after their creator had died penniless.

So great was their renown that a sale of the works left in Millet's studio realized 321,034 francs, and a collection of his designs 421,050 francs. "The Angelus" is priceless.

Another of the well-known paintings woven into "The War of Wars" is "The Last Cartridge" of Alphonso de Neuville. This was exhibited in 1873 at the Paris Salon, and won for the artist the cross of the legion of honor.

"De Neuville had the genius of action," wrote a critic in the "Revue des Mondes." And that is why his work blends so remarkably with the scenes of conflict portrayed in "The War of Wars."

Admirers of modern French art will find in the Ramo drama a fine specimen of Edouard Detaille, namely: "The Charge of the Ninth Regiment of Cuirassiers."

Detaille was harshly criticized in his time, "although they seem to have come from the oven of the enameler. The pretty soldiers of Detaille have never seen the fire" said one. His soldiers in "The War of Wars" appears to have issued from the mouth of the Infernal Regions.

LAW FREAK SPLITS LICENSE

Newark, N. J., Aug. 20.

On the course of the boundary line between Orange and East Orange hangs the question whether the concern, which is building a motion picture theatre on the line in Main street, will pay $500 or $1,000 for the East Orange license. The direction of the line from the corner of the building at the front of the property is such as to cut the stage about in half and the question is how many seats are east of the line.

If the number of seats exceeds 300, East Orange will charge $1,000, but if it is under that, the charge will be but $500 a year.

The seating capacity of the auditorium will be 1,118. When work was started on the building the plans had to be changed to conform to the East Orange building code. The entire building has now been made to comply with the latter ordinance.

"Baroness Films" a New Centaur Brand

David Horsley Arranges to Star Mlle. Valkyrien of the Royal Denmark Theatre, Well Known in European Films

MADEMOISELLE VALKYRIEN, a well-known European motion picture actress, has been acquired by David Horsley for the Centaur Film Company, of Bayonne. During the last year Mlle. Valkyrien appeared in the productions of the leading motion picture concerns of Denmark and Germany, including the Great Northern and the Danish Biographs.

While at the very height of her fame, Mlle. Valkyrien, who is but twenty years old, gave up her professional career to become the wife of the Baron Hrolf von De Witz, a lieutenant in the Royal Danish Navy. She accompanied her husband to New York last June, believing at that time she had quit the stage forever. Like many another person of rank, both in and out of the profession, the Baroness's plans were changed entirely by the present great war in Europe.

David Horsley, during his visit to Denmark last summer, was much impressed with Mlle. Valkyrien's work before the camera. When he saw the newspaper stories of the Baron and Baroness he immediately sent the baroness an offer to appear as the star in a big feature he then had in contemplation.

This offer was refused, but when the decision to "come back" was reached, Mr. Horsley was the first producer to be considered. Mr. Horsley snapped at her offer, and on Monday of this week the Baroness was rehearsing her first Centaur picture, under the direction of Milton Fahrney.

It is Mr. Horsley's intention to create a special brand of refined comedy featuring Mlle. Valkyrien, to be known as the "Baroness Films." This brand will be included in the recently announced program of seven comedies a week to be made at the Centaur studios.

Previous to her entrance into the silent drama, Mlle. Valkyrien was a member of the regular company of the Royal Theatre in Copenhagen. This was an appointment by the crown. It was while appearing in the Royal Theatre that Mlle. Valkyrien was chosen by the King as the Valkyrie of Denmark.

The Great Cardinal in Screen Drama

"Richelieu," a Four-Part Special will be Released by the Universal Company with MacQuarrie in the Lead

DURING the week of August 31, "Richelieu," a four-part "special" will be released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The company is said to have spent a small fortune on this one production.

Murdock J. MacQuarrie is featured in the role of the Cardinal, and Pauline Bush, one of the Big U's most popular women stars, as Julie de Mortemar. Others in the cast will be William C. Dowlan, Lon Chaney, Edna Maison, James Neill, William Lloyd and Robert Chandler.

The play has been directed by Allan Dwan, responsible for some of the Universal's biggest successes. There is developed and projected, in conjunction with the story of sacrifice and love between a beautiful young girl and a fearless soldier, the character of the famous Cardinal Richelieu.

The diplomat of diplomats, who ruled France in his day as completely as if he had been king, who employed his understanding of human nature and power of intrigue to defeat the long, strong arm of a thousand enemies; cold, cruel, and without scruples—on the brink of the grave, with many slaves, but without a friend, he played the trump card of his pack to save and insure the happiness of his little ward, Julie de Mortemar. This is the essence of the story, as it is told upon the screen.

Pauline Bush, in essaying the part of the young heroine of the play, has exercised all her manifold accomplishments to make the part stand out as it should. Mr. MacQuarrie, who plays the title role, has shown his capacity as a finished artist in such pictures as "The Hopes of Blind Alley," "The Old Cobbler," and in the "Villon" series by George Bronson Howard.

Rare Fair-Mindedness

AT least one board of Aldermen in this country is to be congratulated on the possession of enough common-sense to make them immune to the censorship epidemic which has attacked so many other bodies of "city fathers."

Most municipal councils have preferred to perpetrate an injustice that cost them nothing upon the exhibitors of the community to risking their popularity with the so-called "respectable" element of the town by turning down a law for the censorship of motion pictures.

NOT so the Aldermen of Minneapolis.

Instead of taking the say-so of rabid reformers and prejudiced politicians on the moral tone of the motion picture theatres of their city, they decided to investigate and hear the exhibitors' side of the case.

THEY discovered nothing that could serve as an excuse for the municipal censorship bill before them.

Suggestive or obscene pictures were conspicuous by their absence. Well-conducted theatres exhibiting programs of carefully chosen, high-quality photoplays confronted them everywhere they went.

And they promptly killed the proposed ordinance.

TO the action of the exhibitors' organization in asking for a hearing in the matter goes some of the credit, it should not be forgotten, though that the balance of it belongs to the Aldermen of Minneapolis for their fair-mindedness.

But there is a lesson for both exhibitors and Aldermen of other cities in the incident,—a lesson in organization for the exhibitor, a lesson in the principles of justice and good judgment for city fathers.

A Solid State League Next

THE action of the Southern California exhibitors in lending their solid support to the amalgamation of the League and the Association at their last meeting in Los Angeles is gratifying and encouraging in the extreme.

Not a dissenting vote marred the endorsement of harmony and co-operation.

THE course of California, as of every other state, must now be clear.

A powerful state League should be the next step.

San Francisco and Los Angeles should bury whatever rivalries and jealousies there may exist between them, and unite under a common head.

MAKE the state organization the unit everywhere. Locals are necessary and good in themselves, but they are too restricted to accomplish anything when a crisis arises.

Only a state organization, or something even bigger, can fight state legislation,—and that is the legislation with which exhibitors will have to reckon presently.

THE exhibitors of any state have a sufficient number of interests to further, a sufficient number of rights to protect, to make it financially worth their while to join their state League, if there is one among them, to create a state league, if there is not.

IF there are any waiting to "be shown" on this question before they act, events this fall are likely to convince the stubbornest of them.

The exhibitor, as an individual, is lost. Organized, he is a power.

Why not protect yourselves NOW by joining your state league?

Two Boards of Trade

THE meeting of independent manufacturers exchanges and exhibitors, as announced in the advertising pages of this issue of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, to form a Board of Trade, should not be confused with the Board of Trade movement launched at the New York Convention in June.

There is no relation between the two.

The latter movement was designed to include the entire industry.

BLANCHE CHAPMAN FOR "CABBAGE PATCH"

Blanche Chapman, who created the role of Mrs. Wiggs for the legitimate stage, arrived recently in San Francisco for a special engagement with the California Motion Picture Corporation. This concern is now filming "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and Mrs. Chapman is playing the title role.

It is understood that Alice Hegan Rice, author of the novel, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and co-author of the play, was instrumental in securing Mrs. Chapman's services for the California company. Mrs. Chapman had already signed a contract for the coming theatrical season and was to open with an engagement in Winnipeg on the first of August.

The motion picture people, however, bought her release for a period of sufficient length to complete their production.

The cast for "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" will include Beatriz Michelena as Lovey Mary, House Peters as Bob and Andrew Robson in the part of Mr. Wiggs.

WILL ESTABLISH THEATRE CHAIN IN NORTHWEST

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 17.

The establishment of a chain of motion picture theatres, bearing the same name and extending acros the state, is contemplated by Dr. H. S. Clemmer, owner of the Casino and Clemmer theatres in Spokane, and his brother, who controls the Clemmer and others in Seattle.

The theatres in the new chain will all be called "Clemmer," in honor of the late John Clemmer, a pioneer in the film field of the Northwest and father of the two brothers.

Dr. Clemmer, who recently secured a long-time lease on the fireproof house now being built at the corner of Sprague avenue and Lincoln street, has announced that it will be the Spokane theatre of the proposed circuit. The theatre, which is to cost $200,000, has been referred to heretofore as the Lincoln.

JOHN BARRYMORE AGAIN WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS

John Barrymore has been re-engaged by the Famous Players Film Company for his second appearance in motion pictures and will appear in Du Souchet's famous comedy success, "The Man from Mexico."

Mr. Barrymore made his debut before the motion picture camera a few months ago in the Famous Players' film version of "An American Citizen."

"The Man from Mexico" play has won a reputation as one of the best laugh-producers of the age.

Claude Patin Called to the French Colors

Secretary-General Manager of Eclair Returns to His Native Land for Military Duty—Attached to Minister of War Staff

CLAUDE PATIN, secretary-general manager of the Eclair Company, New York City, has been called to the French colors. Mr. Patin will sail on the steamship La France of the General Transatlantique line, August 26, bound for Havre.

CLAUDE PATIN

Mr. Patin holds the rank of first lieutenant in the French army, and will serve as an aide de camp, attached to the staff of the Minister of War.

Mr. Patin is a graduate of the Ecole Coloniale, Paris, one of the three leading government schools in the French Republic devoted to the training of young men for service in an administrative capacity in the French colonies. Upon his graduation twelve years ago, Mr. Patin arranged to enter the government service at Madagascar.

Before the expiration however, of the year between graduation from the Ecole Coloniale and the assumption of the duties abroad by all appointees, who must first remain for twelve months in France to become familiar with the routine of the office, he decided to give up his chances of advancement in the foreign service and come to America.

He became so enamoured of the country that he resigned his Madagascar appointment and stayed in the United States, where he acted as private secretary of a prominent New York business man for five years. At the expiration of this period he returned to France, but after a short sojourn in his native country he decided to return to America, where he became the manager of the Gaumont Company.

Last July he went back to Paris to take charge of an important department of the Gaumont concern in that city. Two months later he resigned from Gaumont and became associated with the Eclair company as general secretary of the whole company, and returned to America December, 1913, for the third time.

Mr. Patin goes abroad with the best wishes of all his associates at Eclair and the large circle of acquaintances he has made in the film industry generally.

Bon Ray Opens for Big Business

New Concern, Planning to Maintain a Plant of High Efficiency, Adds, Among Other Devices, Four Improved Printers

THE Bon Bay Film Company, of Woodside, Long Island, N. Y., the latest addition to motion picture ranks, occupies a large concrete and brick building on Betts avenue and Queens boulevard in the center of a plot of about twenty acres. The plant started operation Monday, August 17, and has been turning out a very superior quality of film printing all week. It has four continuous printers in operation, each of which can be speeded up to 24,000 feet an hour, if necessary.

These machines are equipped with a new form of light such as has never been used before in film printing machines. The lamps generate about 3,000 candle power and enable the printing to be accomplished at almost any speed. Each of these fast machines is equipped with a continuous negative handling device which obviates the necessity of rethreading it each time the negative is run through.

One man attends to the four machines and thus accomplished the seemingly impossible feat of printing 100,000 feet of film an hour without help. In addition to these machines, the company has installed several step printers for handling defectively perforated or old film.

The plant is equipped with every form of fire preventive and fire fighting devices. Each room is distinct in itself and is cut off by metal doors from all other rooms, and should a fire occur in the property, it would by the very nature of things, be confined to the room in which it originates. All film stock and negatives are kept in a separate brick vault, 200 feet from the main building.

The president of the Bon Ray Film Company is F. E. Holliday and the treasurer A. B. Roberts.

"IN THE LION'S DEN"

(Eclectic—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture, besides being a delightful drama, is novel in more ways than one. It is of German make and hand colored in a beautiful manner, in shades which are most pleasing to the eye. Then, again, the observer is given a glimpse of that coveted sight—the inside of a motion picture studio, a scene which cannot fail to interest. Still another novel idea is running a picture within the picture. This feature is not new at all but most entertaining.

MLLE. NISSEN, AND ONE OF HER PETS

Last, but not least, quite a ferocious group of lions are introduced. At times they act like all lions do before the camera—quite meek. The animals then seem as if they want to sleep more than to act. But they are not always sleepy. When they wake up and appear curling their lips, and start pacing their cage, their appearance is enough to cause chills to chase up and down one's spine.

A feeling of suspense reigns when Theodore is led into the lion's cage blind-folded and locked in with the beasts. He manages to climb out after awhile, and one breathes a sigh of relief when he is at last free from the lions, who jumped and clawed at him while he was climbing out.

Theodore while studying in college falls in love with Aut Nissen, a talented motion picture actress. When word comes from home that his fortune is considerably depleted, she lends him money with which to extend his studies and promises to marry him later.

But Theodore sees her flirting on with another man and denounces her. He returns home and becomes engaged to another woman. On the day of his wedding he visits Mlle. Nissen, at her command. She leads him to the lion's den. After his escape from there he dies and she, despairing of life, throws herself in the cage.

"THE BO'SUN'S MATE"

(Cosmofotofilm—Four Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THIS is an exceptionally good comedy film. The scenario is based on one of W. W. Jacobs' diverting short stories, depicting the Dickens-like characters this noted English author delights in.

The screen production is as closely packed with effective incidents as the original. The acting and stage management show so much care and ability that the film reproduces the subtle atmosphere of the story, its drollery, and amusing characterizations with absolute fidelity.

The action takes place at a typical old English inn, presided over by a buxom landlady whose beaming smile and substantial income excite the cupidity of a retired bo'sun's mate. He thinks he is in need of a wife and makes love to the owner of the Beehive Inn.

Failing to impress the good dame with the seriousness of his intentions, and defying the covert laughter and sly jibes of the village characters—the chronic loafer, the schoolmaster, gamekeeper, plowman and other worthies who adorned the tap-room in their idle moments, and possess an uncanny intuition for discovering the most likely persons ready to offer them free drinks—defying the irritating remarks of these gentlemen, and looking forward to the time that, as landlord, he could kick them into the street, the retired bo'sun's mate conceives a brilliant plan for winning the landlady's undying devotion and hand.

He bribes an ex-soldier to play burglar, the understanding being that he, the gallant swain, is to rescue her from a supposedly desperate person at a given time.

The sailor waits outside the inn, and ready to defy everything, even his rheumatism, he waits for the signal to crawl through the window to the defense of the fair lady.

She, however, wakes on hearing a suspicious noise below, and shows that by grabbing up a formidable rifle is fully able to protect herself. The "burglar" is made to explain his presence, and on learning the nature of the plot, the mistress of the Beehive, fertile in counter moves and bent on punishing the bold swain, fools the sailorman into believing that she has killed the alleged burglar, and insists upon his digging a grave in the garden. She and the ex-soldier sit behind a blind and watch the old salt bend his stiff joints over a pick and shovel for many weary hours of back-breaking toil.

THE OLD SALT HUNTS A WIFE

Not until some days after does he discover the trick that has been played upon him. He sees the supposed dead man in the taproom acting the landlord with exasperating coolness and serving the Beehive customers with the supercilious ease of complete ownership—of house and wife. The sailor sees a tell-tale ring on the smiling dame's left finger and knows that the soldier has proved as good a woer as he has shown himself a "burglar."

The acting of W. H. Berry, of Daly's London Theatre, was superb. His interpretation of the zealous old salt will make the film a joy for everyone who appreciates delicious humor.

The picture will be released through the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

BAN ON LOBBY OBSTRUCTIONS

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 19.

Motion picture theatres that allow their lobbies to become crowded with baby carriages and bicycles are coming under the scrutiny of Building Inspector Kerth, of Evansville, Ind.

Billboards and lobby displays must not obstruct the exits, says the inspector, for in case of fire the audiences might be seriously hindered in getting out.

"WHAT A WOMAN WILL DO"

(Cosmofotofilm—Four Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THE story is designed to show the length to which a woman will scheme to right a grievous wrong done to those she loves. Each incident is developed with vigor. The cast has been carefully chosen for rendering the best effects with the material at the disposal of the producer.

A woman marries a widower with a daughter in whom his whole heart is wrapped. The wife resents his apparent indifference to her own charms and elopes with an old lover. The disgrace is too much for the husband, who, completely unnerved by the action, loses his grip on everything.

THE JUDGE REFUSES MONEY TO HIS SON

He neglects his business and finally finds himself dependent upon his daughter for support. She becomes a chorus girl. In the meantime, Frederick Bryce, the lover, is thrown over by the capricious woman and takes to drink, sinking lower and lower.

Eventually Bryce decides to commit suicide. By accident he sees Phillip Lewis, the injured husband, and has a twinge of conscience. Bryce before making away with himself, writes a note to Lewis, telling him of the contemplated deed and asks Lewis to visit him.

Lewis, curious to know what the man wants of him, goes to the address given in the letter. A few moments before the visitor's arrival Bryce shoots himself. The shots are heard in the street, and Lewis is discovered bending over the body with a smoking revolver in his hand. As a result of this damning circumstantial evidence he is condemned to serve fifteen years in prison.

The daughter sees a chance to get a new trial for her father by influencing the judge through the judge's son. She throws herself in the way of the young man and makes him fall in love with her.

Finally the letter of the suicide is discovered by accident in a forgotten book, and the judge sees that it contains sufficient evidence to warrant a new trial, which results in the complete exoneration of Lewis.

The Cosmofoto Company has provided some excellent paper for the photoplay. The three-sheets show the daughter of the convicted man pleading her father's cause with the judge. The attitude of the girl is full of animation. She stands in a dramatic pose while the judge holds down his head in an attitude of sorrowful attention. Another three-sheet shows the second wife sitting on a couch while complaining of neglect to her husband, who holds his arm tenderly around the waist of his daughter.

A six-sheet full of color and properly drawn figures in striking poses shows the discovery of the suicide by Phillip Lewis and the policemen.

The faces of the characters in the posters have been drawn true to life and are recognizable as likenesses of the actors in the film.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY"

(Thanhouser—Ninth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FLORENCE LA BADIE, the pretty and daring heroine of "The Million Dollar Mystery," illustrates the latter appellation in this episode of the exciting serial to such a vivid extent that it will be impossible to suppress the little "ohs" and "ahs" that have been so often aroused by this exciting serial.

But, however thrilling the other episodes have been, this one beats them all. The title of these two reels, "The Leap from an Ocean Liner," tells just what Miss La Badie's latest contribution to the thrills of the story is; but it is not fully explanatory; she doesn't jump from a port hole a few feet above the water, but from the uppermost deck.

The only fault we have to find is that she was a little too far away from the camera, but the great height of the ship necessitated this, and one can easily see that it is the charming heroine herself and not a substitute or a dummy.

The million dollars and its whereabouts have for a time been forgotten by the exciting sensations that the actors and actresses of this company have performed for the benefit of the public.

BRAINE EXPLAINS THE PLOT TO HIS CONFEDERATES

But if one stops to think about the million, it is quite certain he is nowhere nearer the solution than at the start—not an inkling has been given of its location. It may be at the bottom of the sea, it may be in the Hargreaves house, or it may still be in the possession of the vanished millionaire, the member of the Black Hundred. Who knows?

The manner in which Florence got aboard the liner was of course much against her will. The conspirators employ two unscrupulous doctors for the trick. One of them makes out a certificate, to the effect that Florence Hargreaves is insane. They plan taking her to Russia, but she foils them by her daring leap.

After the plunge she is picked up by a fisherman, who takes her to his home. Her mind a blank, she forgets her identity. The conspirators spread the report that she has disappeared. Both they and her friends think that she is lost forever, much to the former's satisfaction and the latter's distraction. How she is found and the nature of the next thrill will be told in the next installment.

"THE TREY O' HEARTS"

(Gold Seal—Fifth Chapter)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT would be wrong to rate any particular scene of this installment, entitled "The Sunset Tide," above another, but that does not mean that none are worthy of description; quite the contrary, almost every act of this chapter is exciting enough to warrant the greatest interest. They are so linked together as to cause this episode to be one full of hair-raising events, and at the same time they form a well coherent story.

To begin with, both parties find themselves on an island where they have drifted from the wreck. Alan is taken captive by the adherents of Judith, who are this time smugglers. The party stops at a café to quench their thirst, and while there they get into a fight. So vigorous is it that they knock the bar over and crash through the side of the building. In the confusion Alan escapes, but is caught again. The next time he makes good use of an opportunity and dives from the window of his prison, facing the water, with his hands tied.

He is in the nick of time to save Rose and Barcus, whom Judith and her followers have tied to the rocks and who are rapidly becoming covered by the rising tide. The three make their escape in a rowboat, leaving Judith beside herself with rage on the shore.

Excellent double exposure work appears in this chapter, when Judith and Rose—both characters impersonated by Cleo Madison—come on in the same scene.

"THE FOREIGN SPIES"

(Cosmofotofilm—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THIS is a film full of sensational action of a wholesome nature. There is enough intrigue to furnish two or three ordinary detective stories with material. The plot moves along with breathless rapidity, yet no detail essential to the unfolding of the theme has been forgotten.

Of course, the inimitable Detective Finn, whose adroitness in ferreting out evildoers in other thrilling dramas of this series is already known, particularly to the English public, runs down the foreign spies.

A thrilling moment comes to the spectator when the conspirators capture Finn and leave him in a bathtub to drown. But the detective has as many lives as a properly endowed cat and manages to escape the horrible trap. Although the tub is full of water right up to the brim, Finn after repeated efforts pulls the plug out with his teeth.

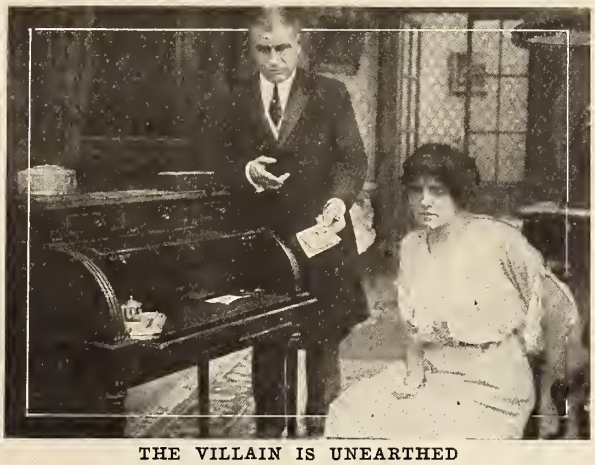
Then he further displays his ingenuity by striking a match while holding it in his teeth and lighting a candle. The task of freeing his hands is easy. He turns and holds the wet bonds over the flame until they are severed.

All this is performed in full view for faithful reproduction by the camera, and inspires respect for Finn's cleverness in escaping from an apparently inevitable situation.

A red light effect at the end of the picture is deserving of particular mention.

Certain spies who have come from the continent to England to steal the plans of a machine gun an inventor is about to sell to the English government, gain their ends through the aid of a disloyal butler. The conspirators while trying to exercise care in covering their tracks, are finally caught through a match box carelessly dropped by one of the men. The picture will take well most anywhere.

"THE FILM DETECTIVE"



(Picture Playhouse Film—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

COMBINING superb and even elaborate settings with acting that shows a keen command of technique, the latest release by the Picture Playhouse Film Company is a notable achievement by this recently organized company.

The pictures are made with the careful co-operation of producer and photographer and the result from the artistic point of view is altogether satisfying.

The hero, Jack Daingerfield, is a young man of fashion who has spent his entire fortune in almost the twinkling of an eye, and finds himself penniless and harrassed by creditors. One of the latter attempts to make a match between the spendthrift and a rich girl, Mary Delmar.

The girl finds out the reason of the marriage and throws Daingerfield over at once for his rival, Lord Lytton. Daingerfield, in despair, accepts a commission from a motion picture concern to hunt wild game in Africa. Lord Lytton, to get his insurance, follows and cowardly shoots him, inflicting a wound in the shoulder.

The camera catches this along with the hunting of the lion. On the eve of the Lord's marriage, the picture is shown at the girl's house and reveals the baseness of the prospective bridegroom.

The novelty of film evidence is indisputable, and anything that is new, of course will excite interest. But the delight of the story has a sounder basis than this simple incident; it lies in the breathless rapidity and plausible continuity with which the pointed events are unfolded and the life-likeness with which the characters are drawn.

Signor Gustavo Serena, a very capable actor, plays the part of Jack Daingerfield. He is given able support by Signorina Maria Jacobini as Mary Delmar, and Signor Luigi Mele as Lord Lytton.

There are pictures of a lonely island, on which Daingerfield and Mary are left so that they will be in a compromising situation. The picturesqueness of the rocky coast with the angry waves dashing high against the dark crags, leads pleasing variety to the four reels of action.

"A SUSPICIOUS WIFE"

(Twentieth Century—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is a picture that tells how the gossips of the neighborhood, and the "other" woman, a cocaine fiend, combined with the suspicions of a wife, ended in the deepest tragedy. The dictograph is used in the picture to prove that the wife's suspicions are unfounded and to detect a murderer. Previous to its introduction in the picture its inventor, K. M. Turner, is shown.

The scenario of the picture was written and produced by Alexander F. Frank. The cast consists of Justina Wayne, Dorothy Gwynn, Valerie Sheahan, Charles Perley and Mark Harrison.

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE APPLIES FOR A DICTOGRAPH

While the picture is entertaining, judged as a whole, there are some things which many critics might take exception to. Recognitions occur between people who have never met before. This improbability could be obviated by the introduction of a few explanatory lines, so worded that the mutual recognitions would seem perfectly natural.

Another defect consists of the arrest of a woman on circumstantial evidence where the evidence is obviously lacking. This discrepancy, too, might be repaired by the judicious use of a short explanation based on some previous action of the play.

The story is good. A doctor cares for a woman after she has taken a daring plunge off the Brooklyn Bridge, New York.

She falls in love with him. The wife discovers the fact, but trusts in her husband, who commands the other woman to leave the house. She obeys, but swears revenge. She returns to the house at night and shoots a woman whom she thinks is the doctor's wife, but who is a friend. The wife is at first accused of the murder, but the culprit is finally discovered, and all ends well.

"SINS OF THE PARENTS"

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

WHEN one considers this picture looking for the outstanding feature, one is impressed not only by the absorbing story that is built up through a series of dramatic incidents, but also, and probably more strongly, by the strong contrasts that are presented dramatically. It is, above all, a play of contrasts. The characters seem naturally to arrange themselves in two groups; and time and again one scene of happiness is placed alongside another of anguish and mental suffering.

The idea upon which the drama is based is that the innocent oftentimes are made to suffer in this life for the deeds of others. It is a big theme, and it is handled with impressive and conspicuous breadth of outlook and with thoughtful insight into some of the values of life.

This does not mean that all unreality and stage conventionality has been eliminated. There are points in the story that seem untrue to life. Yet, on the whole, it may be said without reserve that this is a convincing and powerful presentation of life.

Madame Sarah Adler plays the leading female part, and she easily dominates every scene through the magnetism of her personality and her expressive command of conflicting or overwhelming emotions.

At times her tragic bearing and emotionalism, as of other persons in the cast, become too violent for our taste; there is not enough restraint, but we must remember that Madame Adler has been trained in the Yiddish school of acting, and comes of a passionate and fervent race, who are given to a more open and frank expression of their feelings by means of gestures than almost any other people.

The company supporting Madame Adler is entirely adequate, containing such well-trained actors as Paul Doucet, John W. Dillion, and Ralf Henderson, and actresses as Mabel Wright, Natalie Howe, and Louise Corbin.

The story in a few words will give a partial idea of the virility and deep human appeal that it makes. Laura Henderson, the part played by Madame Adler, is an orphan. She falls in love with an Italian violinist, who runs off and leaves her.

She is forced to go to the city to support herself and the child, left in the care of her aunt. In the city she meets a settlement worker and minister and marries him.

Eighteen years later, their daughter is about to marry into a prominent family. The other daughter learns of her real mother and sets out to find her. She falls into the clutches of a young Italian who happens to be her half-brother. In the struggle with him the pistol is discharged and he is killed.

The girl is charged with the murder. Her mother's husband meets and through him the mother learns of her daughter.

In the middle of the trial she rushes in and charges the accuser of the girl with being her own father. He breaks down. The girl's plea of self-defense is sustained. The other daughter through shame for what has come into her life, commits suicide.

This last incident is one of the few weaknesses in the play. It takes more than another's misfortune that can only tarnish our name, not blacken it, to force us to this act, unless there is some mental unbalance. In this case, the deed is utterly improbable and out of character.

It may be repeated, however, that the picture achieves its purpose, as a whole.

SPECIAL FILM REVIEWS

"By the Aid of a Film." (Edison. One reel. Tues., Aug. 18.)—This is the concluding picture of "The Man Who Disappeared" series, based on the stories by Richard Washburn Child which are appearing under that title in the "Popular Magazine." This installment will appear in the September number.

Of course, everything turns out all right for Perriton, the "man who disappeared," taking the blame for a murder which the brother of the girl he loves committed. But before these two are united in happiness, he is arrested and put on trial for the crime. Just here we are given the trade secrets of the motion picture. The murder is re-enacted before the camera, and when this reel is unwound in the cort room, the murderer breaks down and confesses. It is odd to see two motion pictures being shown on the screen at the same time, but this is actually the case.

Although it is hard for us to be reconciled to a sister's turning against her own brother, even for the man she loves, yet in this case he is such a scoundrel that it is, perhaps, true to human nature.

"The Lure of the Geisha." (101 Bison. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 22.)—This picture was made on the Bison Company's Hawaiian trip. "The Lure of the Geisha" is a Japanese picture, and the story is supplemented by numerous realistic sets.

The story, that of the plotting villain who tries to cast his rival in love in a shadow, but finally reaping his own misdeeds, is entertaining from beginning to end. Parts of the picture take place in beautiful Japanese gardens, which would be worth a reel without the story. The fine scenes, combined with the attractive plot, will make the picture a great success.

"The Village 'Neath the Sea." (Domino. Two reels. Thursday, Aug. 27.)—An Indian story, far better than the average, and based on an ancient Indian legend. A clever piece of work appears in the latter part of the picture that will not fail to meet appreciation.

Red Elk, after losing his wife through the treachery of Big Bear, sits in his canoe and looks down at the bottom of the sea. There he sees an Indian village. Through double exposure work it seems as if it was actually on the bottom of the sea. Overcome by remorse Red Elk throws himself from his canoe. Tesuru Aoki, Sesue Hayakawa and Swallow are the principals.

"Mademoiselle Andrea." (Rex. Two reels. Thursday, Aug. 27.)—A strong drama featuring Rupert Julien, Elsie Jane Wilson and Joseph King. Miss Wilson gives a fine characterization of a typical French mademoiselle.

Edmunds is engaged to Mademoiselle Andrea. He wrongs another woman and he is killed by her brother. Years later Levine, the brother, meets Andrea and falls in love with her. She plans a horrible revenge, to kill herself and leave evidence that Levine committed the murder. She believes that she has taken the poison and then tells Levine of her plan. He then tells her the reason he murdered Edmunds. At this point the maid comes in and says she threw the poison away.

"The Heart Rebellious." (Lubin. Two reels. Thursday, Aug. 13.)—The trap that a young adventuress sets for a man ensnare her when the man in deadly earnest makes her his wife by main force. She then refuses to bend to him. But it all comes out all right in the end, and the father, who had driven his daughter into that way of life, is frustrated in his attempt to rob a safe in the husband's charge.

John E. Ince is the fond husband, and he wins our sympathy for his loneliness. The wife is played by Villette Stringer, who makes it a thoroughly consistent part in spite of difficulties in the way.

"The Battling British." (B. and C. Three reels. Mon., Aug. 24.)—A picture of English make and released by Warner's Features. The battle of Trafalgar is quite vividly depicted, which is followed by the death of Nelson. There is a love story that is just prominent enough to link the battle scenes together and to hold the observer's attention throughout.

The leading roles are interpreted by Eliza Risden, who plays the part of the wife of the English soldier. Gray Murphy plays the husband, who before the finale finds himself in a number of black positions. In the end he is about to be hung for striking a superior officer when his wife arrives, after an exciting journey, with a pardon which reaches him just in time.

"Forcing the Force." (Hartigan-Eclectic.)—Two pretty girls in financial straits join the police force and before long all the other members are neglecting their duty to visit the girls. This is a comical reel, and will furnish much amusement.

"The Masher's Mishap." (Hartigan-Eclectic.)—The married man flirts with his next door neighbor. Both the women combine their forces and he lands in a lunatic asylum. He escapes and a general mixup is the result before matters are straightened out. When it's over Mr. Masher declares he will never flirt again.

KITTY REALIZES HER LOVE FOR TRUXTON
Scene from "Weights and Measures" (Victor—Two Reels—August 17)

"In All Things Moderation." (Imp. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 10.)—A strong lesson is told in these two reels, and related in such a manner as to hold the spectator spellbound. The picture tells how an old man's religious fanaticism ruined the life of one of his daughters and the man she loved and later married.

This tragic occurrence taught him "to practice more and preach less," which resulted in the happiness of his other daughter and son. Howard Crampton appears as the father, Dorothy Phillips and Ruth Connely as his daughters, Alexander Gaden as the son, and Edmund Mortimer as the husband. The picture is not only a drama but a tragedy; it is sad from beginning to end, but will be appreciated.

"Through the Flames." (Rex. Two reels. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—The feature of this production is an excellent fire scene which takes place in the last reel. It is one of the most realistic episodes of the kind ever seen by the writer, and it must have required a great amount of nerve for Herbert Rawlinson, who plays the part of the fireman, to enter the burning building.

Anna Little plays the feminine lead well. The fireman is in love with a poor girl who lives in the tenements. The agent of the house also desires to win the girl. One night he tries to enter her room. He is unsuccessful and spends the night in a vacant apartment. Through his carelessness the house is set on fire. He perishes in the flames but the girl is saved.

"The One Who Loved Him Best." (Edison. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 14.)—Richard Ridgely is known for the artistry of his pictures. This is one of his best, in regard to the story as well. An old sea captain has two daughters. One professes to love him and does all she can to let him know it. The other is serious-minded and keeps the house in order. She really loves her father more than the other, but is greatly misunderstood. The old man finds out the truth at last, and the deserving daughter is finally rewarded. This story, backed by the beautiful scenes taken near the sea, forms an ideal picture. Mabel Trunnelle, Bigelow Cooper, Marjory Ellison and Herbert Prior make up the cast.

"The Operator at Black Rock." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 5.)—This is another of the Kalem Company's stirring realistic railroad dramas, written by E. W. Matlack, who is himself a train dispatcher, and produced by J. P. McGowan. Naturally there is a train robbery, but this in itself is not the real excitement. That is produced by the efforts of the operator at Black Rock, the role performed in this drama by Miss Helen Holmes, to let her superiors know what has happened.

SCENE FROM "THE MAN O' WARSMAN," FEATURING THOMAS SHEA
(Broadway Picture Producing Company)

She manages to send a message over the wires with her teeth. How she does it is uncertain, and it must have been an awful job for the operator at the other end to decipher it. But somehow he gets what she is driving at, and the trains are sidetracked for the speeding engine with the express car that has started off of its own accord after it has been stopped by the robbers. The latter do not get the money, but receive prison terms instead. Their capture makes good sport for the audience.

"Her Mother's Necklace." (Majestic. Two reels. Sunday, Aug. 16.)—Dorothy Gish at her best, assisted by Howard Day and Irene Hunt. The young daughter is the idol of her father, a widower. He meets and falls in love with the woman next door and after a while marries her. The girl, jealous at first of her new mother, finally learns to love her. This drama is acted and produced superbly.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 31." (Reliance. Monday, Aug. 17.)—The second of the series written by Irvin S. Cobb in which Margaret tries to discover the man who stole her necklace. Kid Joseph accuses Dunbar of the crime, but he is exonerated because the finger prints on the case are not his. The criminal has yet to be discovered. Margaret tries on sporting attire sent from A. G. Spalding, but she takes no pleasure in this as her mind is on the necklace and the unknown perpetrator of the crime.

"The Old Army Coat." (Kalem. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 17.)—Everything in this play hinges on the coat that the old major wore through the thick and thin of the war between the states. A picture of his old sweetheart in the pocket deflected a bullet and saved his life. Now the daughter of that sweetheart is his ward, and in his will he leaves all to her, disinheriting his rake of a nephew.

The will gets into a pocket of the coat, the coat disappears and is used for a scarecrow. But fate leads the young girl to this particular cornfield and she finds the lost will. She then returns to claim her property which the nephew has been squandering in reckless living. Alice Joyce is the sweet, pretty ward, and we do not wonder that she won the old major's heart. Excellent double exposures are made of the love affair of the old soldier which he tells to the girl.

"How Johanna Saved the Home." (Albuquerque. Mon., July 27.)—This burlesque on a Western melodrama appears on the later part of the last reel of "The Toll of the Warpath," and comes as a welcome change. Bess frightens the redskins from her home by tapping on a large caldron. The Indians think that they are beset by spirits and make a hasty exit. Excellent trick photography will cause hearty laughter.

Live News of the Week

The Universal Film Exchange, Detroit, has extensively remodeled its offices and they are now among the most complete in the country. The offices occupied by the manager, George W. Weeks, are being attractively decorated. The stenographers have been given a room by themselves, a large supply and exhibition room has been fitted up and a complete line of motion picture supplies will be carried.

The renovating department has been moved to the Toledo office of the company. The second floor will be given over to a projecting room and offices for the bookers.

An inspection room has been fitted up with a separate compartment for each girl, and a convenient cabinet for the machine supplies. The poster department has been given roomy space on the third floor of the exchange and hoists have been installed for convenience in handling shipments.

Eleanor Woodruff, one of the well-known leads of the Pathé American Company, has been on the stage four years. Her debut was made with the Philadelphia Orpheum Stock Company where she played for over a year. Then she was engaged by the Shuberts and appeared in "The Five Frankforters," when she received an offer from Pathé Frères which she accepted.

Her most recent appearances are in "The Last Volunteer" and "The Stain," Pathé-Eclectic features.

William H. Gueringer, general manager of the Fichtenberg enterprises, with headquarters in New Orleans, has just completed a tour of the motion picture houses. He found conditions most satisfactory for the fag end of the season.

Florence Lawrence, who is well known to motion-picture fans as the charming leading lady of the Victor Universal Company, recently resigned from that organization and has left for a short vacation at Miners Bay, Canada.

Miss Lawrence will not discuss her plans for the forthcoming season and refuses to state what company she will become affiliated with in the fall. She is taking advantage of the expiration of her contract with the Victor Company to take a much-needed rest. During her absence she will be represented by Robert L. Peterson, of New York City.

"The Spitfire," a Famous Players production, attracted unusual attention in New Orleans on account of the appearance of a New Orleans actor in one of the leading roles, Lionel Adams, whose real name is Mose Hirsch. He took as his stage name that of a prominent New Orleans lawyer and audiences attending the picture accorded Mr. Adams almost the same attention that they could have given a "flesh and blood" actor.

Ethel Clayton, now appearing in Lubin Special Feature Productions, has in her possession a copy of an old vase secured, among other treasures, for the University of Pennsylvania Museum a few years ago by an expedition party in Nubia, the ancient capital of Ethiopa. Carvings on the vase reveal the fact that fat women were all the rage when the Pharoahs ruled.

Miss Clayton's collection of prints and photographs show that the men of the period were well-formed and slender, but evidently liked an armful of beauty when courting. She does not find this an argument, however, in favor of destroying her own graceful slenderness.

Frederick L. Hayes, who was formerly general manager of the booking and machine department of the Kinemacolor Company of America, is now New York salesman for George Kleine and assistant to Mr. Raynor in the offices of that concern.

Local capitalists are organizing a company in Russellville, Ky., to open a new and up-to-date motion picture theatre in that city.

Anna Belle Ward, a well-known singer of Maysville, Ky., and owner of a motion picture theatre in that city, is one of the seven young women entered in a three-mile swimming contest for August 24 at Cincinnati.

"His Last Dollar," with David Higgins, its author, in the role originally created by him, is now in the course of production by the Famous Players Film Company. It is said to be an elaborate and spectacular adaptation from the famous racing play of the same name, full of overpowering incidents and dramatic episodes which every member of the race-track is quite familiar with.

The Famous Players are taking advantage of the racing season and have obtained permission from the Saratoga Racing Association to take pictures of the race course at Saratoga, which will no doubt add greatly to the realism of the picture.

Harold Shaw, who added to his laurels as director by the masterly production of "The House of Temperley," now has finished an important film version of "Trilby," with Sir Herbert Tree as Svengali. It was released by the London Film Corporation, St. Margarets, Twickenham, Middlesex, England.

The British trade papers have accorded Mr. Shaw considerable praise for his work in the production.

The latest Lasky production entitled "What's His Name," in which Max Figman and Lolita Robertson play the leads, is now complete and will be ready for release in the early part of October. The picture is adapted from the novel by the same name.

Lionel Edel has been appointed representative for western New York of the Eclectic Film Company. Mr. Edel has recently placed many of the Eclectic features in Buffalo. The Elmwood, Allendale and Strand, Buffalo, N. Y., have booked Eclectic features.

Walter Foster, formerly manager of the Lyric Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., is now at Olean, Pa., and in a recent letter reported that business was on the boom in that town. Mr. Foster is manager of Haven's Theatre in Olean. He is using seven reels at each show.

The rights for the Leading Players' production, "The Sparrow," featuring Mlle. Polaire, have been purchased by Edwards and Zetler, of Dayton, Ohio, for Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana.

Matty Roubert, who is being featured in the Universal Boy series, narrowly escaped death while a forthcoming release of that series was being filmed at Greenwood Village, N. J. The accident occurred in an old mill, when a rickety staircase gave way under the combined weight of Matty and a "Raffles." They fell into the mill stream below, but luckily neither was injured.

"The $5,000,000 Counterfeiting Plot," in which Detective William J. Burns appears in his original role, has scored such a success at the New York Theatre that William Morris has arranged with the Dramascope Company to prolong the engagement of the picture.

It began its second week with Sunday, August 16.

This picture is the first to reproduce actual details of a famous criminal case, and was staged under the personal direction of William J. Burns. It is in six parts and contains six hundred scenes laid at the Treasury Department, Washington, Moyamensing Prison, Philadelphia, Lancaster and New York City.

Eleanor Blanchard, with twelve years' experience on the legitimate stage and five years before the camera, is the latest addition to the Lubin forces. Miss Blanchard, besides being an accomplished character actress, is a competent scenario writer.

ELEANOR BLANCHARD

Her specialty is comedy of the Dicken's type, both in writing and acting. She will enter the company directed by Col. Joe Smiley and will appear in many of the Lubin special features.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company recently installed a style R motion picture orchestra in the American Theatre, Zanesville, Ohio.

"A REAL MOVING PICTURE FROM LIFE"
One of the Imperial Motion Picture Company's Animated Songs for July.

A private exhibition of the latest release of the Life Photo Film Corporation, "Northern Lights," adapted from the stage play by Edward Barbour and William Harkins, Jr., was given at the American Theatre, New York City, on Friday, Aug. 7.

Exhibitors, state right buyers and producers received a novel invitation to attend the performance in the form of a cardboard Indian tepee announcement.

Rae Ford is one of the strong members of the cast of "At the Old Cross Roads," which is now being produced by the Select Photo Play Productions Company.

She appeared last season in the production of "Smashing the Vice Trust."

Under the alert management of Paul E. Glase the motion picture department of the Reading "News-Times," is using a page and a half of photodrama news, profusely illustrated.

The growing importance of films as a necessary form of amusement in the life of the people to-day in this country is fully exemplified in instances of this kind. A page devoted to the silent drama is generally considered liberal, but the addition of another half page indicates a significant trend of the demands of public opinion, which Mr. Glase was keen enough to realize.

A motion picture of the late Mrs. Woodrow Wilson has been presented to the President by the Gaumont Company. The picture shows Mrs. Wilson and her youngest daughter, Mrs. Francis B. Sayre, on their vacation in New England last summer, and is the same picture which was shown in the Mutual Weekly No. 85.

The New England rights of the Leading Players' pictures, "The Gap of Death" and "The Sparrow" and a Features Ideal production entitled "By Power of Attorney" have been purchased by the Allen Feature Film Corporation.

"The Last Volunteer," an Eclectic war feature, has been chosen to open the new Hammerstein Opera House at Lexington avenue and Fiftieth street, New York, on August 21. It will be shown for the entire week.

John Ince, the Lubin director, may soon have the honor of being called an inventor. A Washington patent lawyer has told Mr. Ince that his contrivance for manipulating window shades by a system of weights and cords inside the sash, controlled by a push button instead of the usual string, will soon become a salable proposition.

Under the direction of Wallace Kerrigan, the work of removing Universal City from its temporary location a few miles outside of Hollywood, California, to its new and permanent location is going forward with a rush. The buildings of the temporary city are being razed to the ground, loaded on big auto trucks and wagons and hurried over two miles of mountain road to the new ranch.

The process of demolishing the old city and building up the new has only been under way a week, but is almost near completion.

In an eight-page booklet recently issued by Warner's Features, Inc., relating the story of "Across the Border," the thrilling Mexican war drama, produced by the Colorado Motion Picture Company, appears a tribute to the memory of Grace McHugh, the beautiful and talented actress who lost her life in a most tragic manner while acting before the camera for one of the important scenes of this unusual photoplay.

The Hearst-Selig Pictorial Company has appointed Tracy Mathewson, a photographer on the staff of the "Atlanta Georgian," as its Southern representative. He will begin his duties at once, but continuing his connection with newspaper photography.

The Ramo Company have moved to its new studio located at Flushing, L. I. Before leaving the old studio at 102 West 101st street, Mr. Cobb realized the uselessness of retaining a stock company for feature work and advised the elimination of all the stock employees. George Gebhart and John Arnold were the only two retained, holding the respective positions of chief director and camera expert.

Francelia Billington, one time with the Kalem Company, and later with Thanhouser, but now with the Reliance and Majestic forces, is an exceptionally talented actress and has earned great fame on the screen.

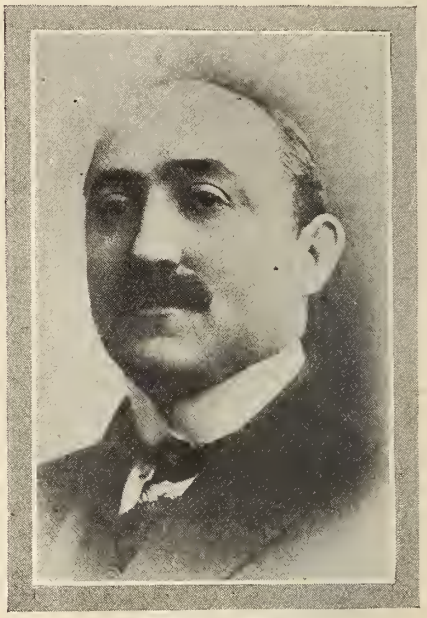
FRANCELIA BILLINGTON

Among the many parts that she has played her interpretations of Spanish girls are perhaps the best known. Her most recent appearances are in "The Saving Flame" and "Turned Back."

Manager Harry Graham, of the Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee, put over another live one recently when he received considerable publicity for himself and his house in an interview published in one of the morning papers in which he discussed the possibility of the picture houses closing through inability of the importers to obtain any more carbons from Germany or Austria. The papers played up the story very well and it got the motion picture fans greatly interested.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company has just installed a style G motion-picture orchestra in the Lyric Theatre, Dyersburg, Tenn., which is owned by F. H. Shepard.

J. Wild, sales manager of the Gaumont Company, is enjoying a well-earned vacation at Lake George, N. Y., where he is resting up to get in fighting trim for the big business he expects his company will engage in next fall, on the opening of the rush in motion pictures predicted for that season.



The World Film Corporation has opened an office in Montreal at 282 St. Catherine street, West, with R. S. Bell, formerly of the Toronto branch, in charge.

George Kleine recently had a government marshal seize a spurious print of "The Gold Beetle," a four-part subject which a concern called the Quality Feature Film Company was offering to New York theatres. The prints were found at the Dixie Theatre, 963 Prospect avenue, New York City. In order that the exhibitor might be put to no unnecessary trouble, another show was hastily arranged in its place.

The Parkland Theatre in Louisville, Ky., owned and operated by the Rio Realty Company, has been furnished with a style F motion-picture orchestra, manufactured by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company.

Sol Lesser, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, has purchased the rights of the Leading Players' feature, "The Lunatics," for eleven western states and has also signed a contract for the Eclair Scientia subjects, for one year.

According to the announcement elsewhere, in the advertising pages, letters have been sent by William Fox, president of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, to manufacturers, exchange men and exhibitors throughout the United States, for the purpose of urging them to organize a board of trade.

The meeting is called for August 29, at the Hotel McAlpin, Thirty-fourth street and Broadway, New York City.

Mr. Fox, whose vigorous personality has stamped itself upon the film business and has gained him a reputation for forceful, original methods as an organizer, has matured plans for a campaign which he considers national in scope and effect.

(Imp-Universal—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

KING BAGGOT is popular from coast to coast, and to see him in a picture of this excellent calibre supported by a capable cast hardly the less well known, with Leah Baird playing opposite the well-known star, is indeed a pleasure. Frank Smith, John Ridgeway, William Welsh, Howard Crampton, C. J. Burbridge and Mrs. Allan Walker render admirable support.

Perhaps one of the most entertaining stories is that in which an honest man is seen fighting against a corrupt political ring, and finally after a great struggle coming out triumphant.

There is, of course, a love story and a very pretty one too. The corrupt lobbyists employ a woman to deflect Senator Jim from the "straight and narrow path," but they do not reckon on her falling in love with the man, which she does, and even that, their last attempt to win him to their forces is unsuccessful.

A note of keen human interest is struck when one sees the trusting small town men who elected Jim as their representative, gathered around the country store, at first praising his policy, then censuring him for giving in to the dishonest politicians and finally cheering him, on his promise to do the right thing.

The photography is good in all the reels. Not many scenes appear, but a change of scene is not necessary, so absorbing is the action.

"SACRIFICIAL FIRES"

(Balboa—Box Office Attractions—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture is somewhat similar to "Madame Butterfly," differing only in the conclusion of the story. Such a plot has been developed upon the screen a number of times, yet it seems that the people will never tire of such subjects, especially if they are treated in the careful manner that marks this production.

The story is one of splendid heart interest, and although the picture contains little action, the story is enough to warrant the closest attention. Perhaps the whole thing could be condensed and the beauty and charm of the story would still remain uppermost, but even as it is, it is a worthy three-reel feature.

The scenes, which were laid in California and are supposed to take place in Japan, are exceptionally beautiful, and as usual in these pictures, the photography is excellent. The double exposures are good, but could be improved upon.

The cast consists of Henry King as Dick Matthews, the young American who, while in Japan, falls in love with and marries a Japanese girl, Belle Bennet. He forsakes her and leaves for America and becomes greatly attached to an American girl, Madeline Pardee. But vengeance is meted out to him for his cruel desertion in a just manner.

RUSH TO SEE FILM TRYOUTS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

New Orleans, Aug. 19.

NEW ORLEANS motion picture fans are threatening to give the night policemen at the corner of Canal and Bourbon streets a job now that they have discovered that all of the films used by the Fichtenberg syndicate are now being tried out on certain nights at the Plaza Theatre before being presented to the public.

At first confined to the employees of the firm and a few picture men, a number of the devotees of the film have learned of the tryouts and are now seeking admission. The Fichtenberg management finds that this careful preliminary survey of the film, which is made at the conclusion of the night performances, not only prevents the showing of an inferior film, but familiarizes the employees of the various houses with the productions.

"THE LION OF VENICE"

(Kleine—Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MOST productions dealing with the mediaeval period rely to a large extent on the costumes and scenery to carry them through and the plot is developed with little coherence and unity. But in "The Lion of Venice," a picture made by the Ambrosio Company, such is not the case. This does not mean that the costumes and stage settings have been neglected—indeed, they are most gorgeous and are supplemented by excellent photography—but the interest and excitement aroused by the story is unusual.

THE CAPTAIN'S FAREWELL

The drama is well produced, well constructed and will bear comparison with the best of screen productions. There is not a dull moment in the entire four thousand nine hundred feet, and the spectator realizes all the time that he is witnessing a superior spectacle.

The greater part of the action takes place in Venice, and the beautiful canals and buildings of this ancient city, built on the islands, are shown off with unusual clearness and beauty by excellent camera work, and form a most striking background to the always absorbing tale.

Nor have the graceful gondolas been at all neglected; they are seen plying to and fro in many of the scenes.

The costumes that all the actors and actresses wear conform exactly with those, which history tells us, were worn in the fifteenth century. And no onlookers appear in any of the scenes to mar them with modernism, as certain streets and the Grand Canal were cleared especially by order of the city while the picture was in progress.

The pretty story that the picture tells in an absorbing way will not fail to arouse the interest of the most indifferent. It relates how a captain in the Venetian navy lost his sweetheart through the selfish desire of one of the city council to make her his wife.

The captain is then exiled on a trumped up charge, but he returns with a band of followers and saves the day for the Venetians in a battle with the Turks, in which his rival loses his life; but not until a reconciliation has taken place and he has joined the hands of his wife and her true lover.

FILM FETES A SOCIETY FAD IN NEW HAVEN

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 20.

MOTION pictures at fashionable lawn- and house-parties are the rage in this city, and hardly a week passes without an affair at which the photoplay is featured. Wealthy people in the neighboring towns are adopting the fad now, and there is promise that the germ will travel even farther.

"CREATURES OF CLAY"

(Hepworth—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

PERHAPS there are some men who will go to the dogs because they have been jilted by a woman. At any rate, this is what happens in this picture to a young man of good family and seemingly of good character.

This sounds like a fearfully melodramatic theme, and it has been used for such purposes, but decked out in British respectability of the higher class, with dinner coats and full dress and hunting parties and tea parties, this phase receives only the slightest emphasis. In fact, it is almost entirely gotten rid of by the intelligent and capable acting of a strong cast.

The story will come nearest home to those who have a fondness for sentimentality. The fate of the poor boy whose life is ruined because the woman he loved married his friend, his gradual descent through dissipation until he lands in a gang of thieves, seems very hard.

But when he redeems himself by taking a theft upon his own shoulders that the woman committed, and then has the courage to end his worthless existence by his own hand, we are deeply and visibly moved. All of this, probably, sounds exaggerated and unreal. It is the art of the actors that gives reality to characters, which but for their convincing delineations would seem singularly unnatural, exaggerated and puppet-like.

But actors, no matter how great their art, cannot make everything alive and plausible in terms of human character. The career of the jilted youth seems forced to meet the exigencies of the story. His turning up in his own parents' home and taking the blame for the stealing of the necklace makes a wonderfully powerful and intense situation, but is it consistent?

Would he have gone to his own parents' home for robbery, granted that he has been brought up as he has, having a love for his mother, and showing by the friends he had that he was once a manly and decent young fellow? And would the mere throwing over by a woman have led such a man to the bottom of the ladder so precipitately?

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

AGAIN we sympathize and weep over the pathetic plight of poor old Uncle Tom. This story has brought the comfort of tears to thousands and thousands and still it seems to hold its own, even though the conditions that it condemned so honestly and yet so inaccurately have passed away. But the reality and humanity of Uncle Tom will live for many days to come, and motion pictures will be the means of prolonging the life of the story.

The scenario writer has accomplished all that he set out to do in making Mrs. Stowe's novel into a motion picture play, and the consequence is that we have it all there, the frightful cruelty and tragedy that overtook the poor slave after the death of his kind-hearted Southern master, without the need of the imagination to soften some of the falsity that Mrs. Stowe inadvertently inserted.

None of the soul-stirring scenes of the book have been omitted. Accordingly the cast is a very large one, but on the whole it is surprisingly capable. Uncle Tom, the faithful, kind-hearted, religious old darkey, is the dominating figure in every scene in which he appears, and therefore of the whole picture. He is impersonated by a colored man, Sam Lucas, and he fulfills every requirement of the part. He does not overact, although the religious fervor and the unselfishness of the old man make the temptation very great.

No complaint can be raised against the manner in which the production has been made into films. The ante-bellum Kentucky, with its white-pillared houses and log cabins for the slaves, the great clumsy riverboats that plied the Ohio in those days, even the frock coats and top hats of the men and the hooped skirts and tight bodices of the women, have been carefully brought before the searching eye of the camera, and yet not a blemish appears in the externals to mar the true historical atmosphere. All of the scenes are thrown upon the screen in soft, rich tones that are very pleasing to the eye.

It must be admitted that this story is really better in motion pictures than as a novel or on the stage. On the stage the horror of lashings and bloodhounds and the coarse, brutal words of the hard-hearted master are too much for even the most devoted lover of melodrama; the preachifying and the random episodes of the novel are eliminated, and the photoplay embodies only a straightforward story of the fortunes of Uncle Tom. The improvement ought to make this film go well with the public, even though slavery is past and the rancor and the hard feeling that it engendered have been laid aside.

There is no danger of this film reviving any of these feelings, because one can view the pictures with calmness and with thankfulness that these scenes belong to a time that is past.

"NICK WINTER AND THE LOST PRINCE"

(Eclectic—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A COMEDY drama in which a mystery house with sliding panels, trap doors, false furniture and an underground cellar are utilized to their greatest possible extent to mystify the audience and create a burning desire in their minds to learn the finale of the picture.

At the outset one expects to see a drama, but as soon as Nick Winter, the famous detective, is introduced all suspicions of it being of this variety are vanquished, although at times when Nick is not on the scene, it takes the shape of a drama.

In this picture the clever detective locates a lost Prince who is held captive by two adventuresses, and restores him to his father. The two girls are then locked up by order of the king, and then Nick aids in their escape.

This picture will amuse most audiences who care for this kind of comedy. Not much rapid action appears, but it is truly humorous in parts. The photography is of a high grade.

COMPLAIN OF NEWSPAPER ATTACKS

Special to The Motion Picture News

Elizabeth, N. J., Aug. 20.

Local managers of motion-picture houses are considerably aroused by a story published, on June 4, by the Elizabeth Daily Journal, a paper which they say has always discriminated against them, by featuring articles detrimental to their interests. The last story printed was an alleged review of conditions in all of the motion-picture houses in the city, but in reality it was a veiled plea for state censorship.

As a result of the stand which this paper has taken, the manager of one of the largest theatres in the city has cut down his advertising to a minimum and now the advertising manager of the publication is working overtime endeavoring to explain things.

INSISTS UPON FULL OBSERVANCE OF CENSOR LAW

H. E. Vestal, chairman of the Ohio Board of Censors, states that by August 18, leaders for all films that have been censored up to that date will have been shipped, and further advises that it is the sense of the censor board and the Industrial Commission of Ohio that on and after September 1, no films should be shown in the state of Ohio unless they be shown in full compliance with every requirement of the censor law.

In other words, the commission feels that all causes for delay being past, there can exist no reason whatever why full enforcement of the law shall not be insisted upon.

The Operator's Exchange

EXPERIENCES EXTRAORDINARY

When Brother Earl Rossman, the present manager of the New York Theatre, decided to go into the picture business several years ago, he determined to make a scientific study of the entire industry.

To say that he bas succeeded in his desires, and proven himself a live-wire exhibitor, it is only necessary to point to the greatly increased attendance since his arrival at the New York Theatre.

The following is vouched for Brother Rossman, as having been experienced by him some time ago, when he went out on the road as operator for the Kinemacolor Company, then playing one-night stands.

The operator, immediately on bis arrival at a theatre, naturally inquires as to the amount and kind of electric current he must use, as it is essential that a steady, intense light be secured to show tbe Kinemacolor pictures at their best.

In this particular case the local electrician, while a good fellow, seemed to know little of his position, and the following conversation took place, with Rossman doing the questioning:

"What kind of current have you got, alternating or direct?"

"Oh, any kind you want; we're not particular."

"I mean have you A. C. or D. C.?" (meaning alternating or direct).

Not to be phased, the local man replied:

"We can give you B. C. & Q. if necessary."

Rossman's reply is better imagined than described, for the language was bardly polite, hut he impressed upon the near-electrician that a direct and sane reply was necessary, as it took several hours to install the delicate machinery to properly display these natural color motion pictures.

Being pressed for an answer, tbe local man finally decided that the theatre supplied direct current.

Taking for granted that the man knew what he was talking ahout, Rossman arranged his machine and motors for this current, and his feelings can be imagined when, on having tbe current turned on, instead of direct it was alternating.

Again his language must be imagined (we don't puhlish that kind of talk) instead of told, when he taxed the house electrician with his error, but that worthy, with an intensely serious expression on his face said:

"Well, I thought it was direct, for the current came direct from the switchhoard."

MANHATTAN LIGHTS

It is reported that the Carnegie Lyceum will open on Monday, August 10, with "The Christian."

While this is not positive, we consider tbat tbis news comes from an authentic source, and it is nearly positive that Brother Al Polen will be the operator in charge.

I am given to understand tbat Brother Dan Sheehan has been appointed an admiral in the Connemara navy. The only thing that the U. S. operator can complain ahout in the present crisis is that the foreign operator is not interested.

Brother Chris Krogh has a chance of heing delayed in his return from Europe as he is now on a visit to his native land. I helieve that he is now in Copenhagen, Denmark, and with things in their present state he has a very poor chance of getting back until tbe war is over.

Speaking of war, Brotber R. Dablman has been missing for several days, and we have about given up bope of ever seeing bim again. Of course I am not sure that he has enlisted in the Bohannigan navy, but he always was very enthusiastic, when it came to an argument.

Brother B. A. Spellbring is in town for a few days, but I have not seen him as yet, although I am informed that he has done me the bonor to call at tbe office of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

However, I am sure that he will not leave town without a lengthy visit to the office of the only union trade journal in the amusement field.

AN OPERATOR'S TIP TO EXHIBITORS

Not that the writer is desirous of criticising those who do not deserve it, nor that he would try to impress the exhibitor that he is a learned scholar in tbe art of management; hut ratber let this be a heart to heart talk hetween operator and exhibitor for the better understanding of both.

Having been employed as an operator for the last eleven years I fully helieve that I have worked under all sorts of conditions, and frankly speaking, Mr. Exhibitor, it hehooves me to thank you generally for trying to make connections better for the operator.

Don't begrudge your operator a gear, a little fresh air, or a new hroom tbat he may keep his workshop clean.

Another thing that I should wisb to thank you for, is your "awakening."

You are beginning to realize that it does not pay to hire the young fellow of fifteen or sixteen years to operate your macbines.

You will find in the long run that it is better to add a few dollars to your payroll and get results, for results bring receipts, and receipts hring satisfaction.

Yours truly,
(Signed) R. VINTON MOULTON,
Detroit, Mich.

The Embryo Operator

While standing in front of the Candler Building the other evening, I heard a conversation that should be of interest to all who are interested in the motion picture business, in even the most remote way.

This conversation took place between the students of one of the more or less well-known schools which is located in the said building.

Two of the parties were of undoubted Italian lineage, while the other two were of some other nationality.

One asserted that he would apply for his examination for license in a day or so, and the other, who appeared to think himself further advanced, offered to instruct him to the best of his ability.

After a lengthy discussion as to the voltage, amperage and ohms of different potentials, the writer, who has had more or less experience, could not make head or tail of the discussion, and therefore turned his attention to another student, who was standing on the other side.

This man stated that he had been out of work for some time, and having his attention called to an "ad" on the sporting page of a certain daily paper, in which it was said that operating jobs were going begging, he had applied at this school and had been taken in.

Of course he had been taken in, but to what an extent he did not realize, and I thought it best to let him glory in his ignorance, so did not tell him of P. T. Barnum's old maxim.

He said that the promoter of the school had shown him letters, each day, signed by (or purporting to be signed by) the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, in which it was stated that one or more graduates of this school had received their licenses on certain recent dates. And all this in spite of the fact that one of the Board of Examiners had assured yours truly that only two applicants had passed in the last two weeks, out of 120 examined!

W. D. CHANEY.

TEXAS AWAKENS

The following is the resolution of the Texas State Federation of Labor:

"Believing that the conditions are such that the time has arrived wherehy it has hecome necessary for and requires the enactment of such State laws and city ordinances as will regulate the operation, maintenance and protection for the patrons of all places of amusement and theatres where motion picture and projection machines are installed and operated by unskilled and child labor, for at the present time the only regulations, with few exceptions, are that as provided hy the State Board Underwriters' code, which is grossly violated in many places, and by which paying a high rate of insurance, allows such places to operate, tberehy does not place any value on the human life at all; the motion picture husiness has also provided an open field for the employment of child labor and also an infringement upon the fifty-four bour law of this State, and in many instances the sanitary conditions are such that would greatly surprise the puhlic. Therefore, we earnestly appeal to the delegates assemhled, that the incoming Legislative Committee be asked to have enacted the following laws which we believe will prove of benefit to the public in general; therefore he it

Resolved, That we helieve the handling of motion picture and projection machines is work tbat requires operators of care, ability and skill in order to safeguard and protect the lives of the patrons of all places of amusement and theatres where sucb machines are installed, therefore we urge the passage of such laws that no person under the age of twenty-one years of age shall be allowed to operate or work in any booth where such machines are installed, and a penalty be fixed for such managers or owners who violate tbe same. We would ask that tbe Massachusetts laws he referred to.

Resolved, That tbe manner in which the motion picture business is conducted at the prescnt time compels long hours of work and close and solitary confinement for such persons as operators, and owing to the buildings and hooths not being properly arranged for ventilation and the congestion of fumes and odors; therefore, we urge the passage of such laws making tbat will constitute eight hours a day's work for operators, and that booths be constructed of such height, width and length, witb proper ventilation, as will allow comfort to the operator and supply a sufficient current of fresh air at all times.

Resolved, That to assure the patrons where such machines are operated that tbeir protection is being guarded, that no person shall be allowed to operate such machines until he has passed a satisfactory examination before the city electrical inspector or city fire marshal, demonstrating bis ability and fitness to operate sucb machine, they to furnish him with a certificate, the same properly signed by them, which certificate shall he hung in a conspicuous place where employed."

MANHATTAN MEANDERINGS

Brother Fred Snyder has just returned from his vacation, which he spent at Green Lake.

I, for one, think that Brother Snyder was very lucky, inasmuch as it was an entirely premeditated vacation. And I heg to assure you that I have not had a voluntary vacation in the last ten years.

Hammerstein's Lexington Avenue Opera House is scheduled to open on Friday, August 21, hut so far as I can find out the operator has not heen decided on as yet.

NEW YORK STATE NOTES

The Madison Theatre, Oneida, N. Y., will open under new management in about tbree weeks, showing only the very best bigh-class features. It will be managed hy Skinner, Hathway and Scadlon, of Utica. Local 556 welcomes Brotber Skinner, who is to operate the machines.

Brother John Kennedy, of the Gem Tbeatre, bas returned from his vacation.

Brother Crandall, THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, is going to the New York State A. F. of L. convention at Schenectady,

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Aug. 17.

Carlisle Blackwell, who recently arrived here from New York, where he was with the Famous Players, has lost no time in getting busy in producing. Mr. Blackwell has leased the Norbig studio on Allesandro street, formerly used by Bosworth, Inc., and the Famous Players, and is busy filming a four-reel picture, "The Key to Yesterday." The company spent last week at Pine Ridge, where the exteriors will be made.

G. P. Hamilton, managing director and president of the Albuquerque Motion Picture Company, is on a business trip to New York City, and during his absence the leading woman and scenario editor of the company, Dot Farley, is taking a vacation. Archer McMackin is continuing with the production of short comedies.

War Has No Effect on Production

The war clouds overshadowing Europe have not so far affected production at the various Los Angeles studios, and all companies and directors are continuing with their work as though peace reigned supreme. In the shipment of still pictures, for agents of companies in Europe, all are addressed to the New York offices of the company, instead of direct to Europe, as usual.

Donald Crisp and Dorothy Gish are taking the leading parts in a drama, "The Warning," written by Russell E. Smith. The pictures will show the experiences of a country girl coming to a city in search of excitement. Mr. Crisp will direct the production as well as play an important part.

The Jack Adolfi producing company at the Reliance studio is busy with the production of a two-reel detective story to be released under the title of "Broken Nose Bailey." Sam De Grass plays the part of the detective and is supported by Francelia Billington, Eugene Pallette and others.

When a stranger, working extra recently for a Majestic company, received a telegram announcing the serious illness of his father at San Francisco, Director Donald Crisp played the part of the "angel" and loaned the young man twenty-five to make the trip. Since then he has not heard from the man.

Roller Skate Winner Gets Wife

Fred Balshofer, president of the Sterling Motion Picture Company, is home from a business trip to New Yorrk. No change in production has been announced for the present and the two releases of the company, weekly, will be continued through the Universal program.

Peggy Hart, the athletie New York school teacher, who is leading woman for the P. C. Hartigan Comedy Company, making negative for Pathé, led a lively chase last week in the picture "Love and Skates."

The exteriors for this were made at West Lake Park, Los Angeles. The two rivals for Miss Hart's hand in marriage were to decide who should win her by a contest on roller skates, the first to catch her to be the winner. The ehase started at the top of a steep hill just north of the park, and ended when the two rivals, together with the Hartigan police force, unable to stop or turn at the edge of the water, dashed into the lake.

Hundreds of people spending the afternoon in the park were photographed when the picture was taken.

Sterling Comedy a Laugh-Maker

Charles Hagenios, scenario editor for the Sterling company, has just finished a one-reel comedy, "The Tale of a Hat," produced by Dutch comedians, eops and tramps. Emma Clifton is playing the lead and spends a dreadful day while preventing the sheriff from foreclosing a mortgage, while her husband—of the film—brings the money to satisfy the creditor.

Exteriors were made at San Pedro harbor, where a fleeing tramp ran off the end of the Salt Lake Railroad turntable. It's to be a regular Sterling laugh-maker.

Lloyd Ingraham, Rex Universal company, is producing a society drama, "A Modern Melnotte," which will consist of two reels. Included in the east are Ray Galliger, Edna Maison, Bert Hadley, until recently with the Glendale Kalem company, and others. The settings for this production are all specially made from designs by Harry Weil, assistant to Director Ingraham.

James Dayton, scenario editor of the Hollywood west coast studio, will in all probability now produce only motor dramas, comedies, and maybe tragedies. He has just purchased a Chalmers-Six.

Mr. Dayton believes in always paving the way for the climax—as his stories show—and before he bought the car he built the garage, fitted with sleeping quarters for the chaffeur, a billiard room, and connected with his home at 1156 West Seventy-seventh avenue by a beautiful pergola.

"What's His Name" Shown to Players

Charles Richman, star of the original production of the George Broadhurst play, "Bought and Paid For," and a number of other productions, is at the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play studio playing the role made famous by William T. Hodge in the film version of "The Man from Home," from the novel by Booth Tarkington. Director General Cecil de Mille is giving this production his personal attention. Theodore Roberts has been cast for the part of the Grand Duke for this pieture.

Last Friday evening the print of "What's His Name," in which Max Figman and Lolita Robertson played the leads, was projected at the Lasky studio for the benefit of the actors, actresses, and employes of the studio. In this the chareters are introduced by three sheet lithographs, and the actor or actress steps off the billboard and walks forward and bows to the audience.

Frank Lloyd, who has been playing heavies for the Universal Special Feature Company, under the direction of Otis Turner, has taken up the work of directing in the absence of Mr. Turner.

All leading people of the West Coast Universal studios have received letters from A. Dresner, manager of the Washington Branch of the Internation Film Company, written in behalf of Fulton Brylawski and Jenifer Bluding, in charge of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of District of Columbia, inviting the actors and actresses to attend the ball and banquet given by the league on Saturday evening October 31, at the expense of the exhibitors.

Many of the office and scenario people hope to go as proxies, as the film favorities will be too busy to leave at that time.

Phillip Walsh Badly Hurt

Phillip Walsh of the Universal scenario department was run down by an automobile last Saturday evening while going to his home, and has since been in a local hospital in a critical condition.

It is estimated that it will require four weeks more for the wardrobe department of the Selig Polyscope Company's plant to prepare the costumes for the production of the Harold MacGrath story, "The Carpet of Bagdad."

Work on the numerous buildings for the Selig Jungle Zoo, at 3800 Mission road, is progressing as rapidly as possible, but it will be impossible to complete the grounds and all decorations by September 1, the date the company desired to open the Zoo to the public.

All of the animal buildings have been completed, and now a dance hall, 75 x 225 feet, with a dancing floor 50 by 150, is being built. The landscape gardeners are at work converting the mountain sides into lawns and flower gardens, and Carlos Romanelli, the Florence sculptor, and aids, will have the numerous animal groups ready to place in position within the next two weeks.

Tried to Get Pictures of Savages

Bud Duncan, comedian formerly with the Biograph Western Company and the Fred Mace Company, who has been at El Tiburon Island, off the coast of the Peninsula of California for the past five months, trying to secure motion pictures of the savage Indian tribes, who a few years ago killed several members of a hunting party, has returned to Los Angeles without pictures.

He is now with the Marshall Neilan Kalem Company. Mr. Duncan experienced many hardships on the trip, and in several instances was in danger of losing his life.

Phillips Smalley and Lois Webber, Mrs. Smalley, last week began the production of their first picture for Bosworth, Inc.

This will consist of one reel and is from a scenario by Lois Webber, dealing with a diplomatic situation which terminates with all leading characters being exposed for their treachery to their government. They escape in various ways—auto, launch, airship, etc. Courtenay Foote, formerly with the Vitagraph Company, will play leads with the company. One of the first big pictures to be produced by this company will be "The Hypocrite."

Incorporation papers have been filed by the Los Angeles Film Corporation, with a capital stock of $100,000, of which Thomas Nash is president and A. E. Rudell is secretary, treasurer and manager. The newly organized company took over all property of the Zodiac Film Manufacturing Company, with studio, offices and laboratory at 147 North Hill street.

This studio is the home of the Hartigan Comedy Company, making negative for Pathé, the Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Compan, the D. R. Jungle Picture Company, the Nash Animal Picture Company, Japanese American Film Company, and the Gouwey Feature Films Company. It was also used by the Famous Players and the Bosworth, Inc., companies during the past few months.

Leon D. Kent, a former director and leading actor of the Western Lubin Producing Company, at the Pasadena avenue studio, who has been with the U. S. Film Company, near San Diego, for the past six months producing three reel features, is again with Capt. Wilbur Melville, and this week began the production of a three-reel picture, "In the Dragon's Claws." The scenario is by Edward Rinehart, and the scenes are laid in China during the Boxer uprising. Photographs of the lobby and parlors of the Trafalgar hotel in Pekin have been secured and sets will be made to represent these scenes. In the cast will be L. C. Shumway, Melvin Mayo, and Miss Lucile Young.

"Supes" Leave for the War

Twenty Russians and fourteen Serbs, who have been employed at the Universal City studio as laborers and Cossacks, have as result of the rumors of war, departed for New York with the intention of embarking for their native lands.

Director Charles Giblyn and members of his producing company at the Hollywood Universal studio viewed the third Francois Villon series picture at the studio projecting room, and it was sent to the New York laboratories. Work was begun last week on the last of this series, from the stories of George Bronson Howard, appearing in the "Century Magazine," the title of which is "The Ninety Black Boxes."

Robert Leonard and his company of Rex players are at Pine Crest, San Bernardino County, making north woods pictures.

H. B. Warner and Miss Reta Stanwood, who were here to play leads in the filming of "The Ghost Breaker," by the Jesse Lasky players, have departed for New York City, taking with them the negative film and a positive print.

Director-General Otis Turner has completed the four-reel picture from the story, "Open Shutters," by Clara Louise Burnham. The scenario is by Ruth Anne Baldwin.

Arthur Mackley, director at Majestie studio, is now playing the lead and directing the production of a stirring Western drama in "The Sheriff's Choice." Mackley, as the father, is eleeted sheriff of a western county, and among his first duties is that of capturing his son, who, unknown to his father, had become a hardened outlaw. A forty-foot fall from a eliff is one of the thrills of the piece.

Gabriel Pollock, for several years scenic artist for the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago studio, has been transferred to the Los Angeles studios, as the result of elosing the Chicago producing studio. He is now planning the scencs for the production of "The Carpet from Bagdad."

Majestie director W. J. Cabanne is now filming "A Saved Illusion" in which a miniature portrait in a watch plays an important part. Robert Harron and W. A. Lawrence play the leading parts.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"At the End of the Rope." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 12.)—A gripping story of Indian attacks, treachery, a lost child, and a father roaming wild and restored by a blow, that will meet with the approval of all those who have a zest for adventure and heroism.

"Cairo." (Pathé. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 18.)—On the same reel with "Uriage and Its Vicinity." A hird's-eye view gives the observer an excellent idea of the size of this ancient city. The tombs of the Khalifs, and the ancient huildings near trolley tracks, the barracks and the English section of the city show how far the city has advanced of late.

"Uriage and Its Vicinity." (Pathé. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 18.)—On the same reel with "Cairo." This is a colored picture, and the beautiful waterfalls and landscapes that the cameraman has caught of this French town are enough to cause this half-reel to he ranked with the best of scenics.

"The Downward Path." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 12.)—The wayward son drama again. It attempts to enforce a warning and pretends to be very moral and righteous, but it is really the reverse. It enlists our sympathy with crooks, if at all, and allows a burglar to go scot free because his paltry crime of housebreaking is forgotten.

"The Family Record." (Selig. Wed., Aug. 12.)—A sort of combined "Robinson Crusoe" and "Enoch Arden" story, without the reality of either. It strikes a sentimental response in nearly every heart on account of the undying love of the whole man for the wife from whom he has heen separated.

"The New Stenographer." (Vitagraph. Wed., Aug. 12.)—This delightful comedy which was given silently on the stage of the Vitagraph Theatre is now issued as a picture with the same players, Flora Finch, Etienne Girardot, Hughie Mack, Wally Van, Lillian Walker and Albert Roccardi. The insistent wooing of the pretty substitute stenographer by the husiness partners and clerk is rich.

"The Fable of 'The Maneuvers of Joel and Father's Second Time on Earth.'" (Essanay. Wed., Aug. 12.)—The moral of this picture is to be careful to hring up the father that he may he grateful. But this is an ironical touch hy George Ade. The lesson is against ungrateful children, and shows how they often get the worst of it. Father gets hack his fortune from Joel, who has turned him out of the house, and with it he gets his second youth and marries a pretty girl a few hours after.

"Latin Blood." (Luhin. Fri., Aug. 14.)—A drama of a gardener's love for the beautiful owner of the villa. She does not return his love, and his sister attempts to put his rival out of the way. But an error in transmission of notes causes the death of her own hrother.

"Meller Drammer." (Selig. Split reel. Fri., Aug. 14.)—A clever hurlesque on the old-time hlood-curdling, heart-throbhing melodrama, with the girl, the villain, the hero, and the forgiving parents—when the marriage license is produced. On the same reel with "The Day of the Dog."

"The Day of the Dog." (Selig. Split reel. Fri., Aug. 14.)—The old saying that "every dog has his day" realized. The dog is a fine specimen of the canine species and is well trained in his antics. But there is not much merriment to he derived, except when the hlast upset everyhody and everything.

"Polishing Up." (Vitagraph. Fri., Aug. 14.)—Whereas John Bunny and his wife, Flora Finch, indulge in personal criticisms of each other, they deck themselves out in their hest, and while Flora is turning the head of a young physician, John is having the time of his life with two young helles. When they all come face to face, the truth is obliged to come out, but since one is as had as the other, they must forgive and forget.

"A Gentleman of Leisure." (Essanay. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 14.)—He turns out to he of sterling qualities, although no one knew anything ahout him at first, and he gets the girl he loves when it is proven that he did not kidnap her sister. The many complications and uncertainties as to the outcome make the picture replete with interest.

"A Substitute for Pants." (Kalem. Fri., Aug. 14.)—A hrisk comedy with Ruth Roland, Marshal Nielan and John Brennan as the fun-makers. Ruth has two suitors, and the one who wins the election is to he awarded her dainty hand. The rival of the favored one resorts to conspiracy and fraud and takes the other's trousers away. But Ruth lends her riding skirt in time for him to rush in and save the day hy an eloquent appeal to the voters.

"They Bought a Boat." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 15.)—Presenting the amusing adventures of some land lubbers with an overloaded, unseagoing vessel that is ahout to sink in ten inches of water. This imminent danger causes a disastrous panic on hoard, and the crew, including the three hundred-pound cahin hoy, leaves the boat to its fate. Shown on the same reel with "The Puncture-Proof Sock."

"The Puncture-Proof Sock." (Luhin. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 15.)—Puncture-proof socks are an obsession with John Tomkins hecause he invented the precious article. He wears them and takes off his shoes every now and then to demonstrate their enduring qualities. This time he loses the shoe that he takes off and the search for it leads him into strange places. "They Bought a Boat" and this picture make a very funny reel.

"The Wheat and the Tares." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 15.)—An artificial story of the hardship worked by perjury. An innocent man goes to prison for a murder, and remains there until the dying confession of the guilty man releases him and enahles him to marry the daughter of the murdered man. Although the drama is somewhat forced, it is developed through several strong climaxes.

"Near Death's Door." (Kalem. Sat., Aug. 15.)—A very seasonable picture centered around a terrific blast in a part of some construction work that buries the hero and the girl he risks his life to save. They are dug out hefore life is extinct in their bodies, and by this act of heroism the man wins the right to marry the daughter of tbe head of the company.

"The District Attorney's Burglar." (Biograph. Sat., Aug. 15.)—An old motif decked out in fairly new surroundings to make a picture that is distinctly ahove the average. It deals with the sufferings of a wife neglected hy an engrossed husband, her means of finding pleasure and affection, and her final reconciliation with her husband.

"Broncho Billy Wins Out." (Essanay. Sat., Aug. 15.)—Broncho Billy always wins out, so this title does not tell us any more than we already know. Yet it speaks well for this popular hero that no one wishes him otherwise. He gets a wound and therehy the sympathy of the village schoolteacher. After that it is a short road to marriage, since pity is said to he akin to love.

"Nan's Victory." (Selig. Aug. 15.)—A conventional and false story that has little reality except what the motion picture has given it. It portrays the love of two women for one man, and shows the unloved one, after flying into a fit of frenzied jealousy when she sees the two in an embrace, rescuing the other one from a fire. This is utterly untrue to human nature, and the hest acting cannot make it seem real.

"An Innocent Delilah." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 17.)—The dramatic situation of the hetrayal of a man hy the woman he loves with its great possihilities for tense and strong acting forms the central scene in this play. The woman is innocent, and since the audience knows this, the dramatic irony keeps the interest alive.

"Tim, the Terror." (Biograph. Split reel. Mon., Aug. 17.)—The hoisterous and bullying antics of Tim end in self-denial and meekness when he meets the widow. He gives himself up so that the reward may go to her and pay off a mortgage that is getting her into trouhle with the deacon. Tim and not the deacon marries her. On the same reel with "A Game of Freeze-Out."

"A Game of Freeze-Out." (Biograph. Split reel. Mon., Aug. 17.)—Contrasting the warmth of true love and the coldness of a refrigerator. But it is a comedy and the youth that nearly freezes to death in the cold storage has been put there hy his rival. Then love is the panacea that revives his congealed spirits. On the same reel with "Tim, the Terror."

"The Speck on the Wall." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 17.)—Full of dramatic situations and the conclusion is resolved with considerahle analytical skill that leaves us doubting what the outcome will be until the very end. It is a good example of the deductive process picturized.

"Private Dennis Hogan." (Vitagraph. Mon., Aug. 17.)—Oftentimes the private in the ranks is capahle of the greatest devotion and self-sacrifice and heroism, but his deeds usually go unsung. This private gives up his life hecause his duty demands it. The joyful, huoyant nature of Dennis Hogan, even in the face of death, will brighten many hearts that are inclined to look too much on the dark side.

"The Black Signal." (Essanay. Tues., Aug., 18.)—A tense drama with plenty of exciting moments and situations that spring surprises upon us. The interest is well sustained to the end, the plotting not allowing anticipation of what is going to happen.

"Back to the Farm." (Luhin. Tues., Aug. 18.)—The adventures of Tom and Bob would he risqué if they were not such simpletons and so awfully innocent of guilt in the situations which they create when they come to town to visit their aunt and get in the wrong house. As it is, what happens to them is ludicrous and will cause inordinate laughter.

"If at First You Don't Succeed." (Selig. Tues., Aug. 18.)—This is good advice any time, hut it does not serve a didactic purpose in this instance. It serves for the title of a piece that illustrates how funny vain and successive attempts may become. Of course, success crowns the efforts of the unintentional fun-makers.

"The Mix-up at Murphy's." (Biograph. Split reel. Aug. 13.)—A somewhat commonplace comedy of mistaken identity. In costume of a tramp, a young man goes to a fancy dress ball at Mr. Murphy's and is arrested on suspicion. Anyone who would go to a costume ball as a tramp deserves to he arrested. On the same reel with "Curing Mr. Goodheart."

"Curing Mr. Goodheart." (Biograph. Split reel. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—The misfortunes of the ready helper are worked to death in this comedy. A little of the kind-hearted meddler is enough, hut when you pitch him over an embankment for disturhing a motion picture rehearsal, it seems that this is going to extreme lengths. On the same reel with "The Mix-up at Murphy's."

"Slippery Slim and His Tombstone." (Essanay. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—The irrepressihle Slippery Slim this time returns from the grave to Sophie and falls into her arms as usual. But he was not really dead and does not appear on the screen in spirit form. He pretended suicide to make Sophie sorry.

"The Horsethief." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—A touching story of how a father riding for a doctor was mistaken for a horsethief and saved by a girl just as he was about to he strung to the limh of a tree.

All is explained at the house when a bouncing baby is brought in. Whereupon the would-be executioners make up a purse for the baby.

"The Fable of the Two Mandolin Players and the Willing Performer." (Essanay. Wed., Aug. 19.)—One of the most delightful comedies seen in a long time, and shows unmistakably George Ade's keen sense of fun. Gus from St. Paul is the willing performer, and he leaves the two mandolin players far in the shade when it comes to courting.

"The Dreamer." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 19.)—A drama of lost love, full of tender and pathetic passages. The lover who loses but remains constant in his devotion is an artist and dreamer, and the girl is stolen from him by his older brother. The latter then becomes a heartless brute, turns brother and father out and deserts his wife. The dreamer reunites them, and buries his hope as he destroys the last emblem of his happier days.

"When a Woman's 40." (Selig. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 19.)—Lost illusions play a big part in this story of a woman who gives up love and everything that seem worth while in order to shine as a leader in society. This does not bring happiness and she sees in retrospect her life and the joy that might have been hers with the man she loves.

"Taken by Storm." (Vitagraph. Wed., Aug. 19.)—A pretty little comedy of the wife who has been forced into a marriage by main force, and then refuses to perform her wifely duties. But it is evident all along that she loves the manly fellow, and we know that she will sooner or later give in, as every wife should. And she does.

"The Decree of Destiny." (Biograph. Wed., Aug. 19.)—Mary Pickford in a rather forced and artificial story of old New Orleans. Two sisters love the same man, and it falls to the girl impersonated by Mary Pickford to resign her claim to him and to enter a convent.

"The Brand." (Kalem. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 31.)—The cruel stepmother drives her daughter into the reformatory and this stain hangs over the girl's head afterwards when she has found a good home as a governess and is loved by a wealthy young man. The secret comes out, but a letter reveals the girl's innocence.

"Nearly a Widow." (Edison. Mon., Aug. 24.)—Just a little domestic quarrel between husband and wife which ends pleasantly and furnishes amusement for all who like this variety of comedy. Little action appears, but the idea is good. Barry O'Moore and Sallie Crute are the principals.

"The Primitive Instinct." (Kalem. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 24.)—The originality of the scenario is the distinctive feature of this drama. It begins with a very common situation, but the developments leading from this are entirely new.

A woman finds herself the wife of a man entirely engrossed in his work and without time, apparently, to show any love for her and the child. When this becomes unbearable she decides to elope with an artist, but on finding that her husband has saved their child from burning by putting out a fire with his bare hands, she is saved from her moment of waywardness.

"The Counterfeiter's Plot." (Kalem. Sat., Aug. 25.)—Fascinating as the leader of the counterfeiters is, he loses the blacksmith's daughter when his true calling is disclosed and the gang arrested. The young horseshoer who has loved her all along then walks off with the pretty daughter.

"The Cave of Death." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 26.)—Princess Mona Darkfeather is the heroine, Unca, an Indian maid, and unselfishly saves the life of the man she loves, but who does not return her love. The picture is somewhat tedious and long drawn out, and the incident of Unca's sacrifice of her own life for her lover and his sweetheart is not as clear as it should be.

"When Men Wear Skirts." (Kalem. Fri., Aug. 28.)—This is a silly farce, reversing the order of nature and making men manicurists and women barbers, lovemakers and bold flirts. The topsy-turvy antics make one laugh heartily, but at the same time thankful that such a time has not yet come to pass.

"The Car of Death." (Kalem. Sat., Aug. 29.)—A railroad story written by E. W. Matlack and produced by J. P. McGowan. As in nearly all railroad pictures, the suspense is nerveracking until we are sure that a collision has been avoided this time by the heroism of the discharged schoolteacher.

"The Mender of Nets." (Biograph. Wed., Aug. 12.)—An old Mary Pickford picture that was released several years ago. Those familiar with the latest productions featuring this talented star will realize at once how much she has progressed in her art since that time, although she is delightfully fresh and winsome as the "mender of nets."

"Treasure Trove." (Edison. Sat., Aug. 29.)—How two young fortune-hunters find a chest of gold that had been lost when a Spanish vessel sank, and thus are enabled to sue for the hands of two pretty sisters, whom they meet on their vacation camp. The story is good enough, but the treasure was too easily located. A treacherous Spaniard lends some obstacles to their achievement.

"Buster and His Goat." (Edison. Split reel. Wed., Aug. 26.)—On the same reel with "The South African Mines." The first of the series of the Buster Brown pictures, adapted from R. F. Outcalf's originals. Naturally, the younger part of the audience will enjoy it more than adults, although the latter will find it humorous. Buster gets into a lot of trouble by dresing up a friend with whiskers. The goat doesn't like whiskers on anyone else but himself and creates quite a disturbance.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Well, Well." (Joker. Sat., Aug. 29.)—Rather a grotesque comedy, although it will be appreciated by those who enjoy the rough slapstick work. The old story of two rivals is worked out quite well by Max Asher, Bob Vernon and Louise Fazenda.

"The Little Autogomobile." (Joker. Wed., Aug. 26.)—An old story, but enacted cleverly by Ernest Shields and Bess Meredyth. The young man has a quarrel with his wife and has to hire a chorus girl to impersonate her while his father is visiting him. In the midst of it his real wife turns up and proceeds to beat everybody up. All ends well after the spectator has had a good laugh.

"A Race for a Life." (Sterling. Mon., Aug. 3.)—This story seems to be incomplete in plot. A girl saves a cowboy from death in a burning powder house by carrying him out. There is an excellent explosion registered.

"There Is a Destiny." (Victor. Mon., Aug. 24.)—Jack makes a bet he'll win the heart of the fisherman's daughter. He succeeds, but the father learns his identity and commands him to leave. Later when the old fisherman is suffering heart failure, Jack is the only one brave enough to go to the island through the storm and administer aid. Thus he wins the old man's favor and the girl. J. Warren Kerrigan, Vera Sisson and George Periolat play the leads.

"A Pearl of Great Price." (Eclair-Universal. Sun., Aug. 23.)—Austin neglects his wife for another woman. He buys a pearl for her which is sent with his note to his wife by mistake. She pretends to know nothing of the other woman. Austin sees her that night and returns to his wife, realizing that the other is worthless. His wife keeps her knowledge to herself, so that he may not be unhappy. All will enjoy this picture.

"The Strange Signal." (Frontier. Sun., Aug. 23.)—All because of his great love for a girl, Robert tries to rob his brother of his rightful inheritance. But in the end matters are straightened out. This drama is rather vague and one doesn't know what it's all about until the finale. A large cast appears, all of which play important parts.

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

"A Miner's Romance." (Nestor. Wed., Aug. 26.)—Murdock MacQuarrie plays the lead and, as usual, his work is of the best. The story is that of a miner who befriends a wounded man, who later proves false because they both love the same woman. He meets his just deserts. Some will consider the ending of the drama disagreeable.

"The Character Woman." (Eclair-Universal. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 26.)—A new and interesting story; nothing of the sensational appears. Julia Stuart, Belle Adair, Lindsey J. Hall and Helen Marten are the principals. Through the advice of the character woman of the road show the leading lady is dissuaded from her plan of running away with the owner, who is a man of had repute.

"Lost in a Studio." (Sterling. Thurs., Aug. 20.)—This novel comedy shows how Little Billy, of the Sterling forces, spends his days. Evading the director, Robert Thorby, seems to he his special hobby. Ford Sterling also appears.

"Barrelled." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 25.)—On the same reel with "Bashful Ben." If any laughs result from this picture they will be caused by Charlie De Forrest, who has his head in a harrel most of the time. Vivian Prescott assists in this comedy, which is greatly inferior.

"Bashful Ben." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 25.)—On the same reel with "Barrelled." Ben is too hashful to propose. He visits a doctor and gets cured of his affliction, but his girl has already been proposed to and the suitor accepted. Not much humor.

"Matty, the Universal Boy, No. 4." (Imp. Thurs., Aug. 27.)—In this picture Matty, because of his inquisitive tendencies, locates a missing heiress, who has been hidden by a band of Chinamen. This will appeal to the children more than to the grownups.

"The Hole in the Garden Wall." (Rex. Sun., Aug. 23.)—Rupert Julien, Elsie Jane Wilson, Joseph King and Master Felix Walsh are the principals. The acting of the boy is clever. Through the scheming of his rival Rupert is made to believe that he is not wanted hy a girl, the object of his affections. Years later the two are hrought together by Rupert's adopted boy. The acting is superior throughout.

"Circle 17." (Rex. Two reels. July 30.)—A melodrama played by Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little, William Worthington and Frank Lloyd. The action takes place in Italy and New York, the time the present. There are a number of very satisfactory traits about the production which makes a worthy showing in any house. A lieutenant meets an Italian girl while traveling in Naples and saves her father.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"On the Border." (Reliance. Fri., Aug. 7.)—There seems to be no cause for the great emotion that marks the acting of both the principals in this picture; in fact, there is little plot to it. Irene Hunt and Eugene Pallet play the leads. An American soldier saves the life of a Mexican dancer and in return she saves him from the hands of an enraged Mexican.

"The Sheriff's Sister." (Broncho. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 26.)—A good story is forcihly told in these two reels. Against tremendous odds the reformed gamhler and drunkard proves his worth by finally capturing a handit. Besides establishing his integrity he wins the girl he loves. The action is rapid throughout and the drama will be enjoyed by the admirers of melodrama. Richard Stanton and Leona Hutton play the leads.

"The Bank Burglar's Fate." (Reliance. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 8.)—The scenario for this picture was written hy C. D. Brown, of the Minnesota State Bankers Association, with an eye to exposing some of the methods of hank robbers. It is in the form of a drama and is a good one. A detective rounds up three rohbers with the aid of evidence obtained from a telephone operator. The interesting spectacle of "blowing" a safe is shown.

"McCarn Plays Fate." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 18.)—Played by F. A. Kelsey, Thomas O'Brien and Irene Hunt, of the Reliance forces. A good, live story in which Anderson, a young policeman, finally hrings a notorious gang to justice with the aid of a detective. There are numerous fights, which are exceptionally realistic.

"The Wagon of Death." (Reliance. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 15.)—Bob and Fred Burns, Billie West and Vester Pegg are the principals of this exciting story. A wonderful explosion of a dynamite wagon is registered in the last reel. The good-for-nothing, angered because his old pal has reformed, tries to avenge himself on the man's hrother, but he meets the death planned for the other. All will enjoy this.

New Haven Manager Sues Negro Editor

Benjamin G. Salvini Claims That Owners of the "Plaindealer" Libeled Him in an Editorial to Kill Patronage of the Lyric

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS
New Haven, Conn., Aug. 20.

DAMAGES of $10,000 have been asked by Benjamin G. Salvini, manager of the local branch of the Universal Film Exchange, of New York, and of the Lyric Theatre, at 158 Dixwell avenue, in an action for libel brought against J. H. B. and Anna L. Tucker, joint proprietors of a new negro weekly newspaper called "The Plaindealer."

Mr. Salvini is also planning to ask that the publishers be prosecuted in the criminal courts, claiming that the nature of the offense they committed against him leaves him in danger of his life. Attorney E. C. Terry drew up the papers in the case and issued a body writ under which the defendants were required to furnish bonds of $5,000 to be allowed at liberty.

The suit grows out of an editorial that appeared in the "Plaindealer" about two weeks ago, and which, Mr. Salvini says, has already caused him serious financial losses. Unfair rivalry, according to Mr. Salvini, inspired what he is pleased to call an unwarranted attack upon him.

The reason for the attack was, the Tuckers claim, that when an advertising solicitor called upon Mr. Salvini and asked him to support the "Plaindealer," he refused, saying that he would have no dealings with a negro newspaper.

Mr. Salvini has a different story, however, and says that the first man who approached him for an advertisement in the "Plaindealer" carried away his promise to advertise each week. A second man called, Mr. Salvini continues, and thinking that he came to "cut out" the first solicitor, Mr. Salvini turned down his request for an advertisement.

THE real reason for the attack, however, Mr. Salvini says, is that the Tuckers have entered the amusement field themselves and have opened an open air theatre, the Pacific, near his Lyric, hoping to take away his colored patronage and put him out of business. Both the Lyric and the Pacific are in the heart of the negro district, and the patronage of the colored people is by no means to be despised.

As the Pacific only seats about four hundred people and the Lyric, with both open air and closed theatre, seats a total of about 1,500, Mr. Salvini paid no attention to the Tuckers until they published the editorial. He knew that he could hold his trade against all comers, and was content that the Pacific should also continue to show.

When he read the editorial, however, he began to use every means possible to defeat the ends of his competitors. His first step, of course, was the libel suit; then he went to the "white" newspapers and had them tell the story of the entire affair, and finally had printed about 1,000 letters which he scattered in the district where the people live who patronize his theatre. His campaign showed results, and while the Lyric is playing to big audiences, though one or two performances suffered after the publication of the editorial, the Pacific is running under a loss.

Mr. Salvini has had the confidence of the colored people in his district for years, and has no fear of evil results from unfair competition. The case against the Tuckers is returnable to the Superior Court on the first Tuesday in September.

COMING "A GREAT MISTAKE"
RENOWNED PLAYERS FEATURE FILM CO., 220 West 42nd Street NEW YORK

EXCHANGEMEN AND EXHIBITORS are invited to attend the exhibition of "A GREAT MISTAKE" which will take place at Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre, Seventh Ave. & 42nd Street, New York, at 10.30 A. M., Tuesday, Aug. 25th.

REALISM ENDANGERS ACTRESS' LIFE

THE zeal of the California Motion Picture Corporation's producing corps for realism would have undoubtedly proven fatal to Miss Michelena, whom they are featuring in the first few of their big productions, had it not been for the heroism of House Peters.

During the latter part of last week it was decided to devote a day in making a number of retakes for "Salomy Jane," the film dramatization of Bret Harte's story, which is to be released shortly in six reels. One of the scenes was the escape of the leading man from the "Vigilantes." During his spectacular flight, the rowboat with which he put out down the river, became swamped and he went over the rapids clinging to a log.

At just this point Miss Michelena, in the role of Salomy Jane, was supposed to swim out to midstream and join him. Meantime the posse and horses were floundering upstream in the quicksand. Miss Michelena is an excellent swimmer and was making fine headway against the broadside of the swift current when she was taken with a sudden cramp.

The rapids were already driving her under a steep enbankment when House Peters reached her just in the nick of time and pulled her, very much exhausted, but still safe, on to the log.

CLAIRE WHITNEY OUT OF FORT LEE COMPANY

Claire Whitney, leading woman of the Solax-Blaché Features, has resigned from the Fort Lee company and is at liberty.

Miss Whitney will be remembered for her work as leading woman for the American Pathé Company.

PAPER STARTS SCENARIO CONTEST

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 19.

In an endeavor to boom the motion picture business in Albany, the Albany Evening Journal has started a scenario contest. This contest will be opened to people who would like to try their hands at writing photoplay dramas.

The contest will extend about two months, when the plays sent in will be submitted for judgment to some of the well known screen actors. The winner will be awarded two trips to Norfolk and Old Point Comfort. This contest was started in interest of the picture theatres of Albany. There is no entry fee or anything else.

The successful person will have the pleasure of seeing the play photographed in Albany, after which it will be shown in the local theatres.

"THE NEXT IN COMMAND"

(Picture Playhouse Film—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

MUCH interest just now attaches to war pictures and stories in which soldiers are the heroes. Here is one which is laid during the Soudanese campaign of 1884. The exceptionally heartrending task is set for a soldier to lead the search after his own son, also a soldier.

The situation is brought about by the love of the young lieutenant for a siren of the desert, the daughter of the Arab chieftain. This romantic tale is presented with all the charm and fascination that such stories have. The settings, in their tropical luxuries, are full of the atmosphere of romance. Combined with artistic photography they cannot but be pleasing.

But even with clear, rich pictures of well-chosen settings, admirable as they are in themselves, the film could not succeed without capable and intelligent acting. With James Gordon as the father, E. A. Turner as the son, Bettie Harte as the girl, and Frank Sidwell as Captain Fornet, no uneasiness is caused on that score.

Each of these performers before the camera has the ability and versatility to get into a part and give it individuality and distinction. Everyone of them has good looks, and that is no mean qualification.

The son, Lieutenant Gordon, loves the beautiful Arab maiden. She is also loved by Captain Fornet, a French military officer attached to the British Army in the Soudan. Through treachery the latter entraps the girl into his tent. Lieutenant Gordon hears the struggle and rushes in time to save her.

But he has to kill the Frenchman in self-defense. He flees for safety with the girl to her father's house and is accepted by him. On account of the illness of the colonel, it develops upon Major Gordon to lead the squad to arrest his son. The Arabs attack them and annihilate all but the Major before succor arrives.

But it is now learned, much to our surprise and perhaps disappointment, that the Frenchman's wound is only superficial and he will recover. Lieutenant Gordon is thereby exonerated and welcomed back into his company.

This ending is the one weakness in the picture; it seems such an evident makeshift way to get the young soldier out of his difficulties. The only plausible ending open was to have the soldier stand trial, and to have him cleared on the ground of self-defense. If the deed had not seemed to us justified, our sympathies would never have been enlisted in his behalf.

"THE UNEXPECTED"

(Box Office Attractions—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

HERE is a thrilling story in pictures of the trapping of a gang of moonshiners by a clever girl. The wild, picturesque scenery lends itself particularly to the photoplay, and these pictures seem to breathe the very spirit of the mountains, where imperious, indomitable men carry on their illicit work of making whiskey and defying and baffling the revenue officers.

In spite of their persistent wrong-doing, there is something about these self-reliant and hardy mountaineers that enlists our sympathy and admiration. It is their inborn love of liberty, perhaps, and in consequence their refusal to submit to any law except the law of personal might, that makes them so daring and adventurous.

Who does not love bold, fearless men or women, no matter what else they may be? A story dealing with the lives of these folk is naturally virile and fresh, and there is no wonder that it holds absorbing interest.

Once this interest is aroused, there is no diminishing of attention. We can never anticipate what is going to happen next, but are kept continually waiting for a new surprise.

And the conclusion is so unexpected that it comes upon us with amazing suddenness. We never dreamed that this girl detective was already married, and when the leader of the moonshiners' gang falls in love with her and the girl seems to return this love by saving him, we thought that here again was the eternal triangle, and wondered what was to become of the poor little mountain girl who had loved this stripling from boyhood and is willing to shed blood for her love.

When we find that there cannot be this complication we are startled, but pleasurably, for not a hint has been given of what is coming. It is a surprise with a famous O. Henry twist to it, and managed without artificiality.

"THE TERROR OF THE AIR"

(Hepworth—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THERE are one or two improbabilities that interfere to some extent with the whole-hearted acceptance of this picture. To overcome these altogether, the spectator must not be finicky and say that a father that is as good as this father turns out to be would not desert his baby boy in this way. He must not say to himself:

"Now that is expecting too much of me to believe that this mother would have been carried right to the place where her son was living after so many years."

Both of these facts are entirely possible, but the question is, are they probable, for probability is the most important consideration after all, in motion pictures as in stories and plays. It is the old Aristotelian dictum. But if these defects in plot construction be overlooked or put out of mind, the picture has certain qualities that will make an undeniable appeal to the great majority of audiences.

First of all, the central figure is a young inventor, and his invention is something that we may expect to hear of at any time; nevertheless it carries us into the future and arouses our curiosity. Furthermore, there is a liberal amount of action all the time and our interest is not allowed to lag for one moment.

And after all, who is not touched by the story of a disrupted family, that after years have rolled by, is united again in happiness and content? The baby boy has grown into a strong, upstanding stripling, already a famous man, the mother, penitent and in tears for entering into the plot to steal her son's invention, has redeemed the harm done, and the father has returned a wealthy man.

This reunion will bring unutterable delight to that vast number of persons who cannot bear a sad ending.

Excellent players are cast in the drama, including Violet Hopson, Stewart Rome, Henry Vibart, and Tom Powers. No complaint can be made against the settings and the photography; there is one place where the cameraman has distinguished himself. The pictures of the flight of the airship when the inventor proves the practicability of his invention are the best that we have ever seen.

TOOKER AND SPINGLER RENEW CONTRACT

The contracts of William H. Tooker, heavy lead, and Harry Spingler, juvenile lead, of the Life Photo Film Corporation, have been renewed for a further period of one year at a substantial increase of salary.

While it has been the policy of the Life Photo Film Corporation to cast for each picture, and not employ a regular stock company, acting upon the principle that each performer must be suited to the part, rather than suit the part to the performer, nevertheless the versatility of William H. Tooker who has played the male heavy lead, and Harry Spingler who has played the juvenile lead in all of the releases of the company, has caused the Life Photo Film Corporation to deviate from its policy with respect to these two gentlemen.

THIEF TAKES PICTURES FROM LOBBY TWICE

According to Manager Callan of the Plaza Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., somebody in this city is very much impressed with the charming pictures of Mabel Normand, the Keystone star.

A large hand-painted photograph of Miss Normand was recently taken from the lobby of the theatre. This is the second time a picture of Miss Normand disappeared from the front of the Plaza.

The first picture was one of a set which could not be replaced. Mr. Callan declared t Adam Kessel, Jr., of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, that he made no mention of his loss, but when the last one, a 22 x 28 hand-painted portrait disappeared he thought it time something should be done, but he was unable to find traces of the thief.

JOB HUNTER STEALS FILM

A motion picture company at room 1012, Candler Building, New York City, advertised for an employee on August 18, and an immense crowd of applicants gathered about the doors of the building early in the morning.

Later in the day a tin box containing prints of "Master and the World," a three-reel picture of the Film Releases of America Company, was missing from the room opposite No. 1012, and the owners of the print suppose that it was stolen by one of the job hunters.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

The Sherro Motion Picture Players who have been busy for the past week in Rochester, N. Y., staging "A Mother's Sacrifice," announce that it is now ready and will soon be put on the New York market. The picture is an adaptation from a play of the same name which ran for forty-eight nights in Rome, Italy.

In order to instil realism into their first picture, the Oz Film Company used the largest wig in existence. It was worn by the "Braided Man," a character impersonated by Frank Moore. He only appeared before the camera a short time in this makeup, but the wig cost the company a large sum of money.

Through the establishment of a film exchange in Los Angeles the United States government expects to entice 50,000 settlers to the public lands of the Western states during Exposition year. Views of reclaimed lands and the development in progress in those states will be shown in motion pictures.

The management of the Ideal Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., is issuing attractive fans to its patrons. A picture of a child in a sombrero holding a revolver in his hand and pointing it at a company of toy soldiers is on one side, while the obverse advertises the fact that the theatre is twenty degrees cooler than on the street. It also announces that a Wurlitzer orchestra furnishes the music.

W. C. Norris, vice-president of the New York Industrial Film Corporation, is in Columbus, Miss., superintending the filming of the industrial and educational life of that city. The views include street and historic scenes in and about the city, including the famous Lee home, the military roads, the various colleges and manufacturing plants. They are to be booked under the direction of E. L. Kuykendall, manager of the local moving-picture theatre.

PLAYERS HAVE NO RIGHTS IN PUBLICITY PHOTOS

Arthur Leslie, chairman of the Press Committee of the Screen Club, has just won another victory in the Supreme Court, which settles his right to use the portraits of motion picture actors and actresses on portrait stamps.

Motion picture folk generally are much interested in the outcome of the case, as it establishes the fact that they cannot give away exclusive rights of a photograph that has already appeared for publicity purposes. There also arose the question as to whether the individual actor or actress has any personal rights in a picture issued by the company with which they hold an engagement.

The actresses whose portraits an attempt was made to prevent Leslie from using were Lottie Briscoe, Edith Storey, Dorothy Kelly, Leah Baird and Ormi Hawley.

DICTOGRAPH INVENTOR IN PICTURES

The Twentieth Century Feature Film Company has just completed its first American production.

The story is based around an occurrence which has held the front page of the newspapers for the last month. Justina Wayne, Dorothy Gwynn, Valerie Sheahan, Charles Perley and Mark Harrison have been cast for the play.

When the company received the right to use the dictograph the idea was broached that it would be interesting to the general public, if the inventor, K. M. Turner, would pose in the picture.

The production was written by and produced under the direction of Alexander F. Frank and Frederick Beck.

IMP COMPANY PRODUCING PLAYS IN CONNECTICUT

With Herbert Brennon directing the Imp Company, headed by William Shay, Violet Mercereau, William Welch, Hobart Henley, as assistant director, Mrs. Walker and little Jane Lee, are in New Preston, Conn., busily producing rural and mountain plays.

A two-reel feature just completed is "Redemption," a story of the transition of a reckless highwayman through love of a little child, into a decent man.

"How clear the pictures are!"

You've often overheard that remark—and it's as strong a commendation, brings as much business as does a favorable comment on the picture story itself.

The "clearest pictures" are on Eastman film because the product is right, chemically and physically.

It is easily identifiable by the stencil "Eastman" in the margin.

"The Silence of John Gordon." (Beauty. Tues., Aug. 18.)—Margarita Fischer and Harry Pollard play opposite, Fred Gamble and Joseph Harris assist. The minister of the town discovers that a young girl's sweetheart is of bad character, and proceeds to chastise him with his fists. The people demand his resignation, but on learning the truth of the matter he is reinstated.

"The Inner Conscience." (Majestic. Tues., Aug. 18.)—An absorbing drama in which the dissatisfied wife of the fisherman learns to love him better after a catastrophe, which comes near ending her life and the man she planned to elope with. Olive Fuller Golden, Frank Bennett and Sam De Grasse are the principals.

"The Saving Flame." (Majestic. Tues., Aug. 11.)—The romantic fisherman's wife can't get along with her prosaic husband, and she starts a flirtation with a city man, but it develops that the fisherman has more mettle, as the other is afraid to save the girl from the burning house. The husband resolves to put more romance in his wife's life thereafter. Robert Harron and Francelia Billington play the leads.

"Her 'Big' Brother." (Thanhouser. Sun., Aug. 16.)—While this picture is made for children, it is doubtful if they will enjoy it as much as an ordinary drama or comedy. Roy thinks that his sister is not good enough to compete with him in the swimming race, but she proves her worth and crosses the line first. Roy Hauck and Doris Farrington are the leads.

"A Rural Romance." (Princess. Fri., Aug. 14.)—The son doesn't marry the girl of his father's selection, but he marries her sister, which suits the father just as well. This comedy-drama is worked out in a clever way with Muriel Ostriche and Boyd Marshall leading the cast.

"Cupid Dances the Tango." (Royal. Sat., Aug. 15.)—The members of the Woman Haters Club all fall in love with the tango teacher, but when she turns them all down they vow never to trust a woman again. This is funny in parts, but not enough action appears.

"Bill Saves the Day." (Komic. Sun., Aug. 16.)—In this picture, which is No. 4 of the Bill series, Bill keeps the impatient bankers in his boss' office by placing numbers on the blades of an electric fan, thus turning it into an improvised gambling machine. This is an excellent comedy, the usual cast appearing.

"Their Worldly Goods." (American. Wed., Aug. 19.)—The idea that this drama means to convey is not clearly portrayed. The dissatisfied wife attempts to steal her husband's savings, but when she has the money she has to protect it and herself from a burglar. The husband learns the reason of his wife's dissatisfaction and remedies it. Vivian Rich, William Garwood and Jack Richardson are the principals.

"The Old Love's Best." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 28.)—A picture which the lovers of melodrama will enjoy. It lacks the sensationalism that marks many of this brand, however. John, who has come from the country and becomes a promising attorney, forgets his old love and marries a chorus girl. She, however, proves faithless, and after securing a divorce he returns to the country and marries the other.

"His Long-Lost Friend." (Royal. Sat., Aug. 22.)—Nervy Ned enters a house and tells the owner that he is his old college chum and then proceeds to create a great disturbance before he is thrown out. A fine comedy of foreign make.

"False Gods." (American. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 17.)—An unusual drama, but rather obscure. The Western man who has become immensely rich is elected senator. In Washington he comes under the influence of corrupt lobbyists and later marries one of their confederates, deserting his wife. He loses all his money and he is only too glad to return to his former wife and beg forgiveness.

NEWS WEEKLIES

"Pathé's Weekly, No. 51." (Sat., Aug. 15.)—A canoe tilting contest at Bridgetown, N. J., starts this reel. A variety of war news appears, starting with the Czar watching his troops depart for the front. An old picture of the Kaiser is shown receiving flowers from the children, and Prince Henry of Prussia is seen reviewing his troops. The launching of a five-million-pound caisson for the Panama Canal at San Francisco is interesting. The Australasian-American tennis match at Forrest Hills, L. I., brings the reel to a close.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 48." (Selig. Thurs., Aug. 13.)—The most striking pictures in this week's issue are of a forest fire in the California mountains that endangered the town of Sisson, but was prevented from reaching there by the prompt and efficient work of the forestry service. Many square miles of woodland were destroyed and the camera has pictured it all in color.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 49." (Selig. Mon., Aug. 17.)—War still holds the foremost place on the films of this interesting review of what is going on in the world. The embarking of vessels from New York, carrying reservists to fight for their native lands in the great European struggle occupies a prominent place. The treasure-ship, "Kronprinzessin Cecelie," is photographed as she left the port of New York on her ill-starred trip that ended in her being bottled up in Bar Harbor.

"Animated Weekly No. 126."—Czar inspects troops; visit of King George and Queen Mary to President Poincare at Paris; military maneuvres at Magdenburg, Germany; French minister of war sees soldiers on parade at Versailles; aeroplane "America" has a third engine installed; a railroad wreck at Derby, Miss.; Bessie Wynne, noted Universal actress, visits studio at Hollywood, Cal.; religious ceremony at Funchal, Madeira Island; a man bound hand and foot swimming Hell Gate Channel, New York City; sham battle at Cincinnati; forest fire at The Dalles, Ore.; Grand Prix races at Paris; trans-Atlantic voyage of non-sinkable boat large enough to hold four persons.

Mr. A. D. Flinton,
Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Mr. Flinton:—

I have just closed contracts with you for the Paramount program for the following reasons:

We are certain that we have the best theatres in each of these cities, and I presume that you will agree with me on this score and this being so, desired the best program for these houses. We do not think, but we know from experience, that the Paramount program is the strongest on the market, and without douht within a short time will he even greater than their present standing. The theatre in my estimation following this program cannot hut see the advantages of having the Paramount program.

I have studied this situation a long time and was perhaps one of the first to grasp the opportunity of securing this service. Without it I might as well close up our hest theatres, hut with it we will not he ahle to handle the crowds and the competitor must suffer, if he desires to compete. Personally, such stars as this company has engaged is sufficient evidence to me that they mean husiness and that their program is going to he the greatest achievement ever offered to the exhibitors in this country, hut greater than my own personal ohservation is the fact that common sense on the part of the live wire will show him why the program cannot he excelled.

Another phase is the exclusiveness of this program, which I deem the most valuahle of the good qualities of the Paramount Company. In my cities we are made on account of this exclusive feature end of the matter, and the fact that the advertising campaign is to he enlisted hy you with this program. I have already received many inquiries on this proposition, and you can rest assured that if the Paramount Company continues to release features on the same hasis as their first announcement, why our theatres will be only too glad to continue with you as your estahlished customer for an indefinite period.

Assuring you that I have written you th's letter without solicitation for the good of exhihitors who are douhtful as to their plans, I heg to remain, Yours very truly,

Barney Reilly.

Kansas City Feature Film Company,
Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Sirs:—

I enclose herewith signed contract for Paramount program for the coming season for the Garden Theatre, this city.

In making this contract I feel that I am protecting my hest interests, as I have a theatre that entailed a large investment, and I have huilt up a large clientele hy exercising the greatest care in the selection of the pictures shown.

You are familiar with local conditions in Des Moines, and know that all the other houses charge five cents, while the Garden's admission is ten cents; you also know that the Garden does more husiness than any other two theatres in town. While I can say without undue egotism that this theatre is the best in town, yet I am also of the opinion that a great deal of the splendid husiness worked up is due to the Lasky, Famous Playtrs and Bosworth films we have shown, and for this very reason I did not hesitate in the least ahout signing up for the coming season, as I felt in doing so I was getting the hest program in the world. I have shown nearly every high class Feature put out, and can truthfully say that taken all in all, the makes controlled hy the Paramount program have given hetter satisfaction than any others.

I have also heen impressed with the protection you are going to give the theatre-manager, and the advertising and educational campaign you intend to make, and I can conscientiously say that I value your franchise among my chief assets for the successful operation of the Garden Theatre.

If at any time I can he of any service to you, do not hesitate to call upon me, as I now consider myself a part of the Paramount program and wish to co-operate in every manner possihle.

Wishing you the hest of success in this new undertaking and knowing that it is the one step forward in the film history of this country, I remain,

Yours truly,

A. H. Blank.

Time to Get Together.

As I have said in my letter, sent to every Independent Film manufacturer and exchangeman and every exhibitor in the United States,

If Independents Do Not Organize Now

the opportunity to do so may never occur again. Not one of you can afford to let this one pass without definite action.

Send Your Acceptances at Once

Attend the convention which will be held in the Green Room of the Hotel McAlpin, 34th Street and Broadway, New York, August 29th, to organize a Board of Trade through which all Independents can work together to resist drastic and unfair conditions at present imposed by certain powerful combinations.

I Have Fought Successfully

Much greater victories can be won if all Independents work as a unit for actual business freedom, and not an independence which exists in name only.

Reservations will be made at the Hotel McAlpin if you will inform me of your requirements.

The Atsco Answer

RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS are the standard that the fakirs try to copy. The "fibre golds," the "golden mirrors," the "gold cloths," the "mirror fibres," the "Radio Golds" and the rest of them are the nearest approach to the name of the original success, RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN that the parasites of the industry dare to make. Protected by the trade mark copyright laws of the United States, Atsco will protect the exhibitor from the fakirs and their fakes. Let the buyers beware. You cannot get the genuine, the screen that's used in all parts of the world, except from

The Woman Without A Heart

3 PART TRAGEDY

1-3-6 Sheet Posters

The Woman Without a Heart

A 3 reel tragedy, a story in which many lives are wrecked through the selfish inconsideration of a heartless woman. Sacrificing the interests of her friends, relatives, and acquaintances to advance her own interests, she is caught at last in the web of her own spinning. Lovers, husband, mother are nothing compared with self—the theme is a powerful one and the story carries a powerful appeal.

Bungling Bunks' Bunco

3 Reel

Wild Animal Comedy

1-3-6 Sheet Posters

Bungling Bunks' Bunco

A 3 reel comedy featuring wild animals. Bunks, the hapless hero of this funniest of film tales, can't qualify as a hunter of big game on the evidence of a faked photograph, so he goes after the real thing in Africa and the real thing goes after him. Out of the jaws of death he falls into the arms of "worse than death," the daughter of a native ruler. She pursues him home, when he makes his escape with a captive lion, and she lets the lion loose at the celebration of his home-coming. Most folks take to the roof, and the lion takes to—well it takes Bunks to prevent disaster and it takes your patrons some time to smooth the stitches out of their sides.

The Perils of Pauline

You have to hand it to Pauline, she's the pluckiest little spark that ever risked her life for motion pictures and your patrons know it and appreciate it. You can't get big results without taking risks, but Pauline takes the risks for you. She's the girl that took the "risk" out of Brisk in business, and the results are yours. You risk nothing in booking this great serial film except the capacity of your theatre.

Pauline Takes the Cake and Then Hands It to You

Uncle's Finish

A 1 reel American comedy made by Hartigan and published by the Eclectic Film Co.—a pleasing diversion which your patrons will enjoy.

Whiffles' Double (Comedy) and Kashmir, British India (in natural colors)

An unusual split reel combing the laughable adventures of Whiffle's and his double with the scenic effects in natural colors of the British Indian district of Kashmir.

Eclectic's 4-A-Week

Monday—The Perils of Pauline every two weeks. Short subjects alternate weeks.
Tuesday—American one or two reel comedy.
Wednesday—Super-excellent multiple reel production.
Friday—Surpassing attractions of several reels.

The BRAND Of BARS

A western masterpiece, portraying the dare-devil adventures and the delightful romance of an ex-convict. He redeemed the past by performing brave deeds in the face of overwhelming odds—and he won the love of a "true-blue" girl who proved her faith when things looked darkest. An unusual 3-part drama with a powerful pull.

Short Comedies That Bring Down the House

THE WATER WAGON—Strenuous method of reforming a village toper. One reel—but a thousand real laughs.

THE TALE OF A SKIRT—A stout lady takes flesh reducing exercises and makes her neighbors peevish. A reel that's crowded with mirth.

A LIVELY AFFAIR—Suffragettes hold a strenuous meeting and a mere man tries to mix in. Result—uproarious fun. One reel.

Paramount

—here is the first big shot in the Paramount Publicity Campaign—a double page spread in the September 5th issue of the Saturday Evening Post. This will be followed monthly by full pages.

The Post is unquestionably the most valuable medium through which the message of Paramount can be conveyed to the public. The issue in which this double page spread appears has a circulation of approximately two million and a quarter, so it is safe to say this announcement will be read by at least ten million (10,000,000) people—one out of every ten in the United States!

Feature Play Co.; and Bosworth, Inc., constitute the Paramount Program.

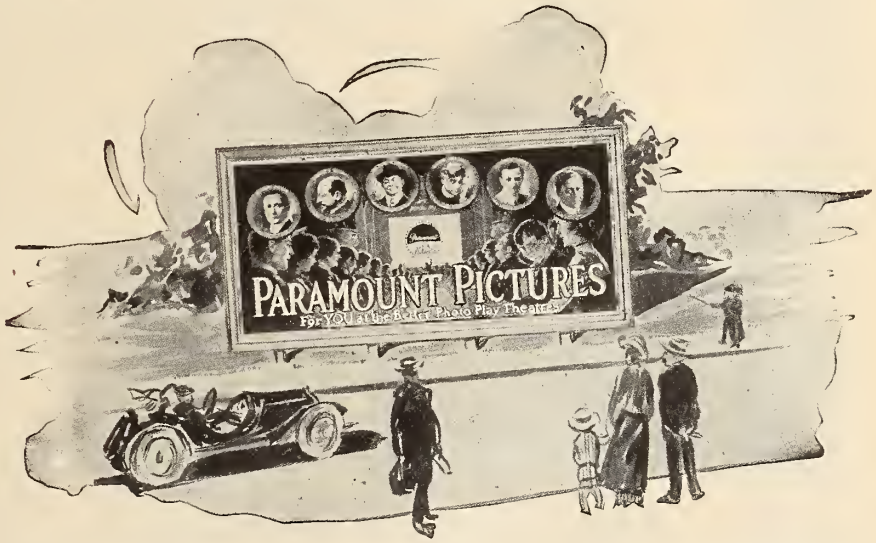
Publicity—

Paramount is not promising—

Paramount is now conducting a gigantic advertising campaign that will cause hundreds of thousands, yes millions, of people who can afford to pay ten, fifteen, twenty-five and even fifty cents, to look for the house showing the Paramount Trade Mark.

The Paramount Campaign is reaching hundreds of thousands of people who are already regular attendants at the better grade of motion picture shows—and this publicity will be instrumental in holding their interest and causing them to patronize Paramount Houses.

The Paramount Campaign is naturally reaching thousands of people who frequent "nickelodeons"—and this publicity will show them the difference between a first-class house and the ones they are at present attending.



The Paramount Campaign is also reaching thousands of people who do not go to any motion picture theatre—and this publicity will convince them that now they can see a two-dollar show on the screen for ten, fifteen, twenty-five and fifty cents.

This is the kind of co-operation the Paramount Pictures Corporation is offering to the right kind of exhibitors everywhere. Do you realize what it would mean to you to be known as "the Paramount House" in your city? After you have read this announcement turn the matter over in your mind for a few minutes and you will appreciate the advisability of showing the Paramount Program in your house.

First Three Releases

August 31st the Famous Players Film Co. will release "Lost Paradise," with H. B. Warner as the star; September 3rd Bosworth, Inc., will release "Odyssey of the North," with Hobart Bosworth as the star; September 7th Jesse L. Lasky Co. will release "The Virginian," with Dustin Farnum as the star—this merely indicates the quality of the Paramount Program.

Write immediately to your nearest Paramount Exchange. It will be your first step in the direction of greater prosperity, and assured success.

—here is a reproduction of the beautifully colored 24-sheet Paramount Poster now appearing on the billboards in over five hundred cities.

Volume X | September 5, 1914 | Number 9

Results

ON an advertising page in this issue is a rather remarkable exhibit.

The friendly spirit of an advertiser, Arthur Leslie, prompted him to present us with a large cardboard carrying ninety-nine coupon replies to his advertisement run several weeks ago in THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

AS he expresses it:

"Here are a few of several hundred replies from a single insertion of my ad.

"Each reply contained money, stamps or orders."

And he added:

"THE NEWS REACHES THE EXHIBITORS."

AN analysis of this advertisement and its results is interesting and instructive.

The advertisement was a good one.

It occupied two pages. It was designed to catch the eye.

IT illustrates attractively and exactly the product advertised. It was typographically excellent. It gave all the whys and wherefores.

AND it contained—what is unusual—a coupon large enough to carry easily a complete, written address.

IT was, in short, an advertisement that ought to pull.

And it did.

IT pulled because it was a matter of interest to exhibitors and because "THE NEWS REACHES THE EXHIBITOR."

IN the respect that it was directed only at the exhibitor, the advertisement was like nearly 100 per cent of all the advertising done in this field.

It is all leveled at the exhibitor—and only at the exhibitor.

SO the lesson of this advertisement is of profitable interest to all motion picture advertisers.

And the lesson is this: These results were not due to bulk circulation, large, unclassified, but rather to concentrated, purchasing circulation.

ONLY purchasing circulation counts.

Big circulation figures mean nothing in this field.

And again, big circulation figures mean nothing in this field.

THE number of purchasing exhibitors is comparatively very limited. The number is certainly not indicated by the gross number of theatres that show pictures, nor by the gross number of motion picture exhibitors, nor by the circulation that can be obtained in this field.

IF the circulation of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS were twice or three times or one thousand times what it is, there would have been no increase in Mr. Leslie's results.

On the other hand, he would have been compelled to pay for this extra and waste circulation.

As it was his replies cost him only a very small amount apiece.

IT all comes down to the statements made time and again on this page—that the only circulation that will give results to the advertiser in this field is the high-class exhibitors' circulation.

This is the purchasing circulation, the only purchasing circulation.

WE believe its limit today to be not much over seven thousand.

Consequently, when you buy circulation in this field in excess of seven thousand you are buying waste.

IT is worthy of note that the replies to Mr. Leslie's advertisement were 100 per cent exhibitors'.

Every coupon gives, typewritten or in clear business penmanship, the owner, name and address of a picture theatre; a high-class picture theatre.

Moreover, every state in the Union and many of the provinces of Canada were represented in the replies.

ONLY PURCHASING CIRCULATION COUNTS.

SYRACUSE FACES CARBON SHORTAGE

Special to The Motion Picture News

Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 26.

When Germany declared war, the wise supply man immediately scented trouble and went scurrying to corner the supply in Syracuse as well as in other cities.

One enterprising man in a nearby town rushed into Syracuse before the local dealers were awake to the situation and purchased every carbon in town at list price.

The famine has caught most of the exhibitors short, including one or two of the big downtown houses. One exhibitor spent twenty dollars yesterday in telephone and telegrams trying to locate carbons in this state, and was finally able to purchase 500 at thirty cents each.

The little fellows who have been accustomed to buying in lots of fifty are almost frantic, as closing is staring them in the face. The downtown houses are all fairly well stocked and are just sitting tight and grinning.

BEST SUMMER KNOWN IN TRENTON

Special to The Motion Picture News

Trenton, N. J., Aug. 26.

Despite the fact that this has been the hottest summer in Trenton for years, the motion picture business has been the most prosperous in history. Every one of the more than a score of motion picture houses has been running all the season and while in several instances the receipts have been close to the safety line, the majority of houses are breaking with a good profit.

The Trent Theatre, which is only used for big theatrical productions, found an interest maker in "Neptune's Daughter." The management found that this picture made more money for the theatre than any show run in the theatre in the past six months. For this reason the house has reopened with D'Annunzio's "Cabiria."

HERRINGTON RESIGNS AS EXHIBITORS' HEAD

Special to The Motion Picture News

Pittsburgh, Aug. 26.

Fred J. Herrington, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Pittsburgh, has tendered his resignation to that body. His successor will be elected at the next regular semi-monthly meeting of the association.

All is peaceful in the organization, but Herrington gives as his reason for resigning that opposition outside makes the move necessary and that he is doing it for the good of the organization.

A spirited election for his successor is anticipated.

Spokane Exhibitors Unite for Protection

Preliminary Meeting Held—Betterment of Film Service, Legislation and Price Question Will Be Taken Up—Two-Reel Membership Rule Fixed

Special to The Motion Picture News

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 24.

PRELIMINARY steps have been taken by managers of Spokane theatres which show motion pictures for the organization of a protective body. This is the first move of the kind here.

At an informal meeting at which the plans were outlined there were present Sam W. B. Cohn, manager of the Spokane; James McConahey, manager of the Best; B. W. Copeland, representing the Rex; A. R. Patton, of the Lyric, and R. B. Robbins, of the Majestic.

The organization is intended for the protection of the managers in their dealings with the unions, for the betterment of film service as regards negotiations with the producers and to work for legislation that will be advantageous to the theatre proprietors.

By-laws are to be adopted and officers elected at a subsequent meeting. Mr. Copeland was chosen as temporary chairman, and Mr. Cohn as temporary secretary.

Membership in the organization is to be open to all theatres which show two or more reels of pictures. This will include the Spokane, Loew's, and other vaudeville houses where a liberal quantity of film is used daily.

A uniform age limit on children admitted free to picture shows is one impartant matter to be brought up. Some theatres have been admitting without ticket all children under four years of age, and some all those under three.

The rule to be adopted probably will be the admittance free only of children in arms.

A uniform length of show for a stated price also is to be set, so that bills will be of corresponding strength in all five-cent houses and also in all ten-cent houses. Jan Drummond.

"Biggest Season Ever" Is Omaha's Prediction

Prospects Never Better, Exchange Men Declare; Steady Increase in Orders—Fewest Houses Closed in Summer in City's History

Special to The Motion Picture News

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 25.

PROSPERITY marks the opening of the fall motion picture business in Omaha's territory. Fewer theatres than ever closed, or even reduced their programs during the hot months. New theatres are being planned for a number of places in anticipation of the winter business. Exchange men report a steadily increasing business in orders.

A. G. Ferris, owner of the Grand Opera House at Cherokee, Ia., has purchased the Happy Hour motion picture theatre, and plans to go after business on modern lines this coming season. He is going to make Cherokee, Ia., one of the best motion picture theatre towns in Iowa, he says.

Exchange men say business prospects in this territory were never better than at the opening of this fall. Every exhibitor is up to his neck in plans to increase his business. The Middle West is in for an awakening that is going to give the motion picture business a place on the map of activities that will mean a better pleased public and richer exhibitors.

As John J. Homan, of Alton, Ia., a caller in Omaha, last week, said after asking The Motion Picture News representative to see that The News was sent to him for another ear: "I've just ordered the best service I can get; I've kept the theatre going all summer without slacking up a bit, and now I'm in the field for the harvest." Guy P. Leavitt.

Finnegan Will Fight Dallas Censors

Board Enjoins "The Lure," but Exhibitor Retaliates with Threat to Carry the Case to Court—National Board Approved Film

Special to The Motion Picture News

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 25.

THAT the film men of Dallas and the board of censors will soon lock horns in the courts is very evident. In fact, Manager T. P. Finnegan, of the Hippodrome, has announced that before he will submit to the suppression of "The Lure" he will seek court aid and enjoin the board.

"The Lure" is scheduled to be shown here in the near future and a few days ago the Hippodrome manager had the board of censors and city officials view the picture. Most of the citizens declared they saw nothing objectionable in the film, but nay, nay, said the board of censors.

Following the decision of the board, Manager Finnegan declared that if the board of directors would back him up he would take the matter to the courts and have it decided once and for all just how much authority the local board of censors had in the suppression of pictures. He objects to the principle of the thing.

C. J. HITE, THANHOUSER HEAD, MEETS TRAGIC DEATH

Producer Succumbs to Injuries Sustained When His Automobile Crashes Into Viaduct Railing and Drops Fifty Feet—Tried to Jump from the Car But Was Unable to Extricate Himself from the Steering Gear—Was Only Thirty-Nine Years Old—Mr. Hite's Rapid Rise in the Motion Picture Industry

CHARLES J. HITE, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, and first vice-president and treasurer of the Mutual Film Corporation, died at 4:30 Saturday morning, August 22, in the Harlem Hospital, from injuries sustained in an automobile accident Friday night a few hours before.

Mr. Hite was returning from superintending the opening of the New Rose Garden, at Fifty-third street and Broadway, New York City, and directing the finishing touches of the "Million Dollar Mystery," and was driving alone in his roadster when the car plunged over the 155th street viaduct, about sixty feet from Macomb's Dam road, landing fifty feet below in the grounds of the Manhattan Casino.

He sustained a compound fracture of the jaw and severe internal injuries. In falling the car turned turtle and pinned Mr. Hite to the ground. The force of the plunge drove the automobile through the fence of the amusement grounds.

CHARLES S. HITE

MR. HITE was still conscious when patrons of the Casino and several pedestrians rushed to his rescue. Efforts were made to release the imprisoned man, but they were unavailing until jacks were brought from the elevated railroad shops nearby. Mr. Hite relapsed into unconsciousness the moment the car was lifted from his body.

Before he became unconscious, however, Mr. Hite managed to tell his name and give directions for communicating with his wife.

Mr. Hite was driving east, intending to cross the bridge to the Bronx, on the way to his home in New Rochelle, the old estate of Francis Wilson in Meadow Lane. It is supposed that the machine skidded on the pavement, wet from a previous thunderstorm.

According to the account of one eyewitness, the unfortunate man tried to jump from the car at the first sign of accident, but was unable to extricate himself from the steering gear in time to make the leap. The machine crashed into the iron railing of the viaduct, carrying away nearly fifteen feet of the ironwork.

ANOTHER account relates that Mr. Hite drove his auto upon the sidewalk to avoid running into a child which had stepped from a Bronx car and was crossing the tracks in a direct line with the machine.

Mr. Hite was only thirty-nine years old at the time of his death. His rise in filmdom was remarkable for its rapidity in the case of so young a man.

At the office of the Mutual Film Corporation the news of the tragedy elicited the following statement concerning the death of Mr. Hite, their first vice-president:

"The officers of this company are so appalled and grieved by the death of their associate, Charles J. Hite, that it is impossible to make a suitable statement of their grief at the present moment. As was to be expected of a man of Mr. Hite's ability, popularity and character, his business affairs have been left in perfect order. At the forthcoming meeting of the board of directors a full expression will be made."

The funeral was held at the Hite residence on August 25. The ceremony was simple but impressive, and attended by many men prominent in the industry. Dr. August Ulmann, assistant rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, of New Rochelle, read the service.

Members of the acting companies of the Thanhouser Company, under the supervision of Jessie B. Bishop, Florence La Badie, Maude Fealy and Mrs. James Cruze, undertook to garland the room where the funeral was held.

THE pallbearers were Edwin Thanhouser, the founder of the plant bearing his name, Lloyd Lonergan, Roy L. McCardell, J. R. Freuler, Paul Davis, Dr. Wilbert Shallenberger, Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, and Dr. A. E. Jones, vice-president of the Thanhouser Company; men who had been associated with Mr. Hite in his various enterprises.

Appropriate musical selections were rendered by Robert Roese on the piano and Miss Alice McCardell.

The funeral arrangements were under the direction of Dr. A. E. Jones and Roy L. McCardell, assisted by Burt Adler, of the Thanhouser Company.

Whether Mr. Hite will be buried in Lancaster, Ohio, his birthplace, or at New Rochelle, remains to be determined. Meantime the body reposes in the funeral vault at New Rochelle.

Charles J. Hite, first vice-president and treasurer of the Mutual Film Corporation, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, and a director and stockholder in many of the largest motion-picture organizations in this country, was born in Pleasantville, Ohio.

THE Hite family came from the western part of Virginia and settled about one hundred years ago in Fairfield County, Ohio. After the usual course of a country boy in the district school he went to the Ohio Central Normal College, and after three years there Mr. Hite taught for several years. During his summer vacations he was a newspaper man.

He gave up teaching to go into mercantile business in Bremen, Ohio, and in turn left this to develop the lyceum system in Ohio. He found more fun in sitting on the last bench in the town hall and listening to the show he had staged, than in anything else he had done up to that time.

So that when the motion picture came over the horizon Mr. Hite was ready to meet the new amusement more than half way. He probably was the first man to utilize the cinematograph in connection with the lyceum bureau.

IN 1906, Mr. Hite organized the C. J. Hite Moving Picture Company, and then supplied the various lyceum bureaus that he had founded with the motion pictures he now distributed. Two years later he moved to Chicago and opened a motion picture exchange there. Hite was the whole force at first, both the day and the night shifts. There were no clerks or secretaries, no anything but hard work.

It was C. J. Hite doing practically all the work, and as a result he made himself ill. One day he felt so bad that he called in a physician he had known all his life.

Instead of leaving a prescription, the doctor left a check. That physician was Dr. Wilbert Shallenberger, a boyhood chum of Hite. And so with proper financing, Hite commenced the career that carried him to the top in the motion picture industry.

HE went into partnership with Samuel S. Hutchinson, and the name of the organization was made the H. & H. Film Service Company.

New exchanges were opened in Detroit, Des Moines and other middle-west cities, and then the Majestic Film Exchange, one of the most highly remunerative of all the film distribution organizations, was formed.

With a fortune made in this way, Mr. Hite came to New York three years ago. Two weeks after he had arrived here, it was announced that he had secured not only the control but practically all of the stock of the Thanhouser Film Corporation in New Rochelle, N. Y.

Mr. Hite's connections with the motion picture industry have been so diverse and remunerative that he has been rated many times a millionaire.

PRACTICALLY every dollar of his fortune was made in the last seven years. He is survived by a widow and two children, Marjorie, aged four, and Muriel, a baby only one year old, and by his parents, who live in Lancaster, Ohio, as well as three sisters, two unmarried, who live in Lancaster, and Mrs. W. Ray Johnston.

Mr. Hite at the time of his death was also treasurer of the New York Motion Picture Company. He was interested in all sides of the motion picture industry, and considered one of the pioneers of the business. Recently he financed an expedition to the Bahamas for the purpose of obtaining submarine pictures, considered some of the finest examples of this latest development of the art.

One of his last achievements was the production of "The Million Dollar Mystery," a twenty-three part serial put out in conjunction with daily newspapers throughout the United States. It was said shortly before his death that Mr. Hite had succeeded in getting bookings for the serial amounting to almost a million dollars.

THE death of Charles J. Hite means a great loss to the motion picture industry. He was a man of forceful personality and commanding executive abilities.

His originality had become recognized in the ranks of filmdom from the time he first entered the field, and his demise will be felt and regretted wherever unusual capabilities are appreciated, and by those who were impressed with his pleasant and amiable personal traits.

Waterbury Exhibitor Brings Daily to Terms

Newspaper Manager Leaves Serial Out After Quarrel, but Retains the Feature When Theatre Man Turns the Tables

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Waterbury, Aug. 27.

THERE is a story going the rounds here of how a local paper was obliged to take water in a "skirmish" with a motion picture theatre manager backed up by one of the latest feature productions. To make a long story longer, it was the Waterbury "Republican" and Manager Ray Averill, of the Scenic Theatre, that figured in the "set-to," and the facts in the case are these:

The Scenic is exhibiting "The Trey o' Hearts" and the "Republican" in its Sunday edition of August 2 ran the opening instalment. Manager Averill gave the newspaper a half-page advertisement on the opening Sunday, promising to do so as often as possible.

Saturday evening, August 8, Mr. Averill was called on the telephone by the advertising manager of the "Republican," who inquired as to where the usual half-page advertisement was. Mr. Averill replied, saying that he didn't have any for the paper that Sunday. "All right," came back the answer, "'The Trey o' Hearts' story doesn't go in to-morrow." "Very well."

True to his word, the advertising manager kept the second instalment out. Within the next few days the newspaper office was besieged with letters asking why the instalment failed to appear, so interested had the public become in the story.

Manager Averill planned to flood the city on Sundays with a New York newspaper which is carrying the serial. Before he had started on this, however, the "Republican" woke up and saw that it was a case of "cutting off its nose to spite its face."

Mr. Averill was called by the management of the "Republican" a few nights later and told that the stories would appear in the "Republican" in the future. On Sunday, August 16, two full-page instalments were given, much to the joy of the publication's readers and others as well.

Beveridge Denies Fostering Censorship Bill

Indiana Senator Has Never Seen an Objectionable Film and Sees No Reason for Censors—Blame Report on Liquor Interests

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Boonville, Ind., Aug. 26.

A THOROUGH investigation, which included the questioning of all persons concerned into the report that the leaders of the Progressive party of the First Congressional District of Indiana were nursing a state censorship bill seems to prove that the whole matter has emanated from the saloon interests.

Progressive District Chairman Samuel Crumpacker, of Evansville, desires it known that the matter of motion picture censorship by a state board has never been mentioned at any time in any district, county or city conference at any point in the six counties comprising the first Indiana district, and further, that former Senator Beveridge never wrote him endorsing the censor plan.

CALM PREVAILS IN ENGLISH FILM CIRCLES

Despite Serious Aspect of War Situation Manufacturers' Representatives Are Disposed to Maintain a Hopeful Attitude—The Supply of Pictures Sufficient to Last for Some Time in the Face of Curtailment—Exhibitors in North Sea Cities Hit Hard

THE condition of the motion picture industry in England has a peculiar interest to manufacturers and exhibitors on this side just at this time.

Two representative trade papers published in England, the "Bioscope" and the "Kinematograph," have taken pains to get an expression of the views of the situation, and the probable outlook from the principal English companies and the branches of American concerns in London, besides obtaining through their correspondents in the British Isles the reports of actual conditions in the various localities.

There is a diversity of opinion among the executives of the large firms, but on the whole, the sentiment seems hopeful.

The English branch of the Essanay Company has no intention of reducing its stock at present. The concern expects to make regular releases as heretofore, and is confident that there will not be any occasion to retrench for some time to come. It is suggested that the theatres be kept open for the benefit of the people.

Public Must Have Recreation

This latter view is also expressed by the manager of the Edison Company. He states that the public must have some form of relaxation, and that motion pictures, being the cheapest form of entertainment, there is no reason why that should not continue to be popular, even in the stress of war time.

Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., feels [illegible] the industry is going to be hit [illegible] hard. It won't be any exception in [illegible] particular, as all lines of business in England have thus felt the effects of the sudden upheaval.

W. Jury, the president of the concern, makes the suggestion that the trade organizations should take serious cognizance of the situation and inaugurate measures to uphold the business in such a precarious matter.

On the other hand, the manager of the Vitagraph branch thinks that no move should be made. He declares that a conference for concerted action would be useless, as the conditions are of such a nature that people in the trade cannot expect to do anything effective.

An Optimistic View

For all this, his views are optimistic in regard to the general outlook. He states that all negatives from America to Paris are being delivered to London.

The Co-operative Cinematograph Company, the British representative of the Universal Company, said that trade had not been affected to any appreciable extent, though a few contracts had been cancelled. On the whole, his company has no reason to complain. The concern feels that after the unsettling which naturally follows such unusual conditions, everything will become normal again soon. Pictures will continue to be as popular as ever.

The Western Importing Company, the representative of the Mutual Film Corporation, declares that the trade will be conducted as usual for some time to come, as far as the manufacturers are concerned.

That is, while the supply of films will be less than before the war because of the curtailment of production, there will still be sufficient for the exhibitor. The manager feels that loss of trade can be prevented by the members of the industry acting together in harmony.

Has Good Supply of Negatives

Bishop, Pessers & Company, the firm representing Balboa, is not in fear of being affected for some time. The branch has a good supply of negatives on hand, and has all its printing done in England. Consequently exhibitors can depend upon the company for filling contracts for Balboa pictures, and a steady output of new releases will be maintained.

The representative of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., has not felt any effect of the war. The August releases were delivered according to contract. The company is ready to fill orders at twenty-four hours' notice.

It is expected that September releases will be put in the hands of customers with the same regularity as during the previous month.

English Service to Remain the Same

Cines Company declares that its English film service will remain the same, though it has misgivings about the continental supply.

The Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., the British branch of the American concern of the same name, sees in the free passage of shipping maintained by England's navy the possibility of making regular shipments, though it disclaims any ability to fulfil contracts in the case of any unforeseen contingencies.

The Hepworth Manufacturing Company, with an American branch in New York City, makes the emphatic statement that the war will not affect its weekly output. The regular issue of three films a week will go on as usual.

The company is not making any different arrangements on account of the war, except the plan for sending a camera-man to the front to obtain negatives at first hand.

Small Orders Cancelled

E. H. Montague, the representative of the Selig Polyscope Company, has felt the effects of the upheaval to the extent of finding it necessary to cancel some small orders for short films, amounting to about 40,000 feet.

He is having sent from the United States second negatives where necessary. Beyond this he has not felt any unusual derangement in the company's business.

W. C. Scott, representative of the American Film Manufacturing Company, does not look forward to any falling off of trade or any interruption of the supply coming from the United States. A few subjects have been curtailed at present, but the shortage will not last long, in his opinion. All the printing is done on the premises of the branch. With the exception of two subjects, the company has on hand all its negatives up to September 28.

The British branch of Pathé Frères declares that business is sustained at a fair level, though, of course, it has on the whole dropped a little from normal. The company does not expect a shortage of films, and will be able to continue to supply customers.

Receive American Supply

The producing and distributing centers at Vincennes and Joinville continue to ship whatever pictures can be made under existing circumstances, and adequate arrangements for transportation have been effected. Of course, the films from the American branch continue to be received with the usual regularity.

Reports of correspondents concerning the condition of business in the largest exhibiting strongholds on the east side of England have a peculiar interest in their reflection on the situation brought about by the European war.

The cities bordering the North Sea, where extensive preparations for naval activities have drawn a great proportion of the inhabitants from peaceful pursuits to those directly concerned with offensive and defensive measures inaugurated by the British government, have become the centers of unrest affecting the attendance of motion picture theatres.

The Boston representative of the "Bioscope" reports that the city will be badly hit on account of its being so closely concerned with the war. The shipping of the ports has been paralyzed, but for all this at present the attendance at the principal theatres has not fallen off.

But this condition will not last, though it is thought that war views will bring out considerable of the population to picture houses.

Bad Conditions in East Yorkshire

The reports concerning the East Yorkshire district are dubious. The correspondent predicts a severe falling off at the pleasure resorts if the war continues. Already the cities of Scarborough, Withernsea, Hornsea, Bridlington and Whitby present, in his words, "a wintry appearance," whereas it should be the very height of the season.

All business has felt the blighting effect of the war, and the motion picture industry is feeling it in sympathy. It is said that the picture houses will probably suffer more. Even the permanent residents are not attending, as well as the visitors.

Hull has been hit worse than the other cities. A crisis has come from which it may be some time before it can recover. Two theatres recently closed, and, according to the correspondent, others are on the point of shutting their doors, to remain closed indefinitely. This is because the city is in the very heart of the war zone.

All the maritime business of the city has stopped completely on account of the vessels plying in the North Sea having been recalled. As a consequence, over 10,000 dock laborers alone have been thrown out of employment. With starvation staring these throngs in the face, their families naturally are no longer able to find recreation even in the cheap amusement of the motion picture theatres.

Other Parts of England

Reports from other parts of England are not buoyant.

At Newcastle-on-Tyne the effect has been serious. As a result of its being put in a state of defense, the populace has become excited over the prospects of attack, and this feverish condition of excitement has made the people forget amusements of all kinds.

As a consequence motion picture theatres have felt a severe loss of patronage. A canvas showed that since the outbreak of hostilities the attendance in the large houses has fallen to a third of what it was formerly.

It is said that Portsmouth, as "the home of the navy," will probably be more affected than any other city in England. The thousands of navy men who live in the town are now aboard ship, and, with the breadwinners away, the prospect of food rising in price, the families are not likely to patronize motion pictures. Not until the close of the war is there a prospect of any improvement.

People Still See Pictures in Cardiff

In Cardiff, where the number of picture patrons has become considerably lessened through concentration of troops elsewhere, which has drawn heavily on the local population, quite a good patronage has been maintained.

The reason is that because the tension has become so great from the excitement of the war people are glad to go to the theatres in sheer desire to get relief.

In Sheffield the motion picture theatres have felt the effects of the war excitement. It is stated that people are more interested in the extras and bulletin-boards outside the newspaper offices than the pictures shown in the theatres.

The local managers are endeavoring to hold patronage by exhibiting films depicting naval and military scenes. Practically the same conditions prevail in Manchester.

London Affected

Film attendance in London has also fallen off as a result of the war. In some sections of the city it maintains a high level, though what the future will bring forth no one wants to predict or think about.

The maintenance of good business applies to the theatres in Hammersmith and Shepherd's Bush. But in the northwestern district of the metropolis the reports are divided.

In some localities excellent siness is reported, while in other parts of the district dubious reports come from the managers.

The patriotism of the English people is reflected in the action of several motion picture proprietors in Middlesex, who have instituted a fund to be called "The Middlesex Kinema War Fund." The money collected will be used for the purpose of relieving the distress of widows and children of Middlesex sailors and soldiers killed in action.

Developing Chemicals Go Up

The chemicals used in developing films have felt the effect of the war. An inflation in price indicates that speculators are trying to corner the market in England, as they have been trying in America.

Rochester Theatre Abolishes Five-Cent Scale

Gordon Manager Raises Prices On Account of Increased Cost of Films —Predicts the Passing of Neighborhood Theatres

Special to The Motion Picture News

Rochester, Aug. 27.

ROCHESTER is soon to see the passing of the five-cent feature picture house. The advance in the cost of films is the cause for the advance in prices soon to take place.

The Gordon is the house which will do away with its five-cent price, and advance the admistion to ten cents for matinees. Heretofore, women and children have been able to obtain admission to the matinees for five cents. The price for men, however, was ten cents. When the raise takes place, ten cents will be the price for all in the afternoon.

Prices at night are ten and fifteen cents, for the balcony and ground floor, respectively, and it is reported that these will not be changed.

J. J. Raymond. resident manager of the Gordon, in discussing picture conditions in Rochester, said:

"When the house opened, a year and a half ago, we were about one year ahead of our time. We found it very hard to get features that we regarded as suitable for our house. We are having no trouble getting features now, however, as we are buying the best in the market, but they cost more money than ever, and no house can afford to operate for five cents, even for matinees for women, and pay such prices as are demanded for films these days.

"I believe that the day for the suburban house is past. While there are many in this city, the business that the downtown houses are doing this summer shows that folks like the bigger houses, which, because of their large capacity, can afford to give more for less money than the houses in the outskirts.

"We have had to stop selling tickets many nights this summer, and I cannot understand the wails of some managers concerning poor summer business.

"I figure that if I have something the other folks want to see, they will pay to see it, provided they can be comfortable.

"A house in the outskirts cannot hope to compete with the one downtown, because it can have no matinee business to speak of, and, without the matinees. no house can succeed. The outside house cannot compete with the larger house downtown in the matter of features, as the money is not there to buy them.

"Women come downtown, do a little shopping, and, when tired, stop in at a picture show. They see the latest films in first releases, and go home. If they go to a neighborhood house, they are apt to see these same films a week or two later."

San Francisco Police Ban War Films

Chief Puts Lid on Martial Picture, Fearing Riots Among Golden Gate City's Cosmopolitan Inhabitants—Exhibitor Defies Order and Is Arrested But Wins Temporary Injunction—League Protests—Stillwell Re-arrested on Second Charge

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

San Francisco, Aug. 24.

THE lamentable war in Europe has brought San Francisco exhibitors face to face with a new censorship problem, and one on which the trade seems to be divided. The matter has been one thrust upon exhibitors by Chief of Police David A. White, and already a skirmish has been fought out in court to determine its legal status.

Last week the Chief of Police issued an order to the effect that the exhibition of motion pictures showing battle scenes on either land or sea must be stopped indefinitely in this city, the idea being implied that there was grave danger of rioting, owing to the war in Europe and the cosmopolitan character of the population of San Francisco.

This order was of such a sweeping character that officials of the San Francisco Motion Picture Exhibitors League called upon Chief White before holding a regular meeting and protested against its being placed into effect.

War Scenes Prohibited

One of these officials told the Chief that at that time he was showing a picture containing scenes of a tribal war in the South Seas and explained how many of the pictures now being released contained war scenes which pertained in no way to the present struggle.

The immediate result of this visit was a modification of the order, and the restraining feature in the edict was limited to films showing the flags or uniforms of the countries now engaged in war.

Many exhibitors, however, were not satisfied with this order, claiming that it was entirely uncalled for, that it was discriminatory in that it did not include the billboards, the regular theatres or the daily press, and that it was a matter in which the Chief of Police had absolutely no jurisdiction.

Among those who objected to obeying the edict was Charles Stillwell, manager of the Silver Palace Theatre on Market street, who at the time was showing a military romance of the Franco-Prussian War, "Faithful Unto Death."

He persisted in showing the picture and was arrested, following a visit of Peter Peshon, of the Police Department, and member of the Board of Censorship, to the Silver Palace. The arrest, however, was not a matter in which the board was involved, as but one of its members viewed the picture, instead of the customary three.

Temporary Injunction Granted

An application for an injunction to restrain the Chief of Police from carrying out his orders was immediately filed and the case was assigned by Presiding Judge Sturtevant to Judge Seawell. When the matter came up in the court of the latter a temporary injunction was granted and the picture was shown for four days, a longer time than was originally intended.

In commenting on this matter Mr. Stillwell said:

"The Chief is trying to do that which even the President of the United States could not do legally. The censorship of motion pictures does not extend to war films. He takes the position that there might be rioting and a stampede in our places as a result of excited partisans seeing the fight scenes. He is a little premature, as is shown by the fact that during the four days that this picture was shown there was not the least sign of a disturbance in our theatre, or in any other house that I know of.

"The owner of a theatre is a better judge than anyone else of the class of pictures that he may show in his house. No one would think of showing a picture that would offend any of his patrons or that would be even remotely liable to cause a riot. If battlefield scenes were likely to do this, pictures containing these would be shunned by exhibitors without the need of an order from the Chief of Police. It is likely that there are houses in some districts of the city where it would be a wise policy to show films of a different character and exhibitors there are not attempting to show war pictures."

Police Seek New Attack

Chagrined at the effectual blocking of his censorship plan, the Chief of Police evidently searched studiously for some method of retaliation, and a few days after the first arrest of Mr. Stillwell he was taken into custody again on the charge that his poster display was obstructing the lobby.

The fact of the matter is that one of the display frames did project eight inches into the lobby from the line of the orchestrion. No action was taken on any other theatre owners, either for showing war pictures or for obstructing the lobbies of their places of amusement. On the day of his arrest photographs of lobbies of theatres within one block of the Silver Palace were taken, not for the purpose of embarrassing friendly competitors, but to illustrate that this house was being singled out.

The present censorship question is the first one that has been brought up in San Francisco since last March, when the management of the Portola Theatre succeeded in securing an injunction against the Board of Censorship when an attempt was made to stop an exhibition of the production "The Inside of the White Slave Traffic."

Past and Future Openings

D. J. Grauman, owner of Grauman's Imperial Theatre, has opened the Savoy Theatre on McAllister street, about a block from the present house. The Savoy Theatre is owned by W. A. MacKenzie and is a high-class house in every respect, having recently been redecorated and refurnished at a cost of several thousand dollars.

It has been the home of musical comedy and motion picture feature productions, but has been dark for several months. Mr. Grauman will conduct it along the same lines as Gauman's Imperial and will feature Jack London subjects there.

After having been closed for many months, during which time extensive reconstruction work has been done, the Globe Theatre in the Mission section is about ready to be reopened by Turner & Dahnken. This house has a capacity of about two thousand persons and boasts the distinguishing feature of being one of the largest houses in the country without a post to obstruct the view. The alterations now being completed have cost in the neighborhood of $10,000.

The Marcus Loew Corporation, which recently purchased the Sullivan & Considine circuit of vaudeville houses on the coast, is preparing to erect a large theatre in San Francisco where motion pictures will be shown exclusively. This house is to be located on Market street, near Sixth, and will cost about $400,000. The seating capacity will be 3,000.

A new motion picture house with a capacity of four hundred persons is to be opened shortly by S. C. Martenstein on Divisadero street, between Page and Haight. The theatre is being erected by Dan Sullivan.

Take Over Oakland Theatre

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has made arrangements for taking over a fine new theatre to be erected within the coming year at Fourteenth and Franklin streets, Oakland, Cal. Preliminary plans for this fine structure have already been made and construction work is to commence shortly.

The theatre will be in a club building that is to cost almost one million dollars and will have a seating capacity of 3,000. It is the intention to give up the house now being conducted there as soon as the new theatre can be made ready. This concern now has eight large theatres on its circuit.

Beach & Krohn, who conduct the Lorin Photoplay Theatre at Berkeley, Cal., will shortly open another fine house in that city. Work is already well under way on a fireproof theatre with steel frame at College and Ashby avenues, about fifteen blocks from the present house. This theatre will seat about 800 persons and will have a balcony.

F. Caesar has reopened the Bell Theatre at 538 Columbus avenue, San Francisco, the house having been closed for several weeks. M. L. LANGHORST.

PRICE OF METOL JUMPS IN LOS ANGELES

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Aug. 24.

There has been a scramble among local motion picture manufacturers for a supply of metol and other kinds of developing chemicals, scarce just now because of the supply being cut off because of the European war.

All of the larger companies were cared for by the Eastern officers, who demanded immediate fulfilment of yearly supplies according to contract. The hoarding of the visible supply caused a shortage, and almost hourly the price was increased.

According to wire advice received by wholesale dealers in Los Angeles, the price went from $3.75 on the day of declarations of war, to $14.00 per pound. Local dealers refused to sell more than one pound to a company.

Cincinnatians Flock to War Pictures

Exhibitor Posts Them in Conspicuous Place Where They Will Be Read Close to Posters Advertising Pictures

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Cincinnati, Ohio, Aug. 26.

WAR news and war pictures form an attractive combination in certain sections of Cincinnati. Those theatres whose patronage is drawn chiefly from the foreign element have been making persistent demands for war pictures of any kind. The various exchange managers have done their best to supply this demand for thrills that are in line with the current news.

A. J. Bauman, who operates the Dreamland Theatre, at 240 West Fifth street, this week secured "The Fall of France," an historical war picture. It made an instant appeal to the foreign element.

In order to make the attractiveness of the picture more complete, Mr. Bauman secured every edition of the local papers and several New York and Chicago papers, whose headlines told of nothing but the latest war news in Europe. These he posted daily as bulletins within easy reading distance of the sidewalk.

The result was that hundreds of Cincinnati's Hungarian, Austrian, Roumanian, Servian and German population, were attracted to the theatre lobby first by the varied exhibit of war news.

The attraction of the posters of the photoplay was secondary, but after reading the war news, the posters made an undeniable appeal to the people. Bauman almost doubled his business during the time he was showing the picture.

War Slackens Business in Toronto

Some Small Houses Close—Others Complain of Dullness—Bigger Theatres Maintain Their High Standards—Music an Important Feature

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Toronto, Ont., Aug. 26.

AFTER a very quiet summer season, the advent of war in Europe has not improved local conditions for the motion picture men. All the film exchanges and most of the exhibitors are complaining bitterly of dull times, and a few of the smaller houses are entirely closed.

Toronto houses continue to maintain their high standard of entertainment, and the president of the local motion picture association reports little or no trouble is ever experienced with the censors.

The majority of the houses are run as "picture shows" only—several of the larger houses give a combination of pictures and vaudeville, but the illustrated songs are now entirely eliminated. A special note of interest is the musical end of the program. One large house is equipped with a mechanical orchestra, and several theatres have installed the Wurlitzer orchestra with huge success, and the high state of efficiency that the orchestras generally maintain is worthy of comment. Features are still a drawing card and the "Million Dollar Mystery" is going strong.

One of the largest theatres on the outskirts of the city has an added attraction in an "amateur night" once a week, and judging by the large and enthusiastic audience, combined with the excellent talent, the move is one in the right direction for success.

Poor Doggie Had Nervous Prostration

Masseur Testifies in Back Salary Suit of Screen Actress to Giving Mud Baths to Ailing Animal Needed in Picture

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 24.

NEVER did a new corporation attempt to do business under more distressing conditions than has the Southern Sun Film Company, a new enterprise, with headquarters in Spokane. So far the management and its players have spent a lot more time in the courtroom than in its studio.

First Betty Thorp, leading woman in the company's first film, an advertising story called "When Betty Marries," filed suit for $99, declaring the sum to be due her for back salary. The company maintained that she had agreed to work for next to nothing "to get the experience," and showed, further, that it had expended $75 on her.

Miss Thorp told the judge that part of this sum went for treatment for her dog, which was sick and which was needed to pose in the films. A negro masseur testified that the dog had "nervous prostration" and that he had given it mud baths. Justice Fred Witt reserved decision.

About the same time, in Justice Samuel C. Hyde's court, there was being heard a claim for $99 brought against the film company by the Conley Taxi & Cab Company. The latter won. JAN DRUMMOND.

Making His Theatre a Midsummer Oasis

Keeping His House, His Patrons and Himself Cool on the Hottest of Dog Days is a System with this Exhibitor—And the System is a Part of His Success; Nothing is Overlooked in the Reckoning

MANAGER J. E. Schlank stood in the entrance of the Hipp Theatre in Omaha and looked out upon the simmering pavement. His brow felt as though a thorough mopping with a handkerchief would be a blessing to it.

But he didn't use the handkerchief. That was a part of his system. There was a system to everything Manager Schlank did.

He was dressed in the lightest of Palm Beach suits. His clothes were neatly pressed, his hair was parted in the coolest manner, and everything about him denoted coolness.

He was engaged in his most vigorous pastime for July and August—dodging the dog days.

THE Hipp Theatre stands on the north side of a busy street, a block and a half from what is designated as the business center of Omaha.

Beside it is the Gaiety Theatre, a popular burlesque headquarters in the legitimate theatre season. On all sides it is hot in the summer. Cooling soda fountains are here and there, but like all city streets—hot in summer time.

On this particular day, one of the hottest during July, Manager Schlank was not pessimistic. His look was a look of optimism, as he greeted a regular flow of patrons. Many of them, mopping their brows, looked forward with pleasure to their seats in Manager Schlank's theatre.

It was the noon hour.

"These people," said Manager Schlank, "are a mixture of those who want to see the pictures and those who want to rest for a while in a cool place. See that sign?" and he indicated a picture of a block of ice and the popular wording, "It's Cool Inside." Several people stopped during the next few minutes, read the sign, looked at the inviting doors, and went inside.

Some looked at Manager Schlank. Some looked at his ticket seller. And there they saw, without realizing, a part of his system.

TO stand out on the hot sidewalk and look at the entrance to the theatre was a pleasing sight. The very pictures—water, woods and all—looked cooling and inviting.

And Manager Schlank and his cashier? Dressed in light-looking clothes, immaculately kept, and with pleasant smiles, they did not detract from the cooling effect.

Then a person in front of the theatre could see the outflow of patrons. They looked cool. The air wafted through the entrance was cooling.

The next thing was to go inside.

There was no drone of fans, no noticeable rush of air, and—best of all—none of the objectionable summer odor found in so many of the downtown theatres where everybody attends.

The system of ventilation, governed by a huge exhaust fan at the screen end of the theatre, consisted of strings of fans along the walls and two strings of fans arranged to blow along the two aisles. (The theatre is almost as wide as it is long and seats nearly 600 people.)

"THE air is renewed every minute and a half," said Manager Schlank. "That exhaust fan is so powerful it would pull these doors open if we would turn it on full force. Then we have a dripping system of cooling and ventilation."

Needless to say, the screen was large and the machine was such that the pictures were shown without a quiver. And an inverted lighting system is used inside the theatre, too.

Here and there were men and women, clerks and business people, reading the noon editions of the newspapers. "They eat their luncheons and then come here for a cool place to rest and to look over their papers," said Manager Schlank. It was light enough to read a newspaper, but the pictures were much more plain in many other theatres that are darker.

"I am not running a short-time spooning place," said Schlank, "so that's one reason I keep it so light."

The ushers, the door man and the musicians, dressed to look as cool as the manager, gave away several thousand advertising fans a day. As they go out the patrons have to pass a large water cooler, and at least half of them stop for a drink.

As they go out another phase of Manager Schlank's system comes to light. He is a good "mixer."

"I know half of these people by name," he said, indicating his house of patrons, "and I speak to them. I see some of them missing for a week or two, and I know they are on a vacation. I speak to them and welcome them when they return. They appreciate it.

"MYSELF?" and then he launched on his philosophy of summer business—a philosophy that may be valuable to many other exhibitors this summer and next.

"I take no vacation now. The time to look out for your business, I believe, is when it is dull. When it is thriving it will look out for itself. Just now business is bad. Maybe we are losing money.

"But I am here, giving my customers the best of attention, keeping the standard of our pictures and our service up the same as if it was the busiest part of the year, not retrenching in finances, but doing my best.

"And I am certain it will repay me.

"Not this month, perhaps, but next month. Then my business will double and I will make back in a month what I have lost during the summer.

"My customers will remember I never stoop to lower my shows for anything, and they will depend on me.

"When I advertise a special feature they have learned to know it will be good if my word is back of it."

THAT, in brief, is Manager Schlank's system. Not overlooking the slightest chance to establish a more secure reputation and by keeping up a standard, is his keynote.

And for two years he has been a successful proprietor of a motion picture theatre in Omaha and is now the president of the Hippodrome Amusement Company, which is planning to build an exclusive motion picture house that will cost nearly $100,000.

"Well, I'll see you next week," was his smiling farewell, as he opened another package of programs—little booklets furnished by the corporation which furnished his films, and which included not only the programs, but pictures of sea scenes, advertisements by companies furnishing vacation and outing goods, and a synopsis of the pictures for the coming week.

POSTER ROLL PLEASES EXHIBITORS

Special to The Motion Picture News

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.

The Electric Film Supply Company has installed a convenience for its patrons in the form of a poster roll. On this is rolled the large 6-sheet posters of the productions handled by this office, enabling the exhibitor to view the "paper" for his theatre in time-saving manner.

This is the first device of the kind seen in Washington, but it is worth being adopted by the other exchanges. Manager O'Brien reports that it has proved a valuable office equipment.

EDNA GOODRICH MAROONED IN BELGIUM

The production of the "Warrens of Virginia," in which Miss Goodrich was to have appeared for the Lasky company is completed, and the cast was engaged, but has now been dispersed by De Mille and the production postponed until the early part of January.

VITAGRAPH DIRECTOR SUFFERS LIGHTNING SHOCK

Director Captain Lambert, of the Vitagraph Company, who stood next to Chad Fisher, a Vitagraph camera man, when he was killed by lightning in Yonkers, N. For some time he was completely paralyzed in these members. He was unable to feed himself. His arms are still in bad condition, but it is hoped that he will recover entirely from the shock, although he was badly burned.

Pittsburgh Will Demand Sunday Opening Right

May Appeal to Legislature if District Attorney, Elected by Church Votes, Ignores Plea—West Virginia Exhibitors Ask Co-operation

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Pittsburgh, Aug. 26.

THERE is soon to be a battle on in this district, and the fighting is to be waged through to the end, over the demand of some of the motion picture houses for the right to operate their theatres on Sunday.

Already the motion picture men of West Virginia have opened their war and ask the co-operation of the motion picture men here, declaring that both states making the demand at the same time, there is a far better chance to get the needed legislation, since many of the towns in West Virginia are so close to Pittsburgh.

Citizens along the Norfolk & Western Railroad in McDowell County have already appealed to District Attorney F. C. Cook, asking him to let the motion picture theatres operate on Sunday. They have stated there is nothing else to do on that day in that district, and with the theatres open the young people would not be so liable to get into mischief as they do at present without the theatres to attend on Sundays.

That the District Attorney in Allegheny County could grant the theatres the right to operate is certain, but it is not likely that he will do so, for he was elected more by the church people than by any other faction.

He has selected as the head of the county detective force a minister from one of the churches whose sole ambition is to close everything all day Sunday.

It may be possible that the theatres will appeal to the legislature for the right to operate on that day, and by so doing go over the head of the local attorney's office.

Omaha Exhibitors Win Community Fight

Fail to Exclude Theatres from Residential Districts—Protest Dies Before City Commission—Three Neighborhood Houses Now Planned

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Omaha, Aug. 25.

AN atempt to prevent the erection of motion picture theatres in the residence district of Omaha has proven a failure after a fight that never reached beyond the city commission, and plans will be announced soon for at least three new community theatres.

The East Hanscom Park Improvement Club objected to the erection of a motion picture house at Thirty-second street and Woolworth avenue last spring, and petitioned the commission to pass an ordinance preventing the erection of such theatres in the residence communities.

The fight started at once. The city attorney's office said such an ordinance could not be passed unless another was passed declaring motion picture theatres a nuisance and classing them with pool halls and saloons. The building commission office declared it was a plan that would hinder the growth of Omaha's business district if passed.

But the Improvement Club stood firm. The motion picture people declared that the matter would be taken into the courts as soon as it was passed.

The commissioners adopted a wise plan. They kept still, allowed the excitement to die down without passing the proposed ordinance, and now the motion picture houses will be built the same as ever.

So that will not stand in the way of progress in Omaha.

Spokane Houses Stand Fresh-Air Test

Local Health Officer Starts Investigation, but Finds That Exhibitors Have Already Provided Necessary Devices for Health of Patrons

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Spokane, Aug. 24.

A CAMPAIGN for better air and more of it in the picture theatres has been inaugurated by Dr. J. B. Anderson, city health officer. As a result, the houses which are well equipped with ventilating devices are capitalizing the investigation.

Dr. Anderson's plan is to take samples of atmosphere from the picture houses during the evening, after they have been filled with patrons most of the day. The air samples are tested in the city laboratories.

The first report covers the investigation of the Clem and Casino theatres, which are run by the same man.

The Casino recently was outfitted with a system of ventilators said to be the most efficient in the city. The test at that theatre was made in a corner in the rear of the loge, where the circulation is supposed to be the least in the house. Even there it was shown that the air was completely changed four times in an hour. It was concluded that in the main body of the house the changes were at least twice as frequent.

With the Problem of Educating a Town to Motion Pictures On His Hands, This Exhibitor Made It His Business to See that Everybody Came to the Theatre Once—Then He Made It His Business to See They Kept On Coming

IT is a rather difficult thing for a man to start a motion picture theatre in a town where motion pictures have never been seen before, especially when one is to meet at the very outset with the destruction of all one's property by fire. It is even more difficult when the man concerned knows nothing about pictures and has to learn himself while educating his possible patrons.

But this has been accomplished by R. Blanchard, owner of the largest motion picture theatre in Bogalusa, La., who has not only made a great success here, but who in the past few weeks has established a second house just across the state line in Columbia, Miss.

In the first place, one has to understand the Bogalusa spirit. This is the way the city advertises itself:

"Population 1906, 0; 1914, 10,000." And this is true. The city is growing by leaps and bounds with every yearly census.

It is a model city with everything that it possesses as modern as everything can be. The secret of the success of the city is that it is the home of the Great Southern Lumber Company, owners of the largest saw-mill industry in the world. This company picked out a spot in the pine woods of Louisiana and here it has built its mills and a model town.

It calls itself a magic city, and there seems some ground for the claim, for those who came here with the founders and after them, to make their fortunes, have not been led afield in their dreams.

MR. BLANCHARD'S story will be interesting to those who are wondering how to make a success of the motion picture business in an untried town and to the man who is without a practical knowledge of the business. There are scores of openings right here in Louisiana and Mississippi, for that matter, for the man who is willing to start at the bottom and learn the lesson Mr. Blanchard has taught.

That is, there are openings in Louisiana and Mississippi if some one gets the prize spots before Mr. Blanchard comes to the end of his policy of eventually spreading his business to every town in this section that provides an opening, just as soon as he gets the time and the opportunity.

But here is his story:

"Three years ago I came to Bogalusa. I had been in the livery business elsewhere, but had sold out. I had a little capital that I wanted to invest if I could get a good opening, but I wanted to see where I could get quick returns on my investment. I did not expect to 'get rich quick,' but of necessity I had to get into some line from which I could earn a steady and a reasonably certain income.

"I owe my inspiration to advertisements in the daily papers of New Orleans. I was struck by the advertising of the numerous motion picture houses and by the number of them operating in that city. And the moment I reflected, I realized that there was not a single permanent amusement enterprise in Bogalusa.

"Here was a town of some 6,000 or 7,000 people, at that time. Save for the Y. M. C. A. and music at the park, there was no amusement of any kind. Now and then a circus or a traveling organization came and took away with it a quantity of the people's money. In the mills here, practically every man was earning good pay, the sawyers, excellent money. The business men who were dependent on the workmen's trade were prosperous. The men were compelled to go to other towns for amusement, for the simple reason that they had none at home.

"MY first theatre was the Pleasant Hill, which I built and opened Sept. 1, 1911. I knew nothing about the picture business, but before starting my theatre I studied it as thoroughly as possible and bought the very best equipment that I could get.

"At first I experimented with film services until I had found the faults of about all of them and finally determined on the one that I desired to use. I have made no change for two years.

"I want to repeat that there had been no permanent amusement enterprise here before, and I had to educate the people to the films before I did anything else. Of course, there were a number of skilled workmen here from other cities and towns where there are now picture theatres, and the first thing that I did was to learn who these were. Even before I opened, I let them know my intentions and got them stirring the curiosity of others.

"It is a peculiar trait of human nature that any man is fond of telling the other man about something that the latter does not know. I relied largely on this. I got the men who had seen motion pictures to talking to the others about the opportunities that they were going to have. Before I opened, I had aroused a considerable amount of curiosity.

"So my theatre started and I had already decided on the completion of my idea to interest the people in films. To those who had never seen films and who would not invest their money to satisfy their curiosity I gave a few tickets, being careful not to 'paper' my house. I used discrimination in this distribution and I soon had a considerable clientele built among those unfamiliar with pictures.

"I made it my business to see that everyone came to my theatre at least once, to find out what motion pictures were, if nothing more. I counted on getting a certain percentage of permanent customers, especially among the younger generation. Perhaps this is one of the reasons that I have been so successful, for this is a city of the younger men.

"I AM a great believer in publicity, if for no other reason than that I owe my success to the inspiration which motion picture advertising gave me, but in Bogalusa there is only a weekly newspaper and the people depend almost exclusively on the New Orleans dailies for their news. Naturally it was impossible for me to advertise in the latter, so I had to get a substitute.

"I secured a large sign board in front of the postoffice, in the central part of the city and a common gathering point and there I started out to advertise my daily program.

"Since then I have developed the policy into issuing a daily circular, which I try to put in the hands of everyone, advertising my next bill. I am particular that these circulars go to the housewives, for I find that this pays best.

"Incidentally, I may say that I have pursued the policy of interesting the women first. I am now distributing fans to them as an advertising policy.

"Just one year after I had opened my theatre burned, and I lost everything that I had. My building and equipment was worth $4,000 and I had practically no insurance. Although that was a bitter moment for me, that fire was the very best thing that ever happened.

"I repeat that the people had been without amusement before, but with the opening of my house they had been gradually educated one by one to the pictures. It was not until my house burned and they were again without amusement of any sort that they fully realized what it was to be without any place to go for pleasure. I found myself with a new and increasing demand for my show, and so I lost no time in getting a new theatre.

"THE Great Southern Lumber Company was anxious to have amusement for its men and to keep them at home and contented. I made arrangements with this company to lease a plot of ground on Avenue B, and there built the Magic Theatre, a house with a seating capacity of 500, which I now operate. My experiments had done me good and I was able to resume business with a better house, more modern equipment and a more thorough knowledge of the whole business.

"I want to say here that my lack of knowledge of the business when I started was an advantage to me, and will be to any man who will devote his time to its study. I knew that I did not know and I paid attention to the smallest details, kept watching where I could improve my service, looking for the mistakes I was making and attempting to correct them. My experiments helped me to give the people a better service.

"Lack of newspaper advertising opportunities has handicapped me in one direction, but it has caused me to pay attention to the individual.

"I realize that I cannot reach him so thoroughly by general publicity, so I make it a point to know who is coming to my theatre and who is not, and WHY the latter are staying away.

"I make it a point to know who my regular patrons are and if I notice that a man and his wife, and children are staying away I send them free tickets for the whole family, and then try to find out why they have lost interest.

"If the fault has been mine, I try to remedy it and get them back into the habit by giving them what they want. I find that it is not necessary to take votes of the audiences or anything of that sort to determine the sort of films desired.

"A manager can tell by watching his audiences in the theatre and listening to the remarks after the performance. I gauge my business largely by this.

"I believe that passes are like a dose of medicine and I use them as such. The attendance at motion pictures is a habit to a great extent and it is the biggest mistake in the world to let the patron get away from the habit too long.

"I see to it that they come back very soon, even if they have to come at my expense.

"The men among my patrons are nearly all men who work hard all day and the women do a great portion of their own work. I have found that they want films that amuse and keep the interest aroused, and that they do not want to puzzle their minds over problem plays. I do not use long and involved features. I am now showing one serial, "Lucille Love." One of my first demands upon the film men is that they must furnish me clean plays.

"ON May 7 of this year I opened the Pearl Theatre, in Columbia, Miss., which was built for me by the Pearl River Real Estate Company, at a cost of $5,000. It also seats 500 people and is much on the order of my theatre here. Columbia is a smaller town but somewhat of the class as Bogalusa, and I have pursued the same policy there.

"I have had advantage in Columbia of the experience I have gained here and so my business gained more rapidly from the first performance. I believe, though, that my original and my subsequent success has been largely due to my lack of knowledge in the first place and my consequent necessity for careful study.

"I would not advise the novice to go into the business in a new town on any other basis than that of an earnest student who is willing to devote his whole time and mind to the business and who is willing to see the faults of himself and his productions and who will lose no time in correcting the errors.

"It is going to take hard work and a careful eye for every detail, but the man who is willing will learn and learn thoroughly. It is only a question of perseverance.

Omaha Operators Fight for Recognition

Arrests Follow Passing of Cards by Union Sympathizers—Exhibitors League Head Gets into Court—No Wage Demands Yet

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 25.

A CRITICAL stage in the support of a local of the International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators is existing in Omaha. The fight became so bitter recently that two men, one a union operator and the other a non-union sympathizer, were hauled into police court.

The local here is No. 343, with W. C. Denney, Elite Theatre No. 2, president; Frank Lewis, Eclectic Exchange, vice-president; C. E. Boone, Orpheum, South Omaha, secretary; Robert Brewer, Franklin Theatre, treasurer; Dave F. Somer, Airdome, Twenty-ninth and Farnam streets, business agent; August Herman, Ideal, assistant business agent; and L. L. Craig, of the Farnum Theatre, representative to the Central Labor Union.

J. J. Goggins, a sympathizer with the Union operators, was passing around cards calling upon all union men and sympathizers to patronize only the theatres where union operators are employed. A list of such theatres was given. On the other side of the card was a reproduction of the union card displayed where union operators are employed. He was arrested on a charge of passing cards and fined $10 and costs.

John Daly, said to be identified with the forces fighting the union men, was arrested on a charge of assaulting Morris Miltenberg, union operator at the Farnam Theatre, 1413 Farnam street. He was fined $1.

Sam Goldberg, president of the Omaha branch of the M. P. E. L. A., was arrested for obstructing the sidewalks in front of this theatre with sign boards. The union men say they are positive Mr. Goldberg blames them for his arrest. Mr. Goldberg denies it. He was given a suspended fine of $25 and costs.

There has been a union of motion picture machine operators here off and on for several years. It has been a fight to exist, say the union operators, but they are at last succeeding. They have placed a representative in the Central Labor Union, the chief union body in the city, and are coming to be recognized more and more.

They are not anticipating a demand for higher wages just yet, they say, but are emphasizing the "careful operator" and "safety first" feature of the general employment of union men. They are calling attention to a recent fire, where the fire warden learned, an eleven-year-old boy had been assisting the operator.

The fight has not come before the public much, but the unfavorable situation existing for all concerned because of the arrests is bringing a certain amount of undesirable newspaper notoriety. That the exhibitors are taking an interest and may side one way or the other is the statement of the union men, who say the exhibitors have already discussed the situation with considerable heat.

Wilkes-Barre Exhibitors Aid Relief Fund

Fifteen Motion Picture Managers Give $1,600, All Their Sunday Receipts, for the Benefit of Tornado Victims—Sheriff Opposed Sabbath Opening, Not Crediting Them With Sincerity, But Is Overruled by the Mayor

Special to The Motion Picture News

Wilkes-Barre, Aug. 26.

SECOND only in importance to the tornado that visited this city, killing six persons and damaging property to the extent of $500,000 and rendering three hundred homeless, was the motion picture problem that formed the storm center last Sunday in performances for relief benefits.

Last Friday the motion picture exhibitors of the valley announced they would hold benefits Sunday afternoon and night. The lid is on tight here and Saturday morning Sheriff Lewis P. Kniffen announced he would raid every theatre that opened for business.

The sheriff said the motion picture exhibitors were not sincere and if they wanted to contribute to the homeless and foodless victims of the cyclone they should donate a week-day's receipts to the sufferers.

A wave of indignation swept over the community at the sheriff's mandate. The Chamber of Commerce held a noon-day meeting Saturday, at which the sheriff with a bodyguard of ministers appeared and threatened the strong arm of the law on the exhibitors if they opened Sunday.

Mayor John V. Kosek attacked the sheriff unmercifully, telling him the sheriff was an uninvited and unwelcome guest at the meeting. He told the sheriff in plain language that he was overstepping his authority and that his raiding squad was not within its rights in interfering until the local police force had failed to keep the peace.

MINISTERS who likewise sided with the sheriff were told by Colonel Asher Miner, head of the Miner-Hillard Milling Company, and former colonel of the 9th Regiment, that the clergy would take up collections for themselves Sunday and he had not yet heard any of them volunteering to turn over what they collected, to the helpless.

The sheriff was then excused from the meeting, after which the executive committee went on record as favoring the Sunday benefits and agreeing to pay the fines of the exhibitors when raided by the sheriff.

Mayor Kosek said the exhibitors would have to be tried before his court and he would impose the minimum fine of $4.50, including costs.

Following this, Mayor Kosek announced that he would detail several policemen to stand guard at the doors of the theatres and arrest the sheriff or any of his deputies should they attempt to enter the place, on the grounds of disturbing the peace.

THIS had a salutory effect on the vigilant sheriff, and when the big bluecoats presented themselves Sunday at the theatres there was not a sheriff nor deputy in sight.

The programs were run off as arranged and nearly $1,600 was turned over to the relief committee, as follows.

THE Sun Amusement Company, now operating the Sun Theatre, this city, has leased the Nesbitt Theatre, South Main street, from the Shuberts and will institute a photoplay policy. The Nesbitt has always been one of Wilkes-Barre's popular legitimate theatres, and the announcement comes as a big surprise to those connected with the show business in northeastern Pennsylvania.

The new regime will book Paramount reels, according to an announcement made to-day by Manager J. C. Rohn. The Nesbitt comfortably seats 1,600 persons and is equipped with more than the legal requirements of exits and passageways.

The curtain will be placed at the extreme back of the stage. An orchestra will be secreted behind plants on the stage. It is expected that the Nesbitt will open under the new policy on Labor Day.

Rochester Now Has Twenty-five Cent Theatre

Winter Garden, the Old Fitzhugh Hall, Opens with "Neptune's Daughter" at this Price—Regent to Show at Twenty Cents

Special to The Motion Picture News

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 26.

ROCHESTER at last has a twenty-five-cent feature theatre. The theatre formerly known at Fitzhugh Hall, which has had an unsuccessful career under several managements, has been transformed into the Winter Garden, and will open on August 31 with Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter."

Other big feature films are promised for weeks to follow. The house will be under the management of Buffalo interests, with Harry Rogers as local manager.

The twenty-five-cent admission is the highest charged so far by any Rochester theatre, and local picture men are much interested in watching the venture. All realize that the trend in the motion picture world now is toward higher prices of admission, as the big features are prepared and put on the market.

The closest approach to the twenty-five cent figure so far in Rochester is by the Gordon, which has been getting fifteen cents at night.

The new Regent Theatre, on East avenue, which will open in October, will have a general admission price of twenty cents, it is understood, with box and loge seats at thirty cents. The Regent, the Gordon and the Winter Garden will all show feature films, which will give Rochester three first-class theatres. No definite announcement as to prices has been made by the Regent.

The Gordon and the Regent are both modern theatres, constructed particularly for the motion picture business, while the Winter Garden is an old hall remodeled. The Regent has the added advantage of having a stage fully equipped for vaudeville.

EXHIBITORS WIN FIRST SUNDAY FIGHT

Special to The Motion Picture News

Binghamton, N. Y., Aug. 27.

The local exhibitors have won their first fight in the Sunday closing action. Some weeks ago the police closed all houses on Sunday and the court at Elmira, N. Y., has removed the ban and granted a temporary injunction against the city.

Last Sunday the public expressed their feeling with reference to Sunday shows by packing nearly every house in town.

ATSCO AND ALCO HEAD FEATURE COMBINE

New Enterprise Includes All-Star and California Motion Picture Corporations, Popular Plays and Players, Favorite Players and Excelsior, with Consolidation of Alco and Atsco, Inc.—Walter Hoff Seely, President of Firm—Program of Features Announced

ONE of the most important of recent developments in the motion picture industry, far-reaching in its effect among producers and exhibitors, is the completion of plans by Walter Hoff Seely, of Atsco, Inc., and Al Lichtman, of the Alco Film Corporation, for the extensive marketing of high-grade releases produced by some of the best-known firms in the country.

The Alco Film Company and Atsco, Inc., have been consolidated with a capital of $1,500,000. The name of the former concern has been changed to the Alco Film Corporation, and will handle the releases of the following producing firms:

The All-Star Feature Corporation, the California Motion Picture Corporation, Popular Plays and Players, Inc., the Favorite Players Film Company, and the Excelsior Feature Film Company.

The officers of the Alco Film Corporation are as follows: Walter Hoff Seely, of Atsco, Inc., president; Al Lichtman, formerly president of the Alco Film Company, vice-president and general manager; William Sievers, of the New Grand Central Theatre Company, St. Louis, treasurer; William H. Wright, treasurer of the Excelsior Feature Film Company and general manager of W. S. Lloyd Company, among the largest wall-paper importers in the United States, secretary.

Among the directors of the Alco Film Corporation are: Samuel Newhouse, of Salt Lake City; a Western copper magnate; E. A. Henkle, of the Globe Ticket Company, Philadelphia; Robert T. Kane, president of Atsco, Inc.; Edmund Koeln, a prominent citizen of St. Louis, who probably will be a candidate for mayor of that city in the fall; James J. Reilly, owner of two important theatres in Alton, Ill., who is also interested in other enterprises, and L. Lawrence Weber, of New York City, owner of the Longacre Theatre, New York, and interested in Popular Plays and Players.

The recognized abilities of the men directly connected with filmdom and the reputation of the others in the general business world, constitute a strong guarantee of success for the new corporation.

The company intends to give exhibitors a feature film service of distinction. Twenty exchanges will be established throughout the United States for distribution of the pictures manufactured by the five producing companies.

The Alco Film Corporation is planning to bring about complete cooperation between the first-class exhibitor and representative manufacturers, whose productions have become known all over the country for their high level of merit.

A feature a week will be released beginning October 5. The releases will consist of screen dramatizations of "legitimate" successes and best selling novels, in which famous theatrical stars appear before the camera.

The releases with the dates, names of the stars and the companies are as follows:

October 5, "The Nightingale," starring Ethel Barrymore, the All-Star Feature Film Corporation; October 12, "Salomy Jane," Vera Michelena and House Peters, the California Motion Picture Corporation; October 19, "The Ragged Earl," Andrew Mack, Popular Plays and Players, Inc.; October 26, "Key to Yesterday," Carlyle Blackwell, the Favorite Players Film Corporation; November 2, "The Path Forbidden," Octavia Handworth, Excelsior Feature Film Company; November 9, "The Education of Mr. Pipp," All-Star Feature Corporation; November 16, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," Vera Michelena and House Peters, the California Motion Picture Corporation; November 23, "Michael Strogoff," Jacob P. Adler, Popular Plays and Players, Inc.; and on November 30, "The Man Who Could Not Lose," Carlyle Blackwell, Favorite Plays Film Company.

The consolidation of the Alco Film Company with Atsco, Inc., in the formation of the Alco Film Corporation is designed to give exhibitors taking the feature service opportunities to get the lowest discounts on motion picture theatre equipment of all kinds, including carbons and other things affected by the war.

The general theatre equipment business of Atsco, Inc., which has its ramifications in all parts of the country where motion pictures are in demand, however, will be continued separately.

The standing of the producing companies releasing their pictures through the Alco Film Corporation and the long array of legitimate stars in important plays produced by the members of the distributing agency indicate, in connection with the advantages offered the exhibitor taking the service, a period of uninterrupted success from the start.

Hammerstein Opens Lexington Opera House

Well-Known Impresario, Who Realized That Motion Pictures Have Become the Most Popular Form of Entertainment, Now a Film Manager

HAMMERSTEIN'S Lexington opened its doors to the public of New York City, on Friday evening, August 21. The house, situated on Lexington avenue, between Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets, is one of the largest in New York, with a seating capacity of over two thousand.

The theatre is well equipped and every seat is placed so that its occupant may have an unobstructed view of the screen. On each side of the stage there are three tiers of boxes, each comprising five rows. The price of these is fifty cents for all performances. The prices of admission to the rest of the house is ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents.

The program for the first week consisted of an overture by the orchestra, led by Max Hirschfeld; a Keystone comedy followed this and then A. Bimboni gave a recital on the $50,000 organ. Eclair scientific subjects followed, and then a scene from "Aida" was enacted and brought forth great applause. The main picture of the evening was "The Last Volunteer," Eclectic's war picture. This was followed by another operatic act from "Faust," and the Vitagraph comedy, "The Honeymooners" wound up the program.

The executive staff of the house is as follows: Lyle D. Andrews, general manager and treasurer; Fred L. Bennage, pictorial manager; Henry Steinman, chief electrician; Max Hirschfeld, conductor of the orchestra, and A. Bimboni, organist.

The program of the house will be similar to the Strand Theatre. One big feature will be exhibited each week, supplemented by smaller pictures and operatic attractions.

REEL FELLOWS HOLD MEETING

Chicago, Aug. 26.

One of the most successful meetings held by the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago was enjoyed on Wednesday evening at the Advertising Club headquarters, where the meeting members banqueted and enjoyed a well selected program.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "The Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "The Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

A LIVE WIRE BABY SHOW

A BABY show was given in the Shenandoah Theatre, St. Louis, recently as a benefit for fresh air camps in the various parks in the city during the hot weather. The benefit was originally intended for the Compton Heights Baptist Church, but the deacons and trustees decided that it was against the policy of the church to accept benefits raised by a baby show—in a theatre!

So the proceeds of the benefit went to provide tents and cots for poor babies and their mothers. Matrons' services, ice, mosquito netting and other conveniences were also provided. Mayor Kiel awarded the prizes to the winning babies, and prominent men and women of St. Louis were the judges. Motion pictures were the only rival attraction of the babies.

HAILING THE VICTORS

THE New Grand Theatre, at Eminence, Ky., recently gave free tickets to the young women winners in a basket-ball contest, and their young men escorts.

A satisfactory measure of success appears to be coming to the New Grand, which is making a strong bid for popularity in the town of Eminence.

A number of special attractions are being given each week and the managers, Ellis & Early, say that the public is appreciative of the effort being made to give the best in the way of entertainment and amusement is evidenced by the good crowds of the most representative people of the town and community regularly in attendance.

MOON VINE DECORATIONS

H. M. Rohmberg, manager of the Columbia Airdome, 6240 Columbia avenue, St. Louis, has made an aid of nature in beautifying his theatre.

Moon vines and various other climbing plants have been trained over the sides of the airdome, and their fresh greenness adds much to the attractiveness of the place.

HOW THE TENTH MANAGER STRUCK TEN

NINE managers had presided over the fortunes, good and bad, mostly bad, of the 18th Street Theatre, 1800 South 18th, St. Louis, when William O. Reeve acquired the property. The place had never paid, not one of the nine preceding managers had ever developed the least bit of stoop from carrying the box-office receipts.

Reeve did not expect to buy many bonds with the profits of the place for the first few months; to make good, to keep the entries on the right side of the ledger, no matter how small they were, was as much as he expected to do.

How Reeve did what he set out to do, how he worked and schemed to increase his attendance is an interesting story.

One of the first things he did was to study his neighborhood. He talked to the people that came to the theatre. He asked their opinions about films. He found that they liked comedy of the Keystone variety; forthwith the Keystones were put on his program. He heard several talking about the serial pictures, and within a week "Kathlyn" and "Lucille Love" made their appearance on his screen.

Things were looking up a little by this time, a fair sized audience was coming to the place, and the problem of pleasing those who came, and of getting a larger audience to come was tackled.

Here Reeve did some original thinking.

Nine exhibitors out of ten put all their efforts on dull nights in the week. "Good nights like Saturday and Sunday," they argue, "will take care of themselves, the people will come anyway; what we want to do is to get them to come on the dull nights."

And with this reasoning they hammer away with special features, trading stamps, groceries, and other pulling schemes.

Reeve reversed this rule. Why spend time and money in a vain effort to get people to come to a theatre when they do not want to come? Let them come on the nights when they have the money to spare and the time to come, and then entertain them so well that they will come again and again. He gave them the films they wanted to see on the nights they wanted to come.

He arranged a spanking good program for Saturday and Sunday, and the scheme worked. It was only a few weeks until he had to start giving Saturday matinees, and only a still shorter time until he had to continue the matinees right through the supper hour without a break.

From that time on things were easy. Eighteenth Street became easy street. Reeve began to make money, the first one in ten to strike ten.

When the hot weather came, the problem of holding the audience presented itself. To close the theatre would be fatal, the fine patronage he had created would drift away during the closed season.

Again Reeve used his thinker. Every inch of land for blocks around is built up in the section of the city where his theatre stands. There was no convenient vacant lot waiting to be converted into an airdome, but there was a generous back yard behind the theatre, and there was another adjoining, and a few feet from the building there was an alley.

A large ornamental arch erected over the mouth of the alley converted it into an elegant entrance to the back yard of the theatre, which became an airdome as well appointed as any in the city and seats fourteen hundred people.

Reeve packs audiences in the airdome the same as he did in the theatre. The writer visited five open-air amusement places one night last week; it was damp and sticky, and looked like rain, and most of the places had slim crowds, but Reeve had more than six hundred people tucked away in his airdome. The resurrection of the Eighteenth Street house is a clear case of studying audiences, and giving them what they want when they want it.

THE EXHIBITOR AND HIS EMPLOYEES

"TREAT your employees well and your patrons will get the best service in town."

That is one of the potent axioms of Manager Levy, of the Ansonia Amusement Company, of Butte, and he recommends it to all managers.

"This picture game is a purely business proposition. None of us are in it for the fun of it, although we all enjoy the work. And let me tell you I never miss a new bill.

"I enjoy them and enjoy getting what is good and satisfying myself first that the program is O. K. But always remember this: Your employees, if treated well, will boost your show on the outside. But if you get your employees knocking on the outside, it's 'good night for you.'"

To prove the sincerity of his statement, Mr. Levy gave a two-weeks' vacation to his manager at the Princess. At the end of the two weeks the manager at the Orpheum got his vacation. The head ushers at the Princess, Orpheum and Ansonia also obtained vacations in turn and for six weeks the Princess will be closed. It will reopen entirely new and big features will be shown in it. It will be remodeled and beautified and some new special attractions will be added to it. As a parting word from Mr. Levy: "Remember your employees."

A PRIZE TRAVEL CONTEST

As the result of a popularity contest in which the chief prize was a trip to New York, the Amuze-U Theatre, Yazoo City, Miss., has been doing a heavy business during the past few weeks.

A vote was given with each admission ticket, there being no limit placed on either age or sex. The theatre soon had people coming in from the country for miles around to vote for their favorite candidate. This contest has been so successful that it will probably be made a regular semi-annual feature in connection with the theatre's other prize contests.

FINDS WORK FOR WIDOW

FRED WEHRENBERG, manager of the Best Theatre, 3360 South Jefferson avenue, St. Louis, who gave away many bushels of coal to the poor people in his neighborhood last winter, recently received a letter from a widow who said that while she did not want charity, she would appreciate anything that would put her in touch with people who wanted household work done.

Mr. Wehrenberg acquainted his audience of the case by means of slides, and the result was that the woman soon had more work than she could do, and the Best Theatre got a neat little bit of advertising.

Chattanooga Exhibitors Seek Sunday Opening

Their Protests Against Free Motion Pictures Under Auspices of the City Stop Competition in Parks

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 26.

OPERATION of motion picture theatres on Sunday has been seriously considered by exhibitors at Chattanooga, Tenn. The fact that the city, during the summer months, has been exhibiting films in the municipal park theatre on the Sabbath was the means of arousing no little agitation among proprietors of downtown picture theatres.

Consequently they agreed to get together and decide whether or not the law, which allowed the city to operate a picture house on Sunday, while they were not allowed to run their places downtown during the day and evening of the same period, should be put to a test. Their meeting did not materialize, however, and as yet the Sunday opening of the theatres remains to be settled.

One result of the agitation is that the city has stopped the operation of the motion picture theatre in the municipal park on Sunday.

One exhibitor, M. Mugnier, of the Picto Theatre, agreed that if the other exhibitors would stand behind him in the courts he would open his place on Sunday and try out the law. He was of the opinion that if baseball matinees could run Sundays, why not the picture theatres?

It seems that the exhibitors did not want to antagonize the city commissioners, and while they believed that the sentiment in Chattanooga is for clean, innocent amusement for Sunday afternoon, they did not want to brave the displeasure of city officials and run their theatres Sundays. The fire and police commissioners declared that they are not opposed to Sunday opening.

Sunday opening of motion picture theatres in this city would no doubt attract multitudes of people, according to those familiar with the picture situation. Whether or not future efforts will be made by the exhibitors to operate their places on Sunday remains to be seen. It is a known fact that they are in favor of such a move.

KEEPING TWO ENTRANCES BUSY

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 25.

T. O. Abernathy, manager of the new Odeon No. 2, which he opened but a short time ago at the corner of Second avenue and Twentieth street, states the new show has made good with a rush. This is the only show in the city with two entrances.

Mr. Abernathy arranged the box offices, one on Second avenue and one on Twentieth street, patrons thereby entering the theater from both ends. The plan is proving profitable, as each box office and its posters draws patrons which otherwise would pass by.

EGYPTIAN STYLE THEATRE FOR SAN ANTONIO

A new theatre to be devoted exclusively to motion pictures and upon which the builders expect to spend $40,000 in improvements, is being planned for Alamo Plaza, San Antonio, Tex., by the promoters, Evans Dazey, J. J. Parker and M. L. Carb, of Fort Worth.

The present home of Frank Bros. has been leased for a period of fifteen years from H. O. Skinner and Dr. J. W. Kenney, and work will begin about October 1. The theatre, according to the builders, will be completed about December 1.

"The theatre will be fireproof and of Egyptian style throughout," said Mr. Dazey. "It will have a seating capacity of 1,022. The building will have to be remodeled and the bulk of the money, about $35,000, will be spent in providing the features that smack of the Nile River and its surroundings. The name, though not at present selected, will be Egyptian. The front elevation will be two stories high, having two storerooms 15x60 feet—one on either side of the entrance to the theatre, and a number of offices in the second story. Egyptian architecture will be followed. Statues and Egyptian tracery will be used to produce artistic effects.

"The interior will likewise be Egyptian. Pannels, painted by masters at a great expense, will be installed. The columns will be topped by statues.

"According to the plans the screen will be placed in the fore part of the house with the seats facing Alamo Plaza. There will be two floors, the upper and lower, each of which will be ventilated by the 'mushroom' system of ventilation. According to this system small apertures in the floor admit air that is forced by large fans into an airtight cellar directly underneath. By this means the air in the entire place is changed in a minute and a half.

"Two rest rooms, one for women and one for men, will be installed. The former will be in the forepart of the house near the entrance to the stairs leading to the second floor and the men's will be in the rear in the basement."

The new theatre will be managed by Evans Dazey, who is the owner of the Orpheum Theatre, of Fort Worth. It is his plan to move to San Antonio soon and make his here there. J. J. Parker and M. L. Carb, the other two persons prominently identified with the project, are also in the motion picture business in Fort Worth.

PLAN $100,000 HOUSE IN OMAHA

A. K. PAY, of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, has purchased ground for a new $60,000 theatre at Mankato, Minn., and will begin building at once. Omaha will be the headquarters of all his purchases and service.

A rumor is persistent here of the purchase of real estate and the erection of a $100,000 motion picture house near the business heart of Omaha. The newspapers have frequently made mention that such a plan was under way, but arrangements are being kept secret to avoid a boost of real estate prices that might prevent the theatre coming. The owner will be a man who has large theatres in a number of cities.

$75,000 THEATRE FOR PRINCETON, N. J.

PRINCETON, N. J., is to have a new picture theatre. The structure will be built on Witherspoon street, near Spring, and will cost about $75,000. The equipment will cost $25,000, and the seating capacity down stairs will be 1,000. The balcony will also probably be erected.

The theatre will be constructed through the activity of Wilmont Goodwin, of the United Motion Picture Company, of New York. He has just incorporated the Princeton Motion Picture Company, with a capital stock of $75,000, divided into $25,000 preferred and $50,000 common.

QUAKER CITY THEATRE UNDER WAY

WORK on a motion picture theatre, Seventeenth and Venango streets, Philadelphia, to cost $40,000, has been begun by George Hogg for the Tioga Realty Company. The structure will be L-shaped and occupy a lot 115x194 feet. It will have a seating capacity of 1,500. Sauer & Kahn drew the plans.

DUPLEX AUDITORIUM IN DETROIT THEATRE

A DUPLEX auditorium is the unique feature of the Grand Boulevard Theatre, Detroit, a new photoplay house to be erected on Grand boulevard, Detroit, near Woodward avenue. Fuller Clafin, architect, of Detroit, New York and Chicago, is the designer of the house which is being erected by a syndicate of which Daniel H. Kinney is president and Harry L. Hulburt the secretary-treasurer.

The idea of the duplex auditorium is to allow a late comer, regardless of the time of his arrival, to see the first part of the photoplay without having first to view the last reels of the production.

A sound-proof partition formed of two inclined sheets of plate glass separates the two auditoriums. The seats face the glass partition, through which the audience views the screen on the rear wall of the opposite auditorium where the photoplays are shown. Those arriving after the principal photoplay has commenced, take seats with their backs to the screen on which it is appearing and are entertained with other features of the program on the opposite screen, which is behind the other audience. Presentation of the big feature having been completed on one screen it is transferred to the opposite screen and the other reels take its place on Number One.

The inclined surface of the plate-glass partitions prevents reflection of pictures from either screen. Projection for each screen is made simultaneously from a picture booth above the glass partition and in the line of the proscenium arch which transversely separates the auditorium. The orchestra may be moved quickly from the pit on one side to that of the other while the music of the pipe organ, which is to be a feature of the house, may be directed into one or the other of the auditoriums by opening or closing sound-proof shutters.

The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,200. The front of the building will contain four stores and a second story with provisions for the addition of other stories whenever the owners of the building may decide upon an enlargement.

NEW THEATRES HERE AND THERE

A NEW picture house to seat about 700 persons is being erected in Kearney, Neb., by Schwarz and Swan, owners of the Crescent there. The new house will cost about $20,000 and will be opened in September.

S. F. Rolph is building a new picture theatre in Fullerton, Neb.

Ground has been broken for the erection of a motion picture theatre at 25 and 27 Kearny avenue, Kearny, N. J., by Danied Rentschler, after plans prepared by John B. Warren. It will measure 42x100 feet in ground dimensions, and will cost approximately $20,000.

L. F. J. Weiher as architect filed plans recently for a one-story motion picture theatre, to be erected by E. Plath at 6 and 8 Delancey street, New York City, at a cost of $25,000. The theatre will cover a plot 33.4x75.10.

E. Allen Wilson has finished plans for a one-story brick and terra cotta theatre building, 62x180 feet, that will be erected at Frankford and Columbia avenue, Philadelphia, for John M. Kennedy, Jr., at a cost of about $30,000.

The properties 1706 and 1712 Frankford avenue, Philadelphia, occupying a lot 76x160 feet 4 inches, to and including 1709 to 1717 Blair street, have been purchased by John M. Kennedy, Jr., from the Manor Real Estate Company, the real estate holding corporation of the Pennsylvania Railroad, for $14,000. The properties are assessed at $17,000, and were bought as a site for a motion picture theatre, to cost about $30,000, plans for which have been prepared.

The contract for the one-story motion picture theatre and the three-story store building to be erected at 1529 and 1531 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, for Frank DeLong has been awarded to Stacy Reeves & Sons. The cost will be $33,000. The improvements were planned by Henon & Boyle.

Two new motion picture theatres will be established in Ballinger, Texas, before the first day of September. Buildings have been rented and are now being overhauled for the shows.

The Marvel Theatre Company has obtained a permit at the building inspector's office, Cleveland, O., for erection of a motion picture theatre at 2778 W. 25th street. The structure will be one story high, frame and brick, 40x69 feet, and will cost about $14,000. L. W. Thomas is the architect.

C. Merrit Curtiss, the architect that planned the Eckel Theatre in Syracuse, will draw the plans for the new theatre which he will erect in Seneca Falls, N. Y. The structure will cost in the neighborhood of $45,000.

New Producing Company Has Extensive Plant

THE realization that to achieve the best results in the motion picture industry necessitates the use of the best methods is exemplified in the case of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, 20-52 East Herman street, Germantown, Philadelphia.

The officers and founders of the company are: John Axford, president; Howard G. Bobb, vice-president and general manager; Albert E. Hindle, secretary and treasurer; Charles D. Greener, studio manager; and J. E. Overton, laboratory chief.

THE LIBERTY MOTION PICTURE COMPANY'S FACTORY, GERMANTOWN, PA.

In the developing room there are eight developing tanks and eight washing tanks. In the hypo room there are eight large tanks and in addition two preliminary water tanks. The drying room can hold six hundred and thirty frames of film at one time.

The negative room has a capacity for ten girls; the printing room, when completed, will contain sixty printing machines and four perforators. The chemical room contains five large tanks. The projecting room has a capacity for seven machines, six with small screens, and one for large screen.

The factory is under the personal supervision of J. E. Overton, who has been in the photographic business practically all his life. In the studio there is adequate space for sixteen good-size sets, and five electric stages are now in preparation.

Charles D. Greener, who is manager of the production department, is a man of long theatrical standing. On the second floor of the building, the offices of the executives of the company are located. The studio manager, publicity department, producers' offices, scenario department, wardrobe room and green room are here also.

The Liberty company has purchased, for use in Western and rural pictures, a 237-acre estate that is located at Harmonville, Pa., which will hereafter be known as Libertyville.

General Manager Howard G. Bobb, to whom a great deal of credit is to be given for the erection of the Liberty plant, gained his knowledge of the motion picture business in a very peculiar manner. Resigning his position as president of a prominent Philadelphia pharmaceutical company, he secured a minor position in a motion picture laboratory, where he studied the film business. He remained there until he acquired the technical end of the game.

He later secured a number of wealthy Philadelphians to finance him, and he started the Liberty Motion Picture Company.

The Liberty company have in their stock company a number of well-known professionals. Some of the most prominent are: Frances Cummings, Edward B. LaRenz, Charles T. Danforth, E. B. Tilton, Katherine Bjorling, Robert Ingraham, Elizabeth Bjorling and Frank McClellan.

FAMOUS PLAYERS CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY

Company Which Blazed the Trail for Feature Programs, Under Leadership of Adolph Zukor, Finds Itself on Pinnacle of Prosperity at End of First Twelve-Month—The Year's Record and Its Significance to the Industry

THE anniversary of the Famous Players Feature program, on September 1, marks the inauguration of the first regular program of feature films in the world, and the organization of the first systematic feature service in the history of the industry, of which the present Paramount Pictures Corporation is the sequel.

The now celebrated "30 Famous Features," launched a year ago, created an entirely new branch of the motion picture art, and opened a novel field of endeavor for manufacturer, exchange and exhibitor that has been effective in elevating the motion picture to a more dignified plane.

This development of an original enterprise automatically bears witness to the vision and determination of Adolph Zukor. The pioneer in the presentation of famous plays and celebrated stars in motion pictures, with an abiding confidence in the artistic and commercial possibilities of his plan that was never mitigated by the discouragements and obstacles surrounding his early efforts, Adolph Zukor, struggling against all the difficulties that beset the pathfinder, has realized a success such as comes once in a generation.

THE presentation of Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," and James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda," is now tradition; and the extended policy of thirty releases a year that resulted from the demand created by these two subjects and culminated in the tremendous plans of the Paramount organization, is the gigantic materialization of one man's determined purpose.

The early history of the Famous Players is chronicled in the present success of the feature film business of America; the record of its accomplishment is written on the screens of the thousands of feature theatres throughout the country. How Adolph Zukor determined to make his departure from the regular methods of motion picture production; how he secured for association in the execution of his plan Daniel Frohman, one of the most prominent theatrical producers in the world, and Edwin S. Porter, the wizard of the camera, the father of the photoplay and the originator of two-thirds of the camera effects now in vogue—this is the commonly known version of the Famous Players' inception. But the growth of the dynamic idea that prompted the organization of the concern, its development and its future possibilities, is a sidelight full of interest.

ADOLPH ZUKOR

MR. ZUKOR has always attributed the success of the Famous Players, not to his own initiative and energies, but to the organization; to the combined efforts of all, to the consistent harmony that has characterized the entire progress of the company. He contends that if it were not for the mechanical and artistic genius of Edwin S. Porter, the earnest efforts of Daniel Frohman, the dramatic mastery of Hugh Ford, and the various talents of all the other members of the organization, the Famous Players would never have attained the success it has achieved.

Mr. Zukor, moreover, extends the credit for the concern's record to the loyal efforts of Albert A. Kaufman, the studio manager; the scenario and advertising departments, in charge of B. P. Schulberg; Frank Meyer, laboratory superintendent; Richard Murphy, the scenic painter, whose masterly work has enriched many of the Famous Players sets; William Reilly, whose knack of getting the right props in every set is a thing of wonder, and the many camera men, who, under the supervision of Mr. Porter, have created the high standard of photography for which the concern is noted.

To return to a review of the activities of the Famous Players during the past year, the concern has made several affiliations with powerful theatrical producing companies and celebrated authors.

THE first of these coalitions was with David Belasco, for the film production of "A Good Little Devil." Shortly after this came the affiliation with Henry W. Savage, and before the excitement of this junction of important film and theatrical interests had subsided, the announcement was made that the Famous Players had secured all the dramatic successes of Charles Frohman.

More recently it was disclosed that an arrangement had been entered into between the Famous Players and Sir Henry Arthur Jones, the distinguished English dramatist, whereby that concern was tendered the film rights of his works, which arrangement attaches even more significance when it is known that the Famous Players were awarded the privilege of filming these plays in the face of spirited competition on the part of several celebrated European concerns.

IT will be noticed by the new borders around the Famous Players advertisements in the trade papers that the familiar "30 Famous Features a Year" has been changed to "36 Famous Features." In this quiet manner the concern announces a substantial increase in its output.

From all indications, before the Paramount has been long in existence, we may expect forty-eight or fifty Famous Players subjects a year. This expansion is only a natural result of the wide demand for this product.

Next year's thirty-six productions will be directed by the following staff of producers: Edwin S. Porter, Hugh Ford, who abandoned his position on the legitimate stage to become associated with the Famous Players; Allan Dwan, James Kirkwood and William T. Heffron.

HOUSE PETERS MARRIES

House Peters, the New York motion picture actor who has just concluded his contract with the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael, recently joined the ranks of the benedicts.

Peters' wife is a New York girl who came out to join him at San Rafael. It is understood that the couple will take an extensive honeymoon before the husband returns to the screen.

VITAGRAPH GETS FILMS FROM EUROPE AGAIN

Three weeks ago the European ports were closed to all communication between them and the motion picture interests of this country. The Vitagraph Company's factory at Paris was shut down on account of the employees being drafted in the French army, and all motion picture business was practically suspended.

The business, however, has been resumed this week. The marine service between this country and the Old World has been resumed. The Vitagraph Company was the first to take advantage of this resumption between its home and foreign trade.

"LITTLEST REBEL" IN BOOK FORM

Owing to the success of "The Littlest Rebel," the war drama by Edward Peple, made into a screen feature by the Photo Play Productions Releasing Company, Grossett & Dunlap, the publishers of reprinted popular novels, are planning to bring out a novelization of the screen production on or soon after September 15.

The novelization has been made especially for the occasion by the author. The publishers make no secret of the fact that they expect the book to enjoy a large sale because of the success of "The Littlest Rebel" in all parts of the country.

BRING BACK EUROPEAN PICTURES

At a great risk of life, two daring European photographers have secured actual scenes on the French and Belgium borders.

The American rights for the exclusive reproduction of these photos have been secured by the Novelty Slide Company, of 67 West Twenty-third street, New York, who will release these views in sets of slides. Each slide will bear descriptive reading and each will be beautifully hand colored.

Allentown Theatre New Home of Films

Lyceum Will Use a First Run Program of High-Class Releases—Regent, Built Exclusively for Pictures, Soon to Open

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Allentown, Pa., Aug. 26.

A NEW concern composed entirely of Philadelphians and operating under the title of the Allentown Amusement Company, has secured a long-time lease on the Lyceum Theatre here, and will operate the former "legit" house with a program of high-grade and early-run photoplays.

This theatre has been closed for some time, as the former lessee owned another house here and kept the Lyceum closed. When the time came for a renewal of the lease the owner refused, as he preferred to have the house actually operated.

The Allentown Amusement Company has also secured the Regent Theatre, which is in the same block as the Lyceum, and will open the new house as soon as it is completed. This house has a seating capacity of 500 and will show the new Paramount program, with a twice-a-week change, exclusively in Allentown and ahead of any of the surrounding towns.

The services of Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Philadelphia representative of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has been secured by the new concern to open the theatres and to map out a publicity and advertising campaign.

The only announcement so far of officers of the company is that of Marcus A. Benn, as president and general manager. Mr. Benn is the proprietor of three flourishing theatres in Philadelphia and has the unique distinction of being the only man in that city to get ten and twenty cents for a straight single-reel program.

Warner Manager Watches Indians at Rehearsal

Muller Declares Braves and Squaws Endeavor to Put Feeling into Roles —Group Picture Taken of Ranch Company

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Cincinnati, Aug. 25.

AUGUST MULLER, manager of Warner's Feature Film Exchange in Cincinnati, made a little journey to Dayton, Ohio, on August 13, at the invitation of Joe Miller, of Miller's 101 Ranch show, which was established on the Dayton fair grounds.

The Miller company of Indians and cowboys has recently been producing Western films for the Warner company, and during his stay in the tented city, the Cincinnati manager of the film company was treated to rehearsals of several sections of a new production which is in the process of making. The Miller 101 Ranch company has already produced "The Medicine Boy" and the "Renegade Sister," both Western dramas, which have proven to be exceptionally big attractions on the screen.

Mr. Muller said he was greatly impressed with the earnestness of the Indian braves and their squaws in attempting to bring out the real meaning of the plays which they rehearsed. During his stay with the show people Mr. Muller had a group picture taken of the company, one of which is shown on this page.

Mr. Muller is standing near the center of the picture beside Joe Miller, who is holding the head of the pony ridden by "Little White Eagle," an Indian boy. Chief White Eagle, his father, is seen at the extreme right of the picture.

AN IRRESISTIBLE APPEAL

WHILE Butte people have seen the crowned heads of Europe in pictures, have watched on the films the glittering pomp of the armies of the old world and have admired on the screen the pageants and glories of other cities of the United States and other countries, they have never been given an opportunity of seeing their own fire department in action and never a chance to gaze with pride on Montana's own product, a live bunch of Butte babies, taken in different and characteristic poses.

Manager Phil Levy, of the Ansonia Amusement Company, of this city, recently secured the services of two high-priced motion picture camera men, and he took 1,000 feet of film of the fire department in full action and full regalia with action on the exercise tower, claimed by Fire Chief Peter Sanger to be the largest in the world devoted to this special purpose.

Manager Levy will show this picture as the first of a series of local views at his Orpheum Theatre, on West Park Street.

And taking advantage of the camera men, he completed in a few days what is probably the most important and most interesting collection of babies in the entire state. He did not confine himself to one class, for as he says himself, "My theatre stands for all people and all classes patronize it."

But he secured 1,000 feet of forty-five representative babies, and these he showed at the Orpheum Theatre the week following. He started a contest in which he asked patrons to vote for their favorite.

Mr. Levy thought seriously of sending copies of the films to "Pathe's Weekly" and asking that they be incorporated in one of the weekly outputs to be shown around the world.

A QUICK RECOVERY

During a severe windstorm the sides and front of the Amuze-U Airdome, located at Yazoo City, Miss., and which is operated in connection with the Amuze-U theatre during the summer months, were blown down and the ticket office buried.

Manager D. Wolerstein soon had posters out announcing the house would be opened on the following night and his force of workmen made good the promise.

TWENTY-FOUR SHEET ADVERTISING

AN example of successful advertising on a large scale in the film world has become evident in the use of twenty-four sheets by the Eclectic Film Company at various photoplay houses.

Paper this size is unusual in motion pictures, and this pioneer work of the Eclectic concern in connection with its release entitled "Faithful Unto Death" indicates a significant trend of the industry.

Not long in the past a prediction of the day coming when twenty-four sheets would be in use would have been considered improbable.

But now the public realizes that such expansion follows as a natural consequence of the tremendous popularity of motion pictures.

EXTERIOR OF THE PREMIER THEATRE, CHICAGO, SHOWING THE MANAGER'S USE OF A TWENTY-FOUR SHEET POSTER

GIVING PATRONS A SQUARE DEAL

MANAGER W. A. JONES, of the Prince Theatre, corner Main and Forsyth streets, Jacksonville, Fla., has his own ideas about giving his patrons a square deal and, while he is just beginning to try his idea out, it is already bearing fruit in the way of securing regular patrons for his theatre. According to his own statement, they are the kind of patrons a manager has to work for, for they are the ones who really count.

Mr. Jones displays a bulletin the size of a three-sheet poster at the entrance of his theatre besides his regular bulletins and other paper.

On this special bulletin, which he has made himself and which he spends from one to two hours each morning arranging, he places the pictures of the actors, clippings from trade journals, and reviews of the story if possible, a complete synopsis, press comments, if any have been made, stills taken while the story was being produced, and whatever other material he can get to inform his patrons in advance as much as possible just what they are spending their money to see.

His reason for doing this was the fact that before he went into the exhibiting game he was not much of a fan. Since taking over the management of the Prince Theatre, however, he says that his interest in the films has been developed and increased because he has been able to read all about the productions in advance, has seen the actual stills, and has had an opportunity to get interested in the subject. This, he says, makes him want to see how it is presented and instead of becoming tired of seeing so many plays, he finds that his interest never lags.

He decided to try the same scheme on his patrons and it works, for the public appreciates the privilege of being allowed to judge for itself what it wants to see and of knowing it will get what it has been led to expect.

This does not exhaust Mr. Jones' ideas by any means. He has another one, which is more a belief and a prediction than an idea: that exhibitor and manufacturer ought to get closer together for their mutual benefit.

The public, he declares, has been educated to distrust the paper sent out by the manufacturers, which the exhibitor has had to show for want of something better. While the paper has improved until, in the majority of cases now, it takes an actual scene from the play, the public has not yet had time to learn this.

Motion pictures have ceased to be merely a novelty and the people have become educated to the fact that the film is supplying one of the greatest, least expensive and most satisfying forms of amusement and education ever known, so, says Mr. Jones, they must now be drawn into a theatre by bona fide paper.

This was another reason for his unique bulletin.

Mr. Jones has not been in the exhibiting game so very long. For a number of years he was in the "legitimate" stage business. He was secretary and treasurer of the Mable Page Amusement Company, formerly of this city. Then he was manager of the Ostrich Farm and afterwards booked, managed and handled Creatore's Band for a nine-months' tour.

His experience has probably made a part of him the idea that if you give the public a square deal they will reciprocate.

EXHIBITOR FINDS LOCAL FIRE FILMS SUCCESSFUL

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Pittsburgh, Aug. 26.

M. A. Rapp, of the Earl and Kathlyn Theatres, in Sharpsburg, had 700 feet of local fire department activities filmed. It was shown at his two theatres last week and made a decided hit with the residents of the borough. It was also shown at Connellsville, Pa., in connection with the firemen's convention at that place and made a big hit. It was a paying proposition for the Soisson Theatre in the coke town.

Paramount Pictures Launch Wide Campaign

In Addition to Trade Papers, the Company Has Begun Extensive Publicity Operations Through National Mediums

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, whose double-page spreads in the trade papers have given the trade some idea of the plans, are now perfecting plans for wider publicity than has ever been undertaken by any distributing company, it is claimed.

As will be seen elsewhere in this paper in the advertising pages, Paramount Pictures Corporation is coming out the first week in September with a double-page spread in the "Saturday Evening Post," to be followed with full pages monthly.

Since the "Saturday Evening Post" has a reputed circulation of over 2,000,000 copies and about 10,000,000 actual readers, the distributors feel it is fair to assume that the advertisement will be read by one out of every ten persons in the United States.

The effect of such advertising, which is to be supplemented by advertising in other national magazines, together with extensive billboard publicity, will be—it is believed—two-fold. First, it will bring forcibly to the minds of the public the message that Paramount Pictures is putting forth: that screen plays of the better class for the best kind of people are now available. Second, it will impress the better class of exhibitors with the desirability of booking the Paramount Program.

What that program is and what the character of the manufacturers is probably too well known to bear repetition here.

Another effect that this widespread publicity is likely to have is in raising the tastes of those people who now frequent the so-called "Nickelodeons." True, there may always be the "movies" to satisfy the taste of a certain class of people, but one of the motives of Paramount is to make clear the gulf between the "movie" and the motion picture house, supplying the latter with such films as shall cause patrons no hesitancy in sending their relatives and friends at any time.

Paramount Pictures Corporation deserves credit for a movement looking to the uplifting of the industry.

Olcott Players Halt Tour of Europe

War Forces Them to Abandon Trip to France and Germany—Some Difficulties of Picture-Making in War Time

THE European war has caused Sid Olcott, the producer, who has been working on the other side this summer, to alter his plans and prepare to return the first moment possible to the States. When last heard from it was a question when the Americans could get passage home, but they expected to make it the very first boat available.

Mr. Olcott had planned to go into France and Germany and down into Italy after finishing his season in Ireland, but the war put a stop to such preparations. It is barely possible that, should the war end very suddenly, the company will go to the Continent, but when last heard from all were very anxious for a look at Broadway.

The European war has made itself felt with the company which is working in Ireland making features. Owing to Sid Olcott's connections in Ireland, the company are not suffering for want of good things to eat, etc., wherever they go, yet the war has claimed all the young men of the right age for extras, and they all having rallied to the colors, it has become really difficult to secure enough young fellows for big scenes.

Fortunately, Mr. Olcott has helped the volunteers in their organizing, and made one picture of them drilling which they used at a benefit entertainment, and so the company which is officially quartered nearest to Mr. Olcott's operations will undoubtedly help him as soon as they are sure they will be assigned to the defense of Ireland and not asked to go to the Continent. Yet things have been very much broken up for the past few weeks.

Recently Mr. Olcott made a motor trip of forty miles to Valencia harbor to make some scenes, only to learn that the harbor was under military control and orders were positive that no photographs of any description could be made.

CARBON FAMINE LOOMS UP

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Pittsburgh, Aug. 26.

All of the motion picture houses of this section have been notified that the price of carbons has been advanced 50 per cent. on the list price on account of the war and that unless the supply of foreign carbons can be replenished there is very little chance for the local men to get an additional supply at even the advanced prices.

The American-made carbons do not seem to satisfy the motion picture men of this district, and they are doing their utmost in order to get an additional supply even at the increased rate. That their efforts in this line have met with failure seems sure, as no answers have been received to their inquiries from the Eastern firms.

A Tonic for a "Run Down" Theatre

By J. C. Jessen

'Tis a Wise Man Who Knows His Own Self on the Screen—If He Does His Knowledge Is Worth Money—Keen Eyesight Will Bring Him a Dollar Every Time—A Winning Plan to Pack Motion Picture Houses

THIS is a prescription for the motion picture theatre manager to use if his house is suffering from non-attendance, lack of interest of possible patrons, or small box-office receipts, and is a guaranteed, tried and sure cure for the above mentioned ailments, if the theatre be located in a town or small city.

It may prove equally effective in a city, but to my knowledge it has never been tried there. But in the former it is a house-filler and line-former that costs very little. The writer tried it out in a four-thousand town of northern Indiana, at a cost of about $125, and it made an overworked bank account perk up in two days.

Buy a small Brownie Kodak that will take a picture 2¼ x 3¼ at a cost of two dollars, and all the roll films the dealer has of that size. Instruct him to order a quantity more, and have it there by the next day or two.

Tell him you are the motion picture theatre manager and you are going to take the picture of every man, woman and child in the town. He will help advertise you.

The printer is the next man to call upon and of him order enough hand bills—about 9 by 12—to completely cover the town.

Here is the copy for the bill:

SEE YOURSELF ON THE SCREEN
at
THE BLANK THEATRE
1111 Amusement Street and Receive a Daddy Dollar
$10 FOR PATRONS EVERY NIGHT

The man who passed here a moment ago and took your picture is the manager of the Blank Theatre, and he is going to show your likeness on his screen. If you are in the audience at the time you will be given a dollar if you walk up to the orchestra leader.

Different pictures will be shown at each of the evening performances, five at the first and five at the second. Those in the house at the time the first pictures are shown are not eligible for a prize if remaining for the second five.

Every evening the Blank Theatre gives a satisfactory program of new feature pictures. Come and see yourself and the other "movie" actors.

The first pictures will be shown Monday night. Admission: adults. 10 cents; children, 5 cents.

WITH the bills, camera and films ready, the next move—if you want to make the stunt "a big noise"—is to secure two or three drums and a couple of boys to blow tin horns.

Use a bill boy on each side of the street and don't miss a house.

The man with the camera should go about a half block ahead of the bill boys and the "German band" for the noise will bring people to the front of their houses if the stunt is pulled off in the summer time.

When the people come to the front, the camera man should ask them to stand in the sun, and take a snapshot. In this manner he can take two or three hundred pictures a day. It is well to visit shops and all industries and get pictures of the people. Insist upon them coming into the sun and taking a snapshot.

For the last triumphant march take in the main street of the city with a cameraman on each side of the street. "Shoot" everybody.

The films cost but twenty or thirty cents a dozen, and it will not pay to fake or make them believe you are taking their picture and then never show it.

WITH all the films exposed, get prices from local photographers to develop the films and make stereoptican slides. When they are finished place them all in a row, and take off five at each show until all have been shown. Then mix them up and go through the bunch again.

This is a winner, but there is one bad feature—the people do not see their own picture and consequently few dollars are given out. For the first few nights the pictures were shown at the Indiana Theatre, a number of regular customers, who were known to be there just as regularly as the doors were opened, carried away dollars, for in some manner their slides happened to get along toward the front.

The patrons of the theatres have the small end of a hundred-to-one shot, or even worse, if a thousand pictures are made. In the instance referred to more than nine hundred were used.

For the lucky ones have the dollars waiting for them. When they get to the front of the theatre the orchestra leader or pianist should see that they turn around and face the audience while reaching for the silver. Turn the spot light on them and you will get a good laugh and make no one out of sorts. After they get the dollar it might be well to run a slide something like this:

Smile, dern you! SMILE!

FOR four weeks this little stunt brought capacity crowds, while the other two theatres in the town were showing to many empty seats. Then for one week one reel was taken off the program and each night one-fifth of the slides were shown, without prizes, in order to give everyone an opportunity to see their picture. This feature proved a big drawing card and extra performances were necessary to take care of the patronage.

Members of families came in relays, and after a performance would telephone to other members or friends and tell them their picture was on.

In addition to the advertising or announcement slides used at the theatre, a five-inch advertisement was carried in a daily paper each evening, with a change of copy daily, referring to the dollars for the patrons and giving the program for that day.

FILM HOUSES STAND FIRE TEST

Special to The Motion Picture News

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 26.

Nashville motion picture houses are standing the test of "safety first," since there has not been a fire or even a scare in any of the film houses within the past several months.

Heavily asbestos-lined boxes for the machines are responsible in a way for the good record, and while it is known that many times the films have caught fire, the crowd below the operating room was never aware that anything was wrong, and the blaze was extinguished without any trouble, with the occupants of the playhouse ignorant that anything unusual was taking place above their heads.

Exits have been arranged in every motion picture house in the city, so that in case of a panic from fire or any other cause the patrons can make their escape without any danger of a jam.

At least five large exits have been supplied in each house, and now Nashville theatres stand the test of the inspector, creating the feeling among the patrons that even in case of accident they have a chance to escape without difficulty.

TEXANS PROUD OF T. P. FINNEGAN

Special to The Motion Picture News

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 26.

Texans who attended the national meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America at Dayton, Ohio, are proud of the election of T. P. Finnegan, of Dallas, as vice-president of the national body.

Mr. Finnegan up to the time he entered the motion picture business a few years ago was manager of the Majestic Theatre, a vaudeville house in Dallas. He was one of the young men who was quick to grasp the possibilities of the newer business and interested local men in forming a company which erected a $150,000 moving picture theatre in Dallas. From the first the house has made good money.

Mr. Finnegan also has the honor of being national vice-president for Texas of the Texas state branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

SACRAMENTO CENSOR PUTS LID ON WAR FILMS

Special to The Motion Picture News

San Francisco, Aug. 24.

War pictures are under the ban at Sacramento, Cal., orders having been issued by City Commissioner E. J. Carragher that pictures showing battle scenes must not be displayed. An order has also been issued against the playing of national airs in theatres.

Commissioner Carragher, who is also the official censor, has attracted no small amount of attention at Sacramento in the past owing to his stand on the matter of censorship. He accepts the rulings made by the Chicago censor, regardless of the changes that may have been made in films, and often will not inspect these personally. Efforts have been made to have him allow the same pictures to be shown at Sacramento that are allowed on the screen at San Francisco, the coast distributing headquarters, but without avail.

INSURANCE COMPANIES STOP AUTO RACE

The promised auto racing contest between George Field and Jack Richardson, of the American, whereby it was to be decided which is the better driver, has been altered. Both carry heavy accident policies, and the local representatives of the accident insurance companies got wind of the race and threatened to cancel the policies.

After due consideration, it was finally decided to hold the race, and the winner would be the one who could drive his machine the slowest to a given point. It was deemed safer and less expensive to kill the engines than the innocent spectators or the contestants.

Universal Lines Up Noted Authors

Many Writers Whose Novels the Company Is Filming Supervise Screen Productions—Helps Directors to Get Right Viewpoint

THE Universal is corraling many well-known writers and securing the exclusive rights to produce in photoplay form their best works.

Already the Universal program has benefited by stories from such authors as Annie Fellows Johnstone, George Gibbs and Eugene Manlove Rhodes. More stories are coming from those writers and from others, such as Campbell MacCullough, the well-known magazine writer; Molly Elliot Seawell, author of many published novels; George Bronson Howard, famous playwright and author; Bruno Lessing, Louis Joseph Vance, Clara Louise Burnham, and others.

Stories by O. Henry and Jacques Futrelle, big writers who are now dead, have also found a place on the Universal program. Arthur Stringer, the distinguished American writer, was the author of "The Case of Cherry Purcelle," an Eclair-Universal feature which met with widespread success when released some time ago.

Where possible, these authors assist either in an active or advisory way in the production of their stories. This often helps the directors and actors to get the author's viewpoint and some of the delicate suggestions in scenic arrangements that might otherwise be missed. In this connection Eleanor Gates can be mentioned.

Miss Gates, who is also known to the readers of to-day's best magazines, has listed for production by the Eclair company a powerful story, "The Silver Belle of Losmorales."

Booth Tarkington, whose latest contribution to contemporary literature, "Penrod," has the reading public agog with anticipation, is also to be a contributor to the Universal program. "The Flirt," which was a delightful feature of the "Saturday Evening Post" for several issues, is to be filmed by the Eclair.

One of the greatest Western writers we have to-day is Eugene Manlove Rhodes. His story, "Sealed Orders," which was featured in the "Saturday Evening Post," was recently done by the Universal's Victor company with the popular star, J. Warren Kerrigan, in the leading roles. "Good Men and True," one of his best books, will also be filmed for release in the near future by the Universal.

Another Western writer who is taking a strong interest in the production of his books in photoplay form is William MacLeod Raine.

New Firm Will Give Away Topical Film

Topical News Company Plans Elaborate Service—Carlisle H. Rogerman, Well Known in Film Circles, to Act as Manager

WITH an entirely new proposition for exhibitors, the Topical News Company, Inc., has installed itself on the fourth floor at 18 East Forty-first street, New York City, and is ready for business. This company is going to give away fifty-two weeks of topical film. How it is going to do it, Carlisle H. Rogerman and a corps of men are already telling motion picture exhibitors in score of towns and cities throughout the United States.

The officers of the company are as follows: President, Blair Frazer, who is also general manager of the Duke of Manchester's International Education League; vice-president, Dr. Maxwell Ryder, known to the stage and literature for many years; secretary, Alfred A. Sommerville; treasurer, the Duke of Manchester, who is president of the International Education League. Mr. Rogerman will be editor and manager of the film service.

The vice-president, Dr. Ryder, is a widely traveled scholar and energetic man of affairs who has enjoyed the friendship of some of the leading men of his day, including William Ewart Gladstone, Sir Henry Irving, Robert Louis Stevenson, and many others.

He got his first taste of travel and adventure as war correspondent during the first Egyptian campaign for the London "Standard," the "Pictorial World" and the Manchester "Courier." He followed the fortunes of Sir Garnet Wolseley against Arabi Pasha and saw the capture of Arabi early in the '80s.

Shortly after his return from Egypt he was made editor of his paper, and while occupying that position wrote, with James Payn and Sir Walter Besant, "Notes of the Flying Hour," and added to the staff such celebrated artists in black and white as Phil May, Dudley Hardy, Griffenhagen, Raymond Potter, George Gatcombe, Frank Feller, and many others.

Mr. Rogerman has been in the film business ever since it was a business, and has devoted the greater part of his energies to topical films. While he was with the Universal Company he produced many features, principal among which was the Dayton Flood release.

He took the inauguration of President Wilson and went with the big congressional party which visited the Panama Canal.

Getting Back to Nature

Editor, Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—The history of the world teaches us that in time of great need a leader is born who can fill the needs of the time and carry forward some great movement to success. Such men as Michael Angelo, Napoleon and Washington did for the world what no one else had been able to do.

The motion picture industry has been developed most remarkably along the lines of mechanical perfection and dramatic force, and public interest has reached a point where motion pictures have become almost a public necessity.

We have produced pictures magnificent in their staging, tremendous in their action, and no incident of history has been too big for the motion picture to reproduce. In all of these the effort has been made to make something like something else. We have reproduced the great plays, the great books, we take an audience back to the time of Christ, and even back to a period before Cæsar.

In the tremendous effort to reproduce we have gotten away from the simple, the natural things. In a letter received recently from one of the greatest sculptors of the day, his criticism of the motion picture of to-day is as follows:

"I have attended a great many motion picture exhibitions on different occasions, acted in the most serious manner, by the most serious men, and artificiality and superficiality prevailed in ninety-eight per cent of the exhibitions of the subject and in the film itself."

Although this criticism, I believe, is exaggerated, nevertheless it expresses a thought which is worth considering, and that is: Do motion pictures of to-day get at the real essence of things, and have they a sufficient amount of natural or human element? A friend said to me recently that he could not go to the present-day motion picture show, although years ago he enjoyed motion picture exhibitions.

He said the pictures of to-day were inferior to those made five or six years ago. This seemed to me, from a technical point of view, an erroneous statement until I asked him his reason, which was this:

The motion pictures when first exhibited were largely pictures of travels, scenics, industrials, and everyday incidents of life. In other words, were real pictures. There was not so much staging, not so much dramatic effect, but more of real human interest.

I agree that the percentage of people to-day with his ideas are greatly in the minority, but I do believe that there is a rapidly growing feeling among audiences towards more natural and simple pictures. I had this conviction at a recent exhibition of one of the large pictures now being shown, when a few feet of the picture, reproducing a monkey and a young puppy playing together, aroused more enthusiasm and applause on the part of the audience than the most spectacular parts of the picture.

Why? Simply because the human element in the little scene portrayed touched the heart of everyone present.

There is, at this time, a great opportunity for some one who is an artist to take the simplest and most commonplace incidents in our daily lives and to reproduce them with the motion picture artistically and in a way which will express the human feeling which everyone feels.

I have yet to find the person who does not enjoy seeing pictures of animals, action of the waves beating against the rocks, a waterfall, or water in motion. In cloud effects, sunrises and sunsets, when they are brought out, each delicate touch of nature in the lights and shades, lies a vast and untouched field for beautiful and appealing pictures.

Atmosphere in still photography has been accomplished, and the man who will make motion pictures with atmosphere, sentiment and feeling, will make pictures which will be popular and which will live, although they may be pictures of the most commonplace and everyday occurrences.

Everything to-day is being done on the elaborate, expensive, spectacular basis, and I do not believe that people always want this. The money expense of making the simpler and more human pictures such as I have in mind, is slight, but requires the genius which can accurately determine what will appeal, and the artistic ability to picture the incident with all the power of an artist.

The time is here for such a man, and I hope we may soon see the simpler and more commonplace scenes in our daily lives portrayed in the motion picture in this way.

Dickens, Shakespeare, Murillo, Rembrandt, all the greatest writers and artists of the world, did not find it necessary to go outside of the daily life of the ordinary person to get material for "pictures" which have lasted, and which appeal to-day as strongly as they did to former generations.

Art is the ability to portray any simple incident in life in such a way that it touches the human heart, and its meaning is understood by all classes of people, or, better expressed in the words of Ralph Waldo Emerson in his journal when writing on landscape art, "an ideal representation, which by selection, and much omission, and by adding something not in nature but profoundly related to the subject, and so suggesting the heart of the thing, gives a higher delight and shows an artist a creator."

It is difficult to express in words the feeling I have in connection with this subject, and I am only endeavoring to bring out the point that I believe many people would enjoy seeing pictures less magnificent but more true and real.

The man who does this will make an everlasting name, for how much finer will be a motion picture of a landscape which shows all the lights and shades and is full of atmosphere, than the still photograph; for it will have all the beautiful and rhythmical motion of life, as we find it in nature.

Let us therefore give a little more thought to the realistic, to the true, to the beautiful, not quite so much to the dramatic and spectacular, the intense and the elaborate. The simpler, the truer, the nearer to nature, the greater is the human interest.

TUBERCULOSIS FILMS SHOWN IN PARKS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 27.

In an effort to wake up the residents of Buffalo to a realization of the ravages of tuberculosis, the Buffalo Tuberculosis Society, under the supervision of Park Commissioner Seymour, will give a series of motion picture lectures on the relief and control of the dread disease in the parks this summer. Granting of the right to give these evening exhibitions came in response to a petition signed by Irving S. Underhill, president of the local association; Paul E. Batzell, executive secretary, and Ansley Wilcox, chairman of committee on municipal affairs.

Fifteen exhibitions are being given. The parks at which nocturnal motion picture sermons will be presented are, Bennett, Humboldt, the Front, South Park, Cazenovia, Riverside, Niagara Square, Polonia, Hennequin and Day's. Permission was granted by the playground commission to hold night exhibitions at the terrace and Lincoln playgrounds. The board has also given the association full use of the park electricity necessary to operate the machines.

Springfield Theatres Defy Midsummer Heat

Decrease During First Two or Three Weeks, Then Business Revived—Serials Are the Favorites in Illinois Capital

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 25.

THE intensely hot weather of the past two months has failed to cut down materially the attendance at the motion picture theatres here, and proprietors of the various houses say business has been better than during former summers. There was a noticeable decrease in attendance during the first two or three weeks of the summer, but since that time the business has been satisfactory.

Serials seem now to be attracting the largest share of attendance, "The Perils of Pauline," "The Million Dollar Mystery" and "The Trey o' Hearts" drawing big crowds whenever shown. Probably no one picture did more business in the history of Springfield motion picture theatres than the appearance of Francis X. Bushman in "One Wonderful Night."

The picture was first shown at the Vaudette Theatre and crowds were turned away. It played two return engagements at the Lyric Theatre.

The Gaiety Theatre, which will show motion pictures and vaudeville, is nearing completion. It is being thoroughly remodeled at a cost of about $20,000. Manager Harry Thornton expects to open it by the middle of September. C. C. CHEADLE.

Old Scout Journeys Across Continent

William H. Taylor, Hero of Many Frontier Battles, Now with Universal, on Three-Thousand-Mile Horseback Trip

SCOUT William H. Taylor, now eighty-six years old, one of the few surviving Indian scouts of half a century ago, who has fought a hundred battles; assisted Buffalo Bill in running down Sitting Bull; a Confederate spy under General Pickett, and who blazed trails ahead of the flood of emigrants settling in the West, is now traveling to New York City from the Hollywood studios, where he is frontier expert.

He intends to ride his horse from Los Angeles to New York City, stopping at every Universal exchange on the way.

Before he set out, Scout Taylor was given a reception and send-off by the Rotary Club of Los Angeles, together with letters to all other Rotary clubs in the United States. He then started on his three-thousand-mile horseback ride.

THE VETERAN SCOUT READY TO LEAVE HOLLYWOOD

In each state on his route he is calling at the Universal Exchange and then is seen and heard at Universal theatres. A few days ago he reached Seligman, Ariz. His route will be along the Santa Fe trail through Albuquerque, Santa Fe, and to Trinidad; then north to Denver, and east through Lincoln, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis and Chicago.

The expedition was completely fitted out with saddles, packs, canteens, and all traveling accessories, by the Dyas Company of Los Angeles, dealers in sporting materials of all kinds.

A Modern "Neighborhood" Theatre

By Charles B. Taylor

The Elmwood, Buffalo, Is the "Beau Ideal" of a House for "Particular People"—The Quality of Its Photoplays, Its Music, Ventilation, Service, All Endear It to Its Patrons —The Manager Explains His Policies and His Success

EXCESS of work, then the pay envelope with the title of "manager" meaning nothing more than one who must be "on the job"—these things have been the means of putting success on the visiting list of George W. Erdmann. Do you remember what Addison said in "Cato"?

"'Tis not in mortals to command success,
But we'll do more, we'll deserve it."

Most prophetically does this drop of wisdom apply to Mr. Erdmann, the manager of Buffalo's largest and most beautiful photoplay theatre, the Elmwood.

The other evening, I entered the portals of this pile of architectural grandeur, just out of curiosity, and because I had met Mr. Erdmann in the morning and was greatly impressed by his genial nature and cordial greeting.

As I entered the doors the first thing that caught my eye was a vast auditorium, the first thing that caught my ear was the most beautiful music I had ever heard in a motion picture theatre, and the first thing that caught my hand was the welcoming grip of Manager Erdmann. For a moment I stood admiring the wonderful work of the master architect who designed this theatre, and then at a word from Mr. Erdmann, we started on a tour of inspection.

WE ascended a gradual and easy ascent to the mezzanine floor which gives a wonderful view of this theatre beautiful. Boxes, fitted with luxurious furniture and furnishings, surround the three sides of this floor with the large and airy balcony extending from the rear of the boxes to the ceiling above.

On the evening which I visited the theatre it was still early and I noticed in at least twenty of the twenty-six boxes the sign "box reserved." Commenting on this, I was informed that it was a nightly occurrence ever since the opening. Box parties at a motion picture theatre was a new thing to me, and when later in the evening, these same boxes became filled with beautiful ladies and their escorts in evening dress, I wondered more.

As we sat in one of the boxes, Mr. Erdmann was called away and this gave me an opportunity of listening for a moment to the unusual music which is rendered at the Elmwood. The orchestra consists of nine pieces, each member being an artist on his chosen instrument, while the director, Irving A. Tallis, is a musician of enviable reputation in Buffalo. The orchestra and the four manual organ now being installed alternate in playing a most pretentious music program.

GEORGE W. ERDMANN
Manager of the Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.

This is also a new stunt. As a rule, the orchestra plays right through the performance, and if the organ is played the orchestra pianist plays it. But not so here. Manager Erdmann has installed a new organ, besides which he has a piano in the orchestra. The musicians are thus not overworked and the music is always enjoyable. The organist is Mr. Betram Forbes, organist of the Central Presbyterian Church.

Soon Mr. Erdmann returned and we proceeded on our tour of inspection. The stage is fitted up with a full equipment of scenery, there being a large scenery loft into which all the curtains and sidedrops can be raised. The theatre could be turned into a legitimate house on ten minutes' notice, so complete is the stage equipment. The curtains used at present are unusual. One is a painted scene, so that one seems to be looking through a window at a wonderful landscape in the Bavarian mountains. Just as the orchestra nears the close of its selection at intermission this curtain is raised, disclosing a beautiful red velvet curtain which sweeps with its graceful folds the entire front of the stage. The stage is banked on both sides with artificial flowers.

FROM the stage, we proceeded to the ladies rest-room, which is gorgeously fitted out with wicker furniture and has a competent maid in attendance at all times. The men's rest-room is equally elaborate in its equipment.

Then we ascended to ethereal heights where the operators hold sway. This booth is one of the most modern in Western New York. It is equipped with two Simplex machines, a spot light, a reel re-winding machine, and a hundred different switchboards, although Mr. Erdmann showed me where, by touching one little button, he could put the house in darkness. As we were aloft, Mr. Erdmann commented on the ventilating system, which changes the air in the theatre every four minutes. The drinking water is filtered in the theatre with individual drinking cups for all. As the boxes on the mezzanine floor are all dropped about six inches from the floor level, small electric lights are placed under the descent into the box so as to show you where you are stepping. This is just one of the little things that patrons are commenting upon at the Elmwood.

The proscenium arch contains a remarkable oil painting which extends across the entire length of the arch and depicts the different seasons at play. The Elmwood has a total seating capacity of 1,600, which has been full every evening since the opening. The Elmwood is in the center of Buffalo's most select residential district, being located at the corner of West Utica street and Elmwood avenue.

One of the things which a patron notices upon entering and leaving the Elmwood is the extreme courtesy with which one meets on all sides. Everyone from the management down to the janitor is imbued with the "service" spirit. When an usher in a motion picture theatre runs to help you on with your overcoat you are agreeably surprised, when he advises you as to where there are vacant seats for your own selection, you again feel that here indeed is a force that is making good.

But let us go back to Mr. Erdmann. Upon being questioned as to how long he had been in the motion picture business, he informed me that he started in 1901 when he took pictures of the Pan-American Exposition and showed them throughout the country. Since then he has been manager of many of Buffalo's leading photoplay houses, among them the Temple, Elite, Arcadia, Lyceum and the New Theatre. For a number of years Mr. Erdmann simultaneously managed the Bijou Dream, in Rochester, and the Bijou Dream, in Buffalo. Mr. Erdmann was also connected with Arthur A. Smith, of the local Universal branch, for a number of years as outside man. So it is seen that he deserved success, as Addison says.

IT is with this wide experience that he comes to the Elmwood and brings with him a number of "live wire stunts," which are creating a lot of comment among his patrons. The policy of the house is the showing exclusively of big features. The patrons in the northwest section of the city are certainly enthusiastic about the Elmwood.

The other evening a man came rushing up to Manager Erdmann with the somewhat surprising remark, "This is a h—— of a place." Naturally the manager was somewhat taken by surprise and asked the man what was the matter.

"Well," replied the patron, "I motor across the city and have to leave my machine a quarter of a mile away and walk to the theatre because of the line-up of machines."

This little tale just illustrates what the automobile trade at the Elmwood is, nightly. All the side streets are filled for two blocks, and at least fifty machines were in front of the house upon the night which I visited this place of amusement.

Mr. Erdmann, when congratulated upon the exceptional staff of assistants, said, "I believe in paying a man what he is worth and enlarging the pay envelope as his worth and service increases. It is the secret which many men 'higher up' have found to be the real cause of their unusual success."

MR. ERDMANN was asked what he thought of censorship, both nationally and locally.

"Nationally, I believe in it. A national board is to be advised at all times, but a local board—never!" If we ever have a local board, I shall make a great effort to get upon it, for I am always looking out for a soft job on the side that requires nothing more than a look at a film and yes or no as the result of the look. With my other local colleagues, I can say that I am absolutely against local censorship. No questionable film will ever be allowed to creep into the Elmwood."

The location of the Elmwood demands that big features and only the best be shown, and so Mr. Erdmann is booking all the high-class film attractions. Among his recent bookings have been "A Million Bid," "The Gamblers," "Classmates," "Mr. Barnes of New York," and several others of like calibre.

All the front advertising bills are hand-painted by John Ross, who is without doubt the finest theatrical sign painter in western New York. Every feature is announced by a large painting which hangs under the "porte-cochère," as it were.

MR. ERDMANN believes in advertising and uses both the Sunday and daily newspapers with good size ads. Mr. Erdmann believes that his patrons will come a long way to see the class of attractions which play the Elmwood if they know about them.

There is no doubt that, with the continuation of exclusive big features, the downtown houses will suffer, as many of the managers of the latter houses have remarked that their evening audiences are not as large as they were before the opening of the theatres in the outlying districts, which play the same attractions and while they arrive at these houses a week later, it seems that many are willing to wait for them until they are shown at the house in their immediate vicinity.

Comments on the beauty of the Elmwood, the polite ushers, the live management, are general.

Hotaling, of Lubin, Plans New "Wet Weather" Stage—Will Make Negro Comedies, with Special Troupe of Comedians

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Jacksonville, Fla., Aug. 19.

ARTHUR D. HOTALING, the senior director of the Lubin Manufacturing Company and managing director of the large comedy company, located in Jacksonville, will soon have another wet weather stage. A new studio is being erected for his use directly behind the one now used, which is located on Riverside avenue just south of Lackawanna avenue. The dimensions of the new building are 50x75 feet and the electric lights are now being installed.

ARTHUR HOTALING

With the installation of this new electric light studio, Mr. Hotaling will have five stages, three of these being open-air and the other two indoor.

He has also opened another studio, which will be devoted strictly to the making of colored comedies, this being located six blocks from the main studio on the corner of Park and Dora streets. A company of colored comedians will be retained at this studio under the direction of Director Will Louis. This negro troupe will be headed by John and Mattie Edwards.

Managing Director Hotaling is now producing 4,000 feet of comedy for Lubin every week. To do this he uses four directors, Will Louis, Frank C. Griffin, Jerry Havner and J. A. Murphy, together with a stock company of forty-five.

Director Bob Vignola is still keeping the new Kalem studio busy and says he likes it down in Jacksonville in the summer. It was suggested that the reason Bob likes it here so well is due to the fact that he has a new big red automobile.

It has been reported in Jacksonville that the Edison company have given up their studio, located in South Jacksonville, and that all of their properties have been shipped back to the New York plant.

Vol. X September 5, 1914 No. 9

Charles J. Hite

THE lamentable death of Charles J. Hite cannot fail to arouse in the breast of every man associated in any way with the motion picture industry a sense of personal loss.

From the standpoint of material prosperity, neither the Thanhouser Film Corporation, of which he was the head, nor the industry at large will be affected in any degree by the passing of Mr. Hite.

He was far too thorough and systematic a business man not to have ordered his affairs continually in such a manner that the organization he had perfected could move on of its own self-sustaining power, though the executive were suddenly called away.

BUT, especially because he did represent this type of business man in so eminent a degree, the loss to the motion picture world will be universal, and a loss not to be measured in gold, securities or material assets.

NO industry can ever complain of having too many such men.

This industry may, perhaps, mourn the fact that it can boast too few of them.

At all events, a man who has made for himself the place which Mr. Hite occupied in this field can ill be spared and must be sincerely mourned.

The Passing of the "Scare"

THE feeling of apprehension, bordering in some quarters on panic, over the effect of the European conflict upon the supply of film chemicals and carbons, was to have been expected in the nature of things.

But the subsequent feeling of reassurance, now becoming more general, that has followed a realization that the United States has resources ample to supply the demand in this, as in nearly every other field, might also have been anticipated.

THE "New York Evening Post," in an article published in the financial section of the issue of Saturday, August 22, headed "Foreign Raw Materials." traces the spread of this alarm from one industry to another throughout the country.

* * *

"AT first it was only the steel trade and the textile industry," says the "Post," reviewing the seven-days' panic, ". . . . but the startled outcry from these two trades was only the beginning. The electrical industry was presently heard from . . . . the drug and chemical trades were as quick in coming into view . . . . an astonishing number of indispensable materials for these industries appeared to have their single source of production in Germany . . . . Misgiving after this spread to the manufacturers of photographic materials, because of the prospective German embargo on oxalic acid.

"WHAT is to be said of this new and extraordinary turn in the situation? Are these trades, each with a fair chance of expanding its business into neutral markets relinquished by the fighting European states, to sit down despondently and give up production?

"The chemists and working experts smiled quietly at the suggestion, and presently it began to be pointed out that of all these various raw materials entering into the trades enumerated above, there is not one that is an absolute monopoly with Europe.

"WHY, then, all of this stir and commotion over the 'embargo on raw material?' There are two main explanations. One is, that in the first alarm, the purely temporary obstruction of all shipping communications . . . . was confused with the much more serious obstruction of access to Central Europe.

"The other is, that American manufacturers had grown lazy, and allowed their chemists to be distanced by the patient experts to whom the German Government—which now is so recklessly diverting its energies from construction to destruction—had for years given every possible encouragement.

"PERHAPS the justifiable conclusion will be, that the extraordinary commercial incidents of the war will teach our business community more lessons than one."

"NEWS" BRINGS BROTHER AND SISTER TOGETHER

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Aug. 24.

Through The Motion Picture News a brother and sister have learned the whereabouts of each other after a lapse of seven years.

This week, George Larkin, with the Gold Seal Universal Company, in the production of the "Trey o' Hearts" serial, in which he plays the part of the hero, Alan Law, received a letter from his sister, now in New York City, having learned of his whereabouts by a story and picture appearing in The News.

Both have been in theatrical work for a number of years, and until seven years ago traveled together. At that time the brother made a number of unexpected quick jumps and until the recent letter, had been unable to learn of the whereabouts of his sister.

NASHVILLE ALL-FEATURE HOUSE GOES DOWN

Special to The Motion Picture News

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 19.

After surviving the buffetings of competition for several weeks, the Orpheum, under the managership of George Hickman and W. H. Wassman, has closed its doors. The Orpheum while really a vaudeville and stock house, was transformed into a motion picture establishment some time back and for several weeks a series of extra-reel, high-class dramas were the card at the playhouse.

With the Alhambra, Elite, Fifth Avenue, Crystal, Victoria and Rex giving three and four reels for five cents, the Orpheum's prices of ten and twenty cents failed to get the crowds, making it impossible to continue operating the place. The Orpheum will be transformed back into a vaudeville house for the coming season.

KLEINE TO HOLD CARBON PRICES

In this season of the general increase in prices of commodities of all kinds, the Kleine Optical Company announces that its stock of carbons will be sold at regular retail prices until exhausted.

No advantage will be taken of theatre owners to institute a general raise on stocks purchased at the usual figure before the war. Carbons are being sold in limited quantities to single purchasers.

RAMO QUITS EXCLUSIVE

On and after September 2, Ramo Features will cease to be released through the Exclusive Supply Corporation. The contract expires on that date and Ramo has notified the Exclusive people to the effect that it will not renew the contract.

Lasky Plans Important Releases for 1914-15

"The Virginian," Starring Dustin Farnum, Ready on September 7—"The Making of Bobbie Burns" and "What's His Name" Will Follow

THE activities of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., throughout the coming winter season is shown in a pre-season announcement made by Samuel Goldfish, head of the Lasky company.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH

All Lasky features will be released through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, the first of which will be "The Virginian," in which Dustin Farnum is playing the title role.

This production will be released September 7. Following "The Virginian" will come the second production in which Edward Abeles participates, George Randolph Chester's familiar fiction work, "The Making of Bobby Burnit."

"What's His Name," based on George Barr McCutcheon's book, in which Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, recently seen in "The Man On the Box," are playing, will follow "Bobby Burnit," while "The Man From Home," the big Liebler success, will be issued by the Lasky company in October. Charles Richman will play the role of Mr. Pike in "The Man From Home."

Robert Edeson, who made his first appearance on the screen in the Lasky production of "The Call of the North," will be seen in a five-reel feature, "Where the Trail Divides," during the early part of November, and then will come "The Ring Master," with Theodore Roberts, based on McCutcheon's book, "The Rose in the Ring."

Other plays from the Lasky studios will be David Belasco's productions, including "The Warrens of Virginia," "The Rose of the Rancho," "Darling of the Gods," "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," "Girl of the Golden West," "Years of Discretion" and "The Return of Peter Grimm."

Other stars already engaged and announced by Mr. Goldfish, as future Lasky players, are Charles Cherry, Edna Goodrich and Bessie Barriscale, until recently leading woman in the Belasco stock company.

New Warner Program Nearly Ready

Companies Contributing Thereto Will Make a Specialty of Particular Subjects—Exhibitors Have Already Applied for Pictures

THE new Warner's Program, the first news of which was given out two or three weeks ago, has now reached a very advanced stage. In fact, the initial release date is only about a month away.

The manufacturers affiliated with the Warner's Program are forming an organization of their own, in order to make the machinery of production run with smoothness. They will elect general officers and adopt rules and regulations which will govern the individual companies. Each company will be assigned to the production of a certain class of pictures, so that there will be no operating at cross purposes, but the entire combination will work in absolute harmony.

It is probable that by the time this issue of The Motion Picture News appears the organization will have been effected. At any rate, the names of the officers and of the individual producing companies will in all probability be announced in these pages next week.

When the program is running full blast it will consist of from twenty-one to twenty-eight reels each week, divided into threes, twos and singles. The pictures will be of so diversified a character that the program as a whole will supply all the requirements of exhibitors.

It was stated at the offices of Warner's Features, Inc., that a number of exhibitors had already applied for the program, following the first news that was published regarding it.

"THIS IS THE LIFE"

(American Film—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY C. J. VERHALEN

THERE is a tendency in this two-reel production to be semi-educational. Many of the modern electrical contrivances are put on view in a practical manner that gives the story a different interest. A bit of romance is woven into a plot that brings about a display of things electrical as compared to the old-fashioned method of doing things.

These things are shown in their relation to farm life and also their use in the household. The interest of the story is created in its difference from the hackneyed love tale.

The cast is headed by Ed Coxen and Charlotte Burton. The other characters are George Field, John Steppling, Edith Borella and Josephine Ditt.

Farmer Brown is a man who clings to old ideas and is set against the wheels of progress and modern science. His son John is compelled to steal away from home in order to complete his education in electricity.

In contrast Farmer Miller has installed all the modern conveniences, with the result that his stock thrives and he secures big results.

John invents many electrical motors and a powerful X-ray, but time nor success will neither soften the heart of his father nor reconcile them.

John's sister is paralyzed from overwork due to her father's stubbornness in not installing a few conveniences. It is due to John's X-ray that she is cured. He returns home, marries Farmer Miller's daughter, and for a wedding present his father gives him a home fully equipped with all the modern electrical conveniences and also an electrical auto.

"THE WOMAN WITHOUT A HEART"

(Eclectic—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

"THE love of money is the root of all evil," says the Bible, and what we really have in this Eclectic release is a powerful, impressive sermon with this verse as the text.

The theme is developed with penetrating knowledge of human frailty and weakness, in a calm and cold and impartial delineation that has no room for sentimentality.

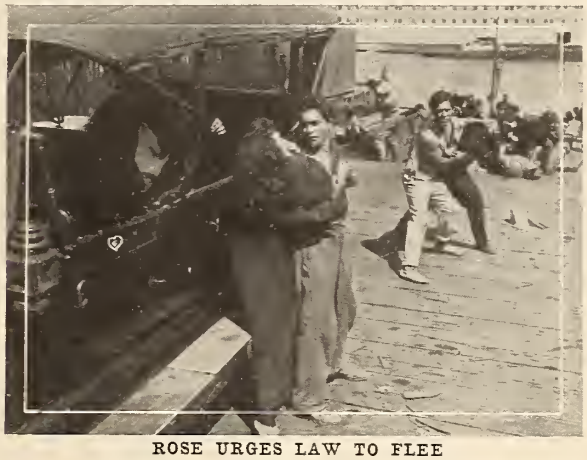
A MOTHER'S APPEAL TO A HEARTLESS DAUGHTER

There is no attempt made to appeal to the feelings and the sympathies of the audience, but the character and the inevitable effects of such a character on the lives of others are portrayed with cold and unrelenting fidelity and realism.

When the end comes, everyone in the audience feels that it is the inevitable consequence of an empty and vain life, and the price paid for parisitical preying, and not one person is disposed to dispute the justice of the catastrophe.

This scathing rebuke to worldliness and extravagance and idleness is especially welcome in this day and time when so much of our life seems bound up in frivolity and the pursuit of material pleasures.

And since women are largely responsible for the pass to which things have come, it is fitting that the disastrous career of a woman in her mad and reckless chase after these things should be revealed in its inner baseness and wickedness and heartless cruelty.



The whole thing makes one feel that here is one of the tragedies of modern conditions of life. And the portrayal of this woman's life seems intensely real in its deep personal and social tragedy.

"THE TREY O' HEARTS"

(Gold Seal—Sixth Chapter)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT is remarkable to what limits the double-exposure process may be taxed. Visions and dreams, the first characteristics of the motion picture which necessitated a double exposure are now a common occurrence.

ROSE URGES LAW TO FLEE

But it is not so common nor such an ordinary sight to witness two persons, in this case Rose and Judith Trine, both impersonated by the same actress, Cleo Madison, riding side by side in the tonneau of a touring car, with the landscape constantly changing in the background.

Whether or not this marvelous act of the producer will be noticed by the average motion picture goer remains to be seen, but those who are inclined in any way to think of the technical side of the picture will realize that it is a wonderful piece of work.

It is even doubtful if the most ignorant and indifferent will fail to appreciate this fact, and will assuredly admire the producer, Wilfred Lucas, for the excellent manner in which this scene is carried out.

And it is not only in this chapter that the double-exposure work has appeared. In almost all its predecessors the two sisters have come on in the same scene, and always it seems as if two different people were playing the parts, so correct and timely is each movement.

An event of a sensational order is also present in this installment. An express train going at great speed crashes into an automobile lying on the tracks, out of which Alan and Rose had barely time to escape before it was hit.

The attention to detail observed in the railroad wreck shows an ability to produce realistic effects of a high order.

The possibilities for ingenuity on the part of the director in a scene of this character are unlimited, and the stage manager of the "Trey o' Hearts" has left nothing to chance.

Still another realistic fight is staged in the terrifying proximity of a number of casks containing gunpowder. The inevitable happens. The casks explode and put an end to the fight and to some of the combatants.

When the last reel closes Rose is in the power of Judith, and Alan is a captive of Judith's followers.

"DETECTIVE SWIFT"

(Eclectic—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

JOHN J. McGRAW, the "Little Napoleon" of baseball, proves that he is almost equally at home, impossible as it may sound, before the camera as on the diamond. He appears as the ingenious and resourceful detective of the secret service who is assigned to track down the theft of a costly pearl necklace.

The story of how he trails the thief half way around the world is fraught with startling surprises and clever turns that do not let the interest lag even for a moment.

The play is made especially to exploit the personality of McGraw in motion pictures. Therefore, he is the outstanding figure; the whole thing centers around him. Yet he bears this prominence with perfect equanimity and entire self-possession. In fact, he makes a pretty good detective, taciturn, composed, alert.

There is not any great originality in the chase after the necklace. After all, there cannot be a great amount of novelty put into such a story. The theme has been worked to death. Yet the plotting and the construction get the greatest amount of interest and suspense from the material at hand, and the main thing about a detective story after all lies in the arrangement of the incidents in the unfolding which brings on the denouement. In this instance, the manipulation has been cleverly managed so that all is not revealed at once, but our expectations are aroused by what is kept back and we are led step by step to the capture of the robber.

Some of the scenes are striking, having been taken in countries visited on the Giants-White Sox tour of the world. Detective Swift pursues the international crook, who goes by the name of Count Otronski, out of Cairo, past the pyramids and into the great Lybian Desert, even by the portals of the famous Mosque of Mohammed Ali.

"SPARTACUS"

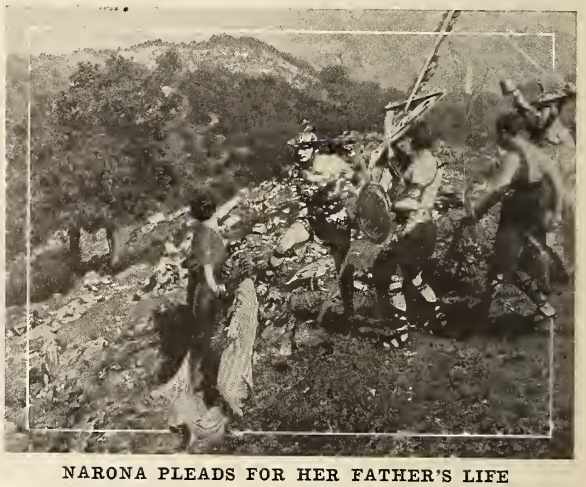
(George Kleine—Eight Parts)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN "Spartacus," George Kleine has provided the public with a welcome addition to his picture dealing with the ancient period when Rome was ruler of the world and of which "Quo Vadis?" was the forerunner.

It is indeed a pleasure to watch this production in that it seems historically correct in every detail pertaining to costumes, customs and character of the ancient Romans, besides offering a powerful and dramatic story, which in substance is just the old plot of the lover unfavored by the father of the girl at first, but who at length wins his consent by force. But the environment and additional stories woven into this, the main theme, causes it to assume a different character, appearing new and unconventional.

The swarthy gladiators of Rome and their leader, Spartacus, a captive of Thrace, impersonated by Signor Mario Ausonia, their revolt against the tyrannical ruler of Rome, terminating with their final conquest and the death of a villianous enemy of Spartacus and his marriage to the girl of his heart, is the story.

The actors who impersonate the gladiators, and most especially Signor Ausonia, are entirely worthy to be classed as such. Nothing would make the picture weaker than to see weak men carrying these parts, but they appear unusually powerful, and are truly worthy specimens of manhood.



Photographically the picture is exceptionally good and the film is tinted in a pleasing manner throughout. The scenes are magnificent. Those on top of the mountains, where several ridges may be seen in the distance, are most beautiful.

The battle scenes and gladitorial combats are realistic to the extreme, and the introduction of the lions in a scene near the end will most certainly cause a shudder to chase up and down one's spine. The parades and triumphal marches that follow the battle scenes are impressive spectacles and it is obvious that great pains were taken with them.

A large number of "extras" were employed in the picture and all seem to go through their parts with unusual intelligence and a perfect understanding. The interiors lack nothing in the way of gorgeousness; in fact, the whole picture is one to be admired.

If any fault is to be found at all it will be with the sometimes over-acting of the parts, but this is a characteristic of foreign acting, and when a little too much emotion does creep into the picture it will surely be pardoned.

The rest of the cast consists of Christina Ruspoli, Enrico Bacci, Maria Gandini, Luigi Mele and Verdi Giovanni of the

NARONA PLEADS FOR HER FATHER'S LIFE

Pasquali Company. The picture was produced in Rome and Turin, Italy, and is about 6,000 feet in length.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW FACES CALIFORNIA EXHIBITORS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

San Francisco, Aug. 24.

ONE of the measures of great interest to motion picture exhibitors to be voted on at the general election to be held in November is a universal eight hour law. This law provides that it will be unlawful for any employer to work either male or female employees for a longer period than eight hours in any one calendar day, or for more than forty-eight hours a week.

The immediate effect of the passage of such an act would be to close the majority of motion picture houses one day in the week and many would doubtless be forced out of business. This is one of the matters of great importance that will be given attention at the annual meeting of the State Exhibitors League at Sacramento in October.

"THE PERILS OF PAULINE"

(Eclectic—Twelfth Episode)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

HERE is not a quiet moment in the daily existence of this reckless young woman; morning and night she is falling blindly into the plots of her rascally guardian, Owen, who is continually scheming to get rid of her. Consequently all the episodes in her eventful young life are full of excitement, but this one happens to prove more thrilling than she has had for some time.

Pauline escapes the lions at large at the McClellan wedding, but she doesn't realize what a close call she had until she reads about the affair in the newspapers. From this account she learns that Harry performed for her a valiant service and she is no longer peeved with him.

The whole occurrence is so shown in the pictures so as to produce the impression that it comes right from the pages of the daily newspaper. The thing is cleverly manipulated.

A band of gypsies has encamped nearby and Owen is not slow in seizing his opportunity. He offers a big reward to the gypsy chieftain to kidnap his ward and carry her off. Pauline steps right into the trap when she eagerly consents to have her palm read by a gypsy woman. She is rushed off and bound in a tent.

But woman's jealousy comes in and upsets calculations. The chieftain's woman cannot bear another in the camp and promises Harry to lead him to the girl if he will beat the kidnapper. Of course, Harry acquiesces gladly, and sure enough he does overcome the big, burly chief in a fistic battle and rescues Pauline.

The gypsy woman, by a strange fit of tenderness for the man, turns against his conquerors and carries a basket of snakes to the girl. They are covered with flowers, and, just as the young lady in inhailing the delightful perfume, with her face buried in them, the reel unexpectedly ends, leaving us in unbearable suspense.

The gypsy scenes are admirably characteristic, and the men and women of this nomadic tribe are impersonated by players who realize the reckless, perverse natures of these people. The chieftain and his lieutenant have all the fierceness of mien of real gypsies.

Comic relief is unobtrusively provided in the making of the gypsy "beautifier" when we are let into the secret of its ingredients. A little white-necked cub acts as a bear should, giving an amusing touch.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY"

(Thanhouser—Tenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ALTHOUGH of the many pictures in serial form now running no two are comparable in regard to construction, there seems to be one point which they all embody at one time or another; that is, there comes an installment in which no particular scene may be rated above another, although they are all far above the ordinary.

The episode of "The Million Dollar Mystery" entitled "Shanghaid," the tenth number, is of just such a variety. Almost each scene contains a thrill and almost every scene is put on in such a manner that one cannot help but realize that great pains were taken with it.

Another point which has not been spoken of as yet of Thanhouser's popular serial is that however sensational and marvelous are the events that take place, none seem to be forced or produced solely for their sensational powers. Every one fits in its proper place in the story, none are unnecessary, which invariably results in creating a ridiculous effect. Of course, the unlikely happens, but the utter impossible does not occur.

"NOW PULL THE LEVER!"

In this episode Flo is still in the care of a fisherman. Jackson, one of the conspirators, recognizes her and kidnaps her. She is still temporarily demented.

Jim, endeavoring to rescue Flo, is caught by the conspirators and placed aboard a boat, which later picks up Flo and Jackson. The sight of Jim restores the girl's senses. While Jackson is preparing to disembark Jim knocks him unconscious, assumes his disguise and makes good his escape with his fiancée.

"THE MAN FROM NOWHERE"

(Victor—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A TWO-REEL drama without a single sub-title is not very often seen, but here is one that excels many containing titles. The observing will notice this fact and laud it; the unobserving may not notice it, so perfectly clear is the story.

J. Warren Kerrigan, Vera Sisson, M. B. Robbins and George Periolat are the leads. The scene of action is in the West.

"The Man from Nowhere" brings light into a despairing girl's heart and later wins it by his easy, kind-hearted yet impetuous manners. The story is absorbing from beginning to end. A stirring fight in a bar-room takes place.

PICTURES CROWD OUT STOCK IN NEW HAVEN

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 26.

MOTION pictures and vaudeville again supplant the "legit" in this city, Poli's Theatre, in Meriden, falling victim to the craze now. The house has shut down for a period of weeks, ostensibly for the reason that the house is being remodeled, but really because receipts from the stock company, which has been playing for the past month or more, have not been large enough to warrant a continuation of this form of amusement.

Manager Royce plans to re-open in August, carrying out the former plan of vaudeville and motion pictures, with occasional legitimate traveling shows.

"GYPSY LOVE"

(Balboa-Box Office—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

LOVERS of romance will find their hearts' delight in this sweet and simple story of love and patient devotion.

The freshness and wholesomeness of the two young people whose lives, although separated by so much, seem, nevertheless, to have been intended to be interlocked, bring out much that is best and deepest in youthful love. However pervading the love element is in the story, it does not become maudlinly soft and sentimental.

Paul Brooks, the boy raised up among the gypsies and afterwards sent off to college in conformity with his dying father's wishes, is impersonated by Raymond Gallagher.

He makes a dashing young lover, impetuous and manly in his bearing. The fair co-ed that captures his heart is named Daisy Clark; in real life she is Jackie Saunders. She is dainty and dimpled, and no wonder Paul forgets all about the gypsy maiden that he left behind.

When Paul returns to the gypsies he cannot forget the little flaxen-haired girl in the city, and Anita, the gypsy, with woman's intuition, realizes what has happened. The inevitable meeting of the two girls takes place out in the woods, when Anita rescues Daisy from a tramp.

She learns her secret and gives her up to Paul with generous resignation, and Lorenz, the gypsy poet, is rewarded by Anita after years of patient waiting.

"THE FAIR REBEL"

(Klaw & Erlanger—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AUDIENCES will never tire of the old story, one which, however old, always draws on the sympathies of every person in the country, that is the story which has our own Civil War for the background. For this reason this picture will be received well. The hero is a Northerner and the heroine is a Southerner, not a new situation by any means, but one that is always attractive.

Then, again, there is an escape from a prison that will cause one to tremble in his seat lest the fugitive be apprehended. The terrible spectacle of a prison in time of war is shown, and when our hero escapes he is shown creeping through garrets in which rats are swarming about.

The scenes are all beautiful and are supplemented by photography of an unusually high grade. A most realistic fight occurs between the "Johnny Rebs" and the "Johnny Yanks," a bridge is entirely destroyed by an explosion in this battle, creating an impressive effect.

Yet, however good the production may be in the mentioned lines, there are some things which are not up to standard. One does not get a long enough view of certain of the characters to have their personality clearly impressed on his mind, and later, when the same character comes in the story and plays an important part, the spectator has a little difficulty in recognizing him. At the end of the picture, however, all the characters are straightened out and placed aright.

And probably for this reason the story does not hold the interest as much as it would if the characters were introduced properly. These two points are the only faults in the picture.

"A GREAT MISTAKE"

(Renowned Players—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

IN spite of certain improbabilities, there are elements in this story that will strike a responsive chord in many audiences. The fall, particularly of a woman, from prosperity and happiness to misery and despair and drink always arouses compassion, and when it is because a woman has followed the man that she loves, although he turns out to be a scoundrel, the pathos and the tragedy make a deep impression.

Although we prefer to see life in its cheerful and bright aspects, woes and distress have such a large place in human existence that they cannot be neglected in the arts that attempt to depict life in all its phases.

The motion picture has long ago proved its right to be counted in this category, and therefore we cannot expect and should not ask to see always the light and attractive side. Unless we are shown the darker side occasionally we lose perspective and balance.

For the reason that "A Great Mistake" does paint the hardship and the suffering that selfishness and sin and illicit love cause in this world, if for no other reason, it will probably do some good.

The story hinges on the extreme resemblance between two half-sisters and the sad consequences which an error in identity causes. One of the sisters, who has married a worthless scamp, poses as the other, the faithful wife of a loving but credulous husband, and he takes her for his spouse when he sees her in the arms of another man.

No amount of reasonable explanation will convince him, and he does not learn the error that he has made until, in conjugal repentance, he buries the woman that is not his wife and comes in the cemetery face to face with his wife in flesh and blood.

The difficult task of playing the dual part of the half-sisters is undertaken by Mademoiselle Lipzin, and she acquits herself creditably.

It is no easy matter to keep the resemblance between the two women foremost so that the mistake which the husband makes will seem almost probable and yet to distinguish the characters of the two in the delineations, for they are supposed to be women of very different temperaments and dispositions.

To say that the star almost succeeds in making the frightful mistake seem natural is the highest praise that can be given her.

SPECIAL FILM REVIEWS

"The Love of Oro San." (Lubin. Fri., Aug. 21.)—The idea of John Luther Long's "Madame Butterfly" is here repeated but without the pathos and the tenderness. It is not presented with the artistry that made the original story the delight of thousands.

Perhaps the deep human significance of the separation of the two lovers by the impassable gulf of nationality cannot be fully realized in action only. At any rate, the sailing away of the battleship bearing the American lieutenant fails to produce on us the sadness that it should. And it is not the fault of the acting.

"The Masked Wrestler." (Essanay. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 21.)—A wealthy young Parisian of high social position is a wrestler in disguise. A young heiress and her father are present at one of his bouts, and the girl is fascinated by the strength and courage of the unknown man.

She invites him to a reception. After his next victory he promises her that he will remove his mask. He reveals himself as the very same young Frenchman who has been paying her attention all along.

Francis X. Bushman is handsome both in his evening clothes and in his wrestling togs. The bouts are very realistic.

"The Girl Who Lived in Straight Street." (Hepworth. Two reels.)—Without originality in plot or skilful arrangement of incidents to arouse surprise, yet this picture play is elevated from the ranks of mediocrity by intelligent and capable acting.

It concerns a young man who has married against the wishes of his family and is turned out to hustle for himself, and doesn't hustle very well. A chorus girl befriends him and his wife, really saving the latter from harm when the husband is locked up. But "The End Crowns All," as the sub-title has it; the old folks are reconciled with the young couple, and the chorus girl friend is wooed by the brother of the man she has helped.

In the cast are Alma Taylor, Chrissie White, Cyril Morton, Stewart Rome and Warwick Buckland.

"The Jack-Pot Club." (Eclair-Universal. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 2.)—An exceptionally pleasant drama, quite novel in more ways than one. Bob Frazer and Edna Payne interpret the leading roles. The Jack-Pot Club meets every evening. The winner of the last pot donates it to some charitable institution. Bryant, once a rich inventor, becomes poor. Then he loses his arm in the factory. The members of the Jack-Pot Club send their servant out to find a worthy man to receive the last pot. He finds Bryant, who receives the money, and due to the influence of the members, he becomes rich and his invention is a success.

THE CLUE POINTS TO BRANSFORD AS THE MURDERER
Scene from "Bransford in Arcadia" (Eclair-Universal—3 Reels—August 19)

"The Buxom Country Lass." (Edison. Mon., Aug. 31.)—Wood B. Wedd is still trying to get a wife, but his chances grow no brighter. This time his efforts to fascinate the owner of a farm who loves a hard worker are amusing.

He and his friend whom he gets to help him surreptitiously, show a woeful ignorance of the most ordinary farm duties, such as collecting fresh eggs and milking the cow. The friend's unsatisfied hunger lets out the secret, and both young men are sent hopping by the irate young mistress of the house.

"Bungling Bunks Bunco." (Eclectic. Three reels.)—A laughable comedy along semi-original lines. There are a large number of excellent studio scenes, and some very clever animals introduced. Binks, in order to win his girl, has his photo taken with his foot on a stuffed lion. She sees through his fraud and forces him to go to Africa. Here he captures, while it is in a cage, a lion, which he tells about on reaching home. However, he proves he is really a hero after all, and wins the girl.

"My Friend from India." (Edison. Three reels. Sat., Aug. 15.)—An adaptation from H. A. DuSouchet's famous comedy of the same name. Walter E. Perkins, the original star, appears in the same role for the Edison Company, and is supported by a large cast, the more important of which are Augustus Phillips, Viola Dana, Sally Crute, T. Tamato, Edward O'Connor, Bliss Milford, May Abbey, and William Sadler.

At the start of the picture and until the end of the first reel, the picture gives promise of being an excellent comedy, and it is better than the average. But the action lags a little at the end of the picture.

The story embraces the experiences of a barber who happened to be thrown in with a young man when both were much the worse for liquor. The next morning the son has to explain the man's presence in his room and calls him "My Friend from India." The rest of the picture is devoted to the barber's attempts to escape from the place, and the young man's family, who believe through this queer person they may rise in select society. The picture is released through the General Film Masterpiece department.

"When the Beacon Failed." (Kleine-Cines. Two reels. Tuesday, August 18.)—This drama is one of the best of the Kleine releases, for the reason that its action is very swift. A fine wreck is shown in the last reel.

Bill, the disappointed suitor, attacks Jim, the lighthouse keeper, and leaves him in an unconscious state. He is unable to light the lamp and a wreck occurs. But it is discovered that Bill is responsible, and as he attempts to escape from justice he falls from a high cliff.

"The Law of the Lumberjack." (101 Bison. Two reels. Saturday, August 29.)—This is an excellent drama, which combines the interesting scenes of a lumber camp with the story.

One most entertaining scene is that in which three men ride from the camp to the mill in a long flume full of running water. They go at great speed and it is surprising that nobody fell off. William Clifford, Sherman Bainbridge, Val Pal and Marie Walcamp play the leads in this thrilling story.

"The Bond Eternal." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 19.)—Tender and pathetic is this picture of a woman who gives up her baby in her poverty to take the place of the dead child of a rich banker's wife. When the woman is about to gain happiness by a marriage with a man who loves her, the worthless husband turns up, and through a sense of duty, she goes to live with him.

On her deathbed, her son, now a young physician, comes to her. She knows he is her son, but he does not realize that he has held his own mother in his arms. Marin Sais gives a splendid impersonation of the mother, expressive but repressed and restrained in its emotionalism.

"A Seaside Flirt." (Crystal. Tues., Sept. 1.)—Not many laughs will result from this comedy, which is quite poorly produced. Vivian Prescott plays the lead. Some of the characters are not even agreeable to see.

LIBERTY MOTION RELEASE FULL OF ACTION

"Hearts United," the initial multiple reel Liberty Motion Picture Company release, is full of action from beginning to finish.

The picture opens in the East and closes in the Northwest. Special care was taken by the author and producer, N. E. Milligan, to secure the proper locations. Some of the Northwestern exteriors were photographed on the vast Liberty estate at Harmonville, Pa., and the scenes in the East were filmed in Germantown, the historical suburb of Philadelphia.

Philadelphia "Reel" Fellows Have First Outing

Go to Atlantic City, Where the Local Exhibitors Association Give Them a Royal Welcome—Occasion Made Permanent in Films

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Aug. 27.

THE "Reel" Fellows of Philadelphia had their first outing at Atlantic City recently. About two hundred and fifty people associated with all branches of the industry attended, and a special train left Philadelphia at 9 o'clock in the morning with the gay party on board.

The Mayor and a representative of the Atlantic City Exhibitors League were to have met the train, but owing to its non-arrival at the hour scheduled, the Mayor was forced to leave on other business.

The entire party trooped over to the Alamac Pier, which was the headquarters for the day and were there welcomed by Mr. O'Keefe of the shore exhibitors, and were then extended a word of greeting by "Pop" Lubin, who is spending the summer at Atlantic.

As soon as the short speeches were finished, everybody made a bee-line for bathing suits and took a dip in the briny.

On the way down the Liberty Motion Picture Company, through their publicity manager, Ben Zeidman, formerly "Benny of Lubinville," distributed felt pennants with their trade mark and the caption, The "Reel" Fellows of Philadelphia. These were received with much enthusiasm and were carried by most of the party all day.

At two o'clock the now hungry horde adjourned to the Continental Hotel, where dinner was served. This was complete in every respect and ran its course from soup to nuts. At its close the speechmakers were introduced by N. Edward Milligan, of the Liberty Company, who also acted as toastmaster.

Those asked to favor the assembled gathering with a little torture were Mr. O'Keefe, of Atlantic City; Steve Talbot, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS; F. V. Armato, of the "Evening Telegraph"; Benny of Liberty, and Ben Zerr, of Reading.

The afternoon was spent in having motion pictures made of the crowd at various places, and then the amusement piers were visited. Steeplechase proved to be the best drawing card. Everybody was tired and hungry by supper time, which included more short talks or silent remarks by some.

The evening was spent at the Alamac Pier, and as a special concession to the "Reel" Fellows, dancing was permitted. This in itself was quite a concession by the city authorities, but the occasion was further graced by the Mayor, William Riddle, who arrived about ten o'clock, welcomed the "Reel" Fellows again.

In his address of welcome he dilated strongly on what the motion picture has done for the world in eliminating prejudice and to help along the open Sunday.

After one solid day of quiet but enjoyable pleasure the special left the shore at midnight and everybody was happy. It was voted that as this outing was such a success, another one of some kind should be held soon.

Her school career was for a time interrupted by a circus engagement, and later she entered the field of the legitimate drama, and five years later appeared in the films. This work is more to her liking than stage life, as a great deal of it is outdoor work.

At the dinner held several weeks ago at the Lasky studios in honor of Mr. Lasky and Mrs. Samuel Goldfish, of which Mr. and Mrs. Robert Edeson were hosts, and at which all the members of the Lasky staff of players were present, the novel menu consisted of Dubonnet cocktails "mit Oscar"; grape fruit supreme "Lasky"; green turtle clear; sparkling De Mille Burgundy; "Dusty Virginian" ham; waffle potatoes; Ices "Call of the North," and Ruby Mint a la Figman, in addition to other edibles and drinkables.

The banquet concluded, Mr. Lasky and Mrs. Goldfish, with one hundred and fifty of the Lasky players, witnesssed the first showing of "What's His Name?" in which Max Figman and Lolita Robertson lead the cast.

Leon Wagner, of the Sterling Camera and Film Company, producers of "The Land of the Lost," is busy on a new multiple reel picture.

Paul Qualtrough, formerly manager of the Independent Display Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and for three months manager of the General Film Company's poster department in New York City, has been transferred to the Pittsburgh offices of the General Film Company, where he will be manager of the poster department, with offices at 123 Fourth avenue.

E. K. Lincoln, leading man of the Photoplay Productions Company, has purchased a hydroplane, both for business and pleasure. The next picture of the company, which necessitates air craft, is the cause of Mr. Lincoln's purchase, but in the meantime he is enjoying himself flying up and down the Atlantic Coast.

The Wieting Opera House, Syracuse, N. Y., which opened for the fall with a road show, showed Kelcey and Effie Shannon in the photo drama film, "After the Ball," for one solid week beginning August 24.

Contrary to expectations, George Kleine announces that there will be no interruption to his business or any inconvenience to exhibitors in obtaining the Kleine output as a result of the war.

Ethel Lloyd, of the Vitagraph company, won the silver cup offered by the management of the Hotel Sheiburne to the best dancer of the Vitagraph players. The occasion was known as Vitagraph night, and attracted a number of society people besides those from Vitagraph.

Edward L. Hayes, of the Special Feature department of the General Film Company, Buffalo, N. Y., gave a private exhibition to Buffalo exhibitors at the Strand Theatre, on Friday evening, of the new Lubin release, "The House Next Door." The exhibitors were enthusiastic in their praise of the acting of George Soule Spencer and Ethel Clayton. The feature has been booked for four days at the Strand, Buffalo.

Clara Horton, who has been with Eclair players for the past two years, is well fitted for the screen, as she formerly appeared in pantomime productions such as "Jack and the Bean-stalk" and "Cinderella" as a toe dancer.

Miss Horton is only eleven years of age and appears on the screen with unusual naturalness. None of her movements are forced or unlifelike, as is often the case with the conventional stage child.

H. Clay Berger, for several years manager of the Weiland Film Company, now holds the same position in the Keno Feature Film Company at Fourth and Ferry streets, Pittsburgh.

Dr. Jones, of Gassaway, W. Va., has opened a motion picture theatre in that town with a seating capacity of 350. It is one of the finest theatres of its kind in the state.

W. J. Marrion, formerly of the Meyran Theatre, in Oakland, Pa., now heads the National Amusement Company of Grafton, W. Va., which runs the Dixie Theatre in that town and several others in other parts of West Virginia. He is using nothing but feature films.

"England's Menace," a picture apropos of the European war, has been booked for the Strand, New York City. The film was produced but a few weeks ago and was meant to bring to the British public the sense of danger from a sudden attack. The producers never realized that in such a brief space of time the actual conditions portrayed would be upon them.

Henry Gachon, photographic expert of the Universal Film Company's Bayonne laboratories, accompanied by his wife and A. R. Ferrand, recently manager of the Eclipse-Urban Film Company, has left this country to join the French reservists. Mr. Gachon is corporal, and Mr. Ferrand a lieutenant. They left August 5, on the steamer "Lorraine."

Charles Seay, Edison director, is now at work on the first picture put out by the Edison Company comprising five reels, entitled "Fantasma," adapted f om the play which enjoyed a profitable run in New York City. The picture shows Mr. Seay in front of a palatial Connecticut mansion, the grounds of which are used in many of the scenes of this picture. The production is a mixture of comedy and drama and under the direction of Mr. Seay should prove a great success.

CHARLES M. SEAY

Among those in the cast are W. T. Carleton, of the old Carleton Opera Company; Marie Le Manna, Edwin Clark, Grace Goodal and George Hanlon, who assisted in screening the production. It will be completed and ready for release some time in December.

An interesting feature of the Photo-Play Productions Company feature, "The Littlest Rebel," is the mode of dress used by the women of the cast. The leading woman of the cast, Estelle Coffin, had her costume reproduced from an oil painting of Mrs. James A. Garfield, wife of the late President.

Miss Coffin has played in several large legitimate attractions, and has always been particular about her dress. Before joining the Photo-Play Productions Company, Miss Coffin played in stock in Chicago, Pittsburgh and Detroit.

A. S. Hyman has been appointed New Orleans representative of the World Film Corporation. He will be associated with the resident manager, Karl A. Bugbee.

Joseph Kaufman, of the Lubin staff of actors, has had a wide stage experience. He was born in 1882 and was graduated from Georgetown University and immediately entered a stock company, where he played for five years in over two hundred different parts. From there he went to Charles Frohman's Empire Stock Company and played on Broadway, supporting such stars as Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Ethel Barrymore, Maude Adams, William Collier and Elsie Janis.

JOSEPH KAUFMAN

He has played with Henry Savage's companies and again with Cohan and Harris and later played the title role in "Via Wireless' and "Brewster's Millions," put on by Frederick Thompson. He is a valuable player of the Lubin studio and much respected and liked by his associates.

Harry Palmer, the well-known cartoonist and war correspondent, sailed for Europe early last week in the interests of David Horsley and the Centaur Film Company, of Bay-

HARRY PALMER

Mr. Palmer purposed to make di-directly for Liege. It was his intention, it is said, to get on the firing line with one of the regiments engaged and then to make a series of sketches of the actual combat.

These sketches are to be arranged in consecutive order and will be photographed so as to make split-reel and full-reel subjects.

Mr. Palmer and his two assistants sailed for Europe early last week, under assumed names. A scheme has been devised whereby the sketches can be passed successfully by the war censors and rushed to this country. The first subject, if all plans carry, should reach the Centaur studios the latter part of September. The "Seige of Liege" will be the first of the series. Sketches of the scenes and mighty forts concerned in this frightful conflict were completed from photographs before Mr. Palmer left America.

On August 18, the Weinberg Feature Film Company, who control the Greater New York rights for "The Land of the Lost," gave a special showing of that picture in the Midgar projecting room, New York City. All who saw it were enthusiastic.

Werba & Luescher, New York Theatre Building, New York, has purchased the rights for "Manon Lescaut," starring the incomparable Cavalieri, one of the world's famous beauties, supported by Lucien Muratore, the great French tenor and lyric actor, for the State of New York, at a large figure.

After looking over the features in the market the company decided that it could handle this one to excellent satisfaction.

Arthur V. Johnson, leading man of the Lubin Company, is now appearing in the leading role in the Lubin serial picture, "The Beloved Adventurer" as well as directing it. Lottie Briscoe appears opposite Mr. Johnson.

ARTHUR V. JOHNSON

Perhaps Robert Ellis, the popular Kalem star, put more realism into the role of John Gage in "The Path to Ruin" than he intended when he burnt himself so badly that he had to go to a hospital for three weeks.

The following scenes take place in a hospital, but the producer kept to the hospital in the studio, instead of carrying the camera into the sick room of Mr. Ellis.

The Vitagraph Company, working in co-operation with the East Side Protective Association and Miss Sophie Irene Loeb, the champion of the East Side children and mothers, is producing a motion picture entitled "A Silent Plea for a Widowed Mother's Allowance." The object of this picture is the promulgating of wider interest in the welfare of the poor and the opening of playgrounds in the overcrowded districts of every city in the Union.

Miss Helen Springer, head of the song slides department of the General Film Company, Omaha, Neb., says that business in her department has amounted to nothing during the last year. To discover whether exhibitors want such features, to find out why they do not pay, and how to make them pay, she is planning a personal campaign. Being an accomplished singer, she will select some choice slides and apply to several prominent Omaha exhibitors for an opportunity to see whether she can draw trade. She is confident the song slide business can be revived to a certain extent.

"The Lucille Love" series, still running on the Universal schedule, and the early instalments of which are being booked by the Feature Film and Calcium Light Company, of Pittsburgh, is still proving a big drawing card with the motion picture men in that city. It is stated that the day the picture is put on at any theatre in the city is always a big day with the receipts.

E. A. Kena has resigned as manager of the Keno Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh, and has gone into business for himself. He has named the new company the Grit Film Company, and is located at 107 Fourth avenue. He has about a dozen features and a number of single reels.

"John Barleycorn" has started in Pittsburgh. It was shown Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of last week at the Sheridan Square Theatre and proved a sensation. All attendance records for the theatre were broken.

Carlyle Blackwell, head of the Favorite Players Film Company, is working on the first release of that concern, "The Key to Yesterday," adapted from the novel by Charles Neville Buck. The feature will consume four reels. Mr. Blackwell is playing the lead in the picture as well as directing it.

One feature a month will follow this first release, and some of the greatest favorites in filmdom are scheduled to appear in visualizations of popular plays and books.

One of the strongest points in connection with "The Littlest Rebel" is the convincing paper that accompanies the picture. The lithographs show actual scenes taken from the picture, and, as one of the most important things in connection with a photoplay is the paper, the Photoplay Productions Company is to be complimented on theirs.

An announcement of the plans under way for conducting a wide publicity campaign for Paramount pictures appears in the latest issue of "Photo Life," the chatty folder brought out each week by the Famous Players Film Company of New England. The article is headed with a novel trademark, recently adopted by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, showing a sharp mountain peak above the clouds, in allusion to the quality of the firm's films implied in the word "paramount."

CAPTAIN AMATO SUSPECTS THE AMERICAN
Scene from "The Lure of the Geisha" (Bison 101—Two Reels—August 22)

The Square Town Electric Theatre, Brooklyn, Michigan, believes in letting the people know when it is going to have something exceptionally good to offer by distributing numerous colored heralds broadcast in the principal streets of the town in which it is located.

Each herald generally contains four synopses of the most important reels for four consecutive performances.

Recently it announced the "Lucille Love" series in a large salmon-tinted herald, offering season tickets for the entire fifteen entertainments at a reduced price.

Agnes Egan Cobb reports that telegrams, letters and orders are coming in from all over the country regarding "The Horrors of War." This subject was named previous to the war, but timely enough to warrant big sales.

On August 22 Webster Cullison, Director-in-Chief of the Eclair studios, entertained the Universal exhibitors of Arizona in the new studios and laboratories of the Eclair Film Company in Tucson, Ariz. They were introduced individually to all the Eclair players and were then escorted through the menagerie, where they witnessed the exciting event of seeing a young wildcat break lose and severely lacerate Henry Aldrich, an actor.

The camera-man was able to take a picture of this scene, which will be worked into a forthcoming release.

The Philadelphia Evening "Telegram" is running three times a week installments of "The Million Dollar Mystery" corresponding to the parts of the serial shown at the local theatres.

A list of forty-three motion picture houses is displayed in a box near the page of every reader of the newspaper to see at a glance the nearest theatre in his neighborhood showing the Thanhouser picture.

On August 24 B. F. Keith's Crescent Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., opened with "The Littlest Rebel." Although the thermometer registered eighty-nine, the picture played to a capacity house.

G. W. Pasco recently opened two new theatres, one at Bealington and the other at Phillips, W. Va. Both theatres have been christened The Grand, and both have a seating capacity of 300. Mutual service is shown at both houses.

C. F. Schwerin has promoted the Jamaica Amusement Company, and expects to erect a 600-seat theatre in Flushing, L. I., at the corner of Main street and Broadway. A Simplex machine will be installed. The place will be open about October 1.

H. L. Elden has just opened a motion picture theatre at Reeves, La.

"ENGLAND'S MENACE"

(Cosmofotofilm—Three Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THE producers of this patriotic drama little realized at the time of its conception how timely the subject would prove when released. The rapid onrush of events in Europe in the last few weeks almost makes it seem as if the London Film Company, the makers of the picture, had been gifted with clairvoyant powers in deciding on a subject of this character.

It comes at a period of unprecedented demand for "war" films. Put on under the expert direction of Harold Shaw, "England's Menace" measures up to the high standard expected of a screen drama passing through his hands.

The subject, the possible invasion of England by a foreign power, whose name is suppressed though it requires no effort of imagination for a reader of current events to guess the country meant, has been handled through a series of dramatic incidents. Not a moment is the attention permitted to lag—a tribute to the powers of both the author, Bannister Merwin, and the director, Harold Shaw, who carried out the details of the scenario with unusual skill.

Ordinarily the picture might not have any special interest in America, but now it will be viewed with almost as much eagerness by people on this side as it was in England.

Many of the naval manœuvres show skilful management of the camera. Indeed, the completeness of these scenes seem to imply the assistance of the British Government, which probably, if representations had been made to it by the producing company, realized the power contained in such a picture for arousing public opinion on the vital subject of home defense.

Besides scenes showing the British fleet in line-of-battle formation, there are excellent views of troops. All branches of the service, infantry, cavalry and artillery, are reproduced with spectacular effect.

Wireless in the hands of children, who have an amateur plant, is instrumental in the salvation of England from the ruthless and cunning of an ever alert enemy. The whole plot is worked out with conviction, and the thought of watching the destiny of a great nation hanging in the balance by the invisible "thread" of this wonderful but now quite common invention used as a toy by two children is spellbinding.

Secret plans are made by a foreign power to invade England. One of the principal spies obtains a place as butler in the household of the secretary to the prime minister, and while acting in that capacity manages to gain possession of valuable information. The secretary's young son and daughter have an amateur wireless outfit. The spy uses it to send information in cipher abroad to his government. After copying a message and decoding it he burns the paper, letting it fall to the floor of the wireless shelter.

The children find the charred message. The ink is still visible. Out of curiosity they copy the numbers representing the letters, thus obtaining a key to the spy's code without realizing the exact nature of their discovery. Later, on the date fixed for the invasion, they take a message, and decipher it. The significance of the communication dawns upon them and they hurry off with it to their father. The prime minister is notified, and he instantly sends out orders for getting the troops and the fleet in motion.

The prime minister by a clever ruse, sending a false order by the wireless code to the enemy's ships to turn back, averts the danger of invasion and the country is saved from the enemy's designs.

The Strand Theatre, New York City, booked the film for the week beginning Sunday, August 23.

INSTALLS TWO-DAY FEATURES WITH SUCCESS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Elizabeth, N. J., Aug. 26.

THE new sign of the times in the local motion picture field is the action of the manager of Proctor's Broad Street Theatre in trying out two-day feature pictures.

In the past the programs have been changed daily, but the new plan is working out well and will probably be continued. The Pathé production, "Sport and Travel in Central Africa," was here for two days recently and drew good houses. Single day programs in the future will probably only be run on Mondays and Saturdays.

B. A. Holway, the manager of the house, says that no picture ever shown there attracted such widespread comment as "The Wolf," a Lubin feature which was exhibited there.

"CHAINS OF THE PAST"

(Box Office—Three Reels.)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

IN a drama of marital infelicity such as this the acting is the most important element, because it depends largely on the skill and finesse of the players whether the story will strike a responsive chord in the spectators and carry conviction of its reality and power.

Played by this intelligent and capable and well-trained company of players, it has all the intensity and dramatic power bound up in a story of a wife that leaves husband and home, taken for dead, and then turns up as a criminal for the husband, who has married again, to prosecute.

The woman who delineates the wild and excitable creature who has married but finds domestic life utterly repugnant to her is one of the most beautiful women appearing before the camera.

With this almost necessary qualification she might have gone a long way, but she has also the rarer gift of imagination and the histrionic instinct, and she succeeds in enveloping herself in the part and forgetting herself in the emotional requirements of the character. The unrestrained, reckless, impetuous nature of this woman, her difficult and trying temperament, and, above all, the fascinating charm of her presence, stand out clearly and distinctly; her dashing, wild untamed spirit reaches us unmistakably out of the screen.

The lawyer whom this woman marries and then deserts because he is too much of a Philistine to fit in with her unconventional ideas wins our admiration by the manliness and forbearance which he displays in his sorrow and by the prompt resourcefulness in time of need. The actor interprets his character truthfully, with a quiet, subdued and understanding impersonation.

In the tense dramatic moments of the story, and these are many, there is none of the violent emotionalism and painful gesticulation into which such situations so often tempt less experienced players.

DEODORIZES THEATRE AIR

To purify and deodorize the air in theatres, offices and other rooms where large numbers of people are constantly assembled has presented a difficult problem for a long time and one that has been difficult of satisfactory solution.

The perfect Electro Air Purifier is a simple device manufactured by the Mathes Sales and Manufacturing Company, of Rochester, N. Y., advertised in another part of this magazine which the manufacturer claims will do this work quickly and thoroughly with the utmost satisfaction.

A perforated metal container with a small tank inside holding the fluid, which is absorbed by a special fibre packing and is so constructed that it may be attached instantly to an electric fan, constitutes the main features of this device for which patent has been applied.

One-quarter of an ounce of the perfumed disinfecting fluid furnished with the apparatus will deodorize, purify and perfume the air in a large theatre or office for an entire day.

Various odors can be furnished according to the provision of the purchaser and the apparatus can be used for scenting a room with a delicate perfume, even where there is ample ventilation and there is no necessity to deodorize or purify the air of the room.

The Alliance of Films and Magazines

Publishers and Motion Picture Producers Evolve a New Medium of Far-Reaching Effect for Mutual Advertising

AFTER the motion picture practically superseded all other forms of amusement and became a great factor in the lives of the people, the newspapers and magazines saw in film drama a new and influential advertising ally.

By the inauguration of proper co-operative methods between publishers and motion picture manufacturers a new plan to reach the public and hold its interest, for the mutual benefit of publishing house and screen producers, was evolved.

Who was responsible for the conception of this satisfactory co-ordination of interests is a question long considered debatable. An answer is found in the following communication from G. W. Wood, of the "Ladies' World," who claims for his publication the honor of originating the brilliant idea, the development of which is now seen on every hand.

His letter follows:

"Let me call to your attention that it was 'The Ladies' World' that originated and inaugurated the present great movement towards co-operation between publications and motion pictures by the introduction in our columns over two years ago of the 'What Happened to Mary' series, which was produced in collaboration with the Edison Company.

"The development of that idea since then is very apparent to any one who watches the columns of any newspaper or magazine. Since the success of that series 'The Ladies' World' has been committed definitely to the very sound policy of encouragement toward the motion picture industry.

"For two years we have had some feature of motion picture interest in every issue of the magazine. We have run three covers devoted to motion picture actresses; we have had the 'What Happened to Mary,' and 'Who Will Mary Mary,' series extended through a period of eighteen months; we followed that with our enormously successful motion picture Hero Contest; we have already begun in the September issue a most powerful serial in the form of an autobiography of a motion picture actress, under the title 'My Stage Life,' which will do much toward enlightening the general public concerning motion picture manufacture and the life of the people connected with it.

"In the series which we have arranged with the Essanay Company, no one particular person will be featured, but the entire resources and product of the Essanay plant will be involved. A series of twelve stories and accompanying three-reel features, published and released on the eighteenth of each month, has been planned.

"We are putting in the last link in the chain of selling force. We are creating the demand on the part of the public—the ultimate consumer—for motion picture products, which puts the entire idea in the field of legitimate commercial progress. The chain is complete from manufacturer through the wholesaler, the jobber, the retailer and the consumer, with the accompanying publicity and demand-creating campaign."

"Littlest Rebel" Child Actress in War Zone

Mimi Yvonne, Who Plays Virgie, Has Harrowing Experiences in England and Germany—Sleeps in Steerage on Return Voyage

MIMI YVONNE, better known probably for her portrayal of the character of Virgie in Edward Peple's Civil War drama, "The Littlest Rebel," safely returned to America after an extremely adventurous experience in Germany and England.

Mimi's father, an officer in the English Army, was hastily called to his regiment. Mimi, who at the time was in boarding school at Leipsic, was without funds save for a few travelers' cheques, which the merchants refused to cash.

She cabled the Photo Play Productions Company and Frank Tichenor forwarded to her, through a friend of his, who was leaving for the other side, enough gold to bring her home comfortably. Mimi arrived with her mother in New York last Tuesday.

The money arrived by messenger and mother and daughter started for the railroad station only to be arrested and thrown in jail as spies. They were kept there nearly all night, and were finally searched before allowed to go.

"We were driven into a train like so much cattle and for twenty-one hours we were without either food or water," said the mother in a recent interview.

"In Liverpool, for nearly a week, we tried to secure passage on a steamer bound for America, but without success.

"Finally we were given a plain, ordinary bunk in the steerage of the steamship 'Chicago.' The trip was terrible, but anything was good enough for us just so it brought us to New York."

When asked if she had any fears for the safety of her father, she replied, "Father has not been in actual service for nearly six years. He came to America with mother when I was only a year old and entered the shoe business. He went to Leipsic to visit us and there answered the 'call to arms.' Father is a brave man and quite able to take care of himself."

Miss Yvonne has signed with Mr. Tichenor for his next production, the title of which will be announced later.

TRAGIC SCENE ALMOST REAL

A motion picture tragedy came within an ace of being turned into a real one recently in the lake on the Liberty estate at Harmonville, Pa. But for the prompt action of one of the actors of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, of Germantown, Phila., a "super" would have been drowned.

The man in swimming came up underneath the raft, striking his head. No one noted his absence for a few minutes. Then somebody noted that he had not come to the surface. One of the leading men of the company dived under and rescued the super, who, within a short time, recovered.

The Operator's Exchange

DALLAS NOW A UNION TOWN

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 25.

The formal signing up of working agreements with members of the local union of operators has been carried out, and Dallas is now a strictly union operator town. The strike of the operators extended over a period of several months.

If any of the houses lost business as a result of the strike a casual observation failed to show it. Managers of the local houses, however, got tired of having their places picketed, especially after one or two of the houses had signed, and when the manager of the Hippodrome, the largest house in Dallas, signed, all others followed.

EMMET HAMBRICK.

HEADING OFF A PANIC

Not only quick action was displayed by the operator in the Star Theatre at Elgin, Ill., when a film caught fire the other day, but rare wit as well. He was running a "war" picture when through some cause the film caught fire.

Quick as a flash he slid in a "Just a Moment, Changing Reels" sign, and then grabbed the blazing film and threw it out the window into the street. Very few of the patrons realized what was happening. The machine escaped damage.

AN EYE-SAVING DEVICE

A little stunt that is being used by Milwaukee operators quite extensively and one that has proven a wonderful saver of eyes is the placing of a piece of yellow-green glass between the operator's eyes and the light on the gate. As is well known, the ultra violet rays in the light are very injurious to the eyes and many operators have seriously impaired their sight by watching the dazzling white light on the gate.

The glass absorbs all of these rays and saves the operator's eyes. It is attached to the side of the head, the exact place depending on the make of the machine.

Another simple little device that is also much used, and one that is a great time saver for the operator, is a pinhole in the front of the lamp house over which is set a cheap reading glass.

The reading glass throws an inverted image on a metal screen fastened on the upper lamp house and allows the operator to see at all times exactly how his carbons are burning and gives him plenty of opportunity to correct them before any fault in the light is visible on the screen.

A similar apparatus placed on the side of the lamp house enables the operator to get a side view of his carbons and correct such faults as the bottom carbon burning too far ahead or behind, etc. If a voltmeter and an ammeter is placed on the wall in line with the two images, the operator will find that he can save practically half as much juice as he used when he had no control over his arc.

PHILADELPHIA FLICKERS

The new Stanley Theatre is installing two motor drive, motor feed Simplex machines in the projection room.

This is the first installation of its kind in the country, so far as is known, and is undoubtedly the opening gun for better projection. In order to make this installation, it was necessary to enlarge the operating room to 16' 6" x 9' 10" x 8'. This does not include the rewinding and rheostat rooms.

In addition to the two Simplex machines there is a Kliegl dissolver. The ventilation is afforded by two wall register 24" x 36", with a 24" intake fan, and air in the room will be expelled through one 16" exhaust, one 5" exhaust, and one 36" vent flue without forced draft.

The manufacturers guarantee that the operators can work in the room, on the hottest day of the year, without removing their coats or collars. With such equipment, the Stanley can safely claim the most modern and up-to-date operating room in the city.

The projection is in charge of Brothers H. D. Cherry and Wm. Heuhner, both members of Local No. 307.

Brother Harry Kleiser, of Buffalo, N. Y., Local No. 229, formerly of this city, and in fact born in the city of Brotherly Love, has returned to the fold. Harry was transferred to Local No. 307 at their last meeting. They may go away for a while, but the most of them return.

C. L. Bradfield, of the Family Theatre, demonstrated his ability to run an automobile last week, when a party of friends stopped at the theatre and asked if he could run a Simplex. Brad thinking that they meant a motion picture machine assured them that he could and they told him that there was one at the hotel on the corner. A short time afterward Brad returned with the Simplex (auto) accompanied by a driver, and turning to his friends said: "Here is the machine, I can run it, but WHO IS GOING TO PAY FOR IT? The joke being on his friends, they hired the machine for the night.

James Garvey and W. G. Murray spent Sunday of last week at Egg Harbor on a fishing trip. While on the trip Garvey and Murray made arrangements for the purchase of a motor boat, for the operators' boat house, that they are to have next summer.

Gus Hagner is now in charge of the stock room of the Mutual Film exchange, of this city.

While on his way to New York recently, Brother Maxwell C. Hite, of the Harrisburg, Pa., M. P. M. O. U., dropped in on the boys of 307 at their headquarters to say hello, and the boys insisted that he take in the sights. While going the rounds Brother Hite met with an accident. He fell down the steps of the Moose Club and painfully hurt his leg, but the boy insisted that he was not hurt and went on his merry way to that big city of New York.

Another recent visitor to the Philadelphia rooms was Brother Claude Winters, of the Louisville, Ky., local, who is here on a business visit.

Big doings at the Philadelphia headquarters on the night of August 26. After the meeting there was an address given by Brother Maxwell C. Hite, of the Harrisburg local, on the subject "Unionism; What It Means and What It Is." the address was accompanied by an illustrated lecture by Brother Hite.

Brother Frank Wenke, of 307, will be in charge of the projection room at the New Fairmount Theatre, this city. Frank will be long remembered by us all for the record that he made while with the "Quo Vadis?" pictures.

The season is on in full blast here and things show all indications of a big year in the film business.

The new theatre of Marcus Loew in this city, the Knickerbocker, will shortly open. This new addition to Philadelphia's theatres will present refined vaudeville and first-run feature photoplays. The equipment in the projection room will consist of two Simplex machines and spotlight. The projection will be in charge of Norman Johnson, a 307 man.

Brother Albert Ayre, of the Philadelphia local, has just returned from his vacation in the country and is the picture of health. Al is the white hope of the Philadelphia local.

Brother William Jackson has gone to Atlantic City to make pictures of local events as they happen at the seashore.

Child Labor and Other Things

For the last several years the question of child labor has been constantly before the public, but it remains for the state of Texas to set an example for the state of New York to follow.

As a witness of this fact it is only necessary to read the article accompanying this one on the same page.

It seems that the state of Texas has been the only commonwealth to take advantage of the example set by Massachusetts, and a law is about to be passed that is really a protection to the people.

In the first place, it is necessary for the applicant to be at least twenty-one years of age, and, in the second place, it is required that the applicant pass an examination before an examining board competent to give this examination.

This will naturally mean that the examining board will have at least one practical operator on the board, and this, at any rate, will be some assurance that the examination will be a thorough one.

As a matter of course, this will tend to eliminate the operator of sixteen and eighteen years of age, who is now endangering the lives of the public in this and other states.

Some day every state will have a law of this kind, but, like all reforms, it takes time to develop them.

In the meantime, it behooves everyone with the interests of the business at heart to agitate for better conditions.

W. D. CHANEY.

MANHATTAN MEANDERINGS

Met Brothers M. H. Davis and George P. Dixon at Keanshurg, N. J., the other evening and from all accounts they are having the time of their young lives. Surrounded as they are by the flower of New Jersey femininity, I should hope they were, and if they are not, they are not the boys I always thought they were.

In spite of my fears for the safety of Brother Chris Krogh, who was on a visit to Denmark, I am glad to state that he has returned with both feet.

Brother Earl Rossman is no longer connected with the New York Theatre, but is at present with the Annette Kellermann picture at Baltimore, Md.

Arthur Jaeger, formerly an operator, and now in charge of the shipping department in the main office of the Eclectic Film Company, has been made chief operator and manager of the posters in the company's exchange on Twenty-Third street.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

The Crescent Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., is running the General Film program and showing two day runs of all the exclusive department features with success. This is the only theatre in Syracuse that ever attempted to run one feature for two days.

The beautiful new Temple Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., seating 1,800 and built for vaudeville, has opened and is running two reels of General Film pictures as a part of the program.

The Dreamland Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., recently closed, has reopened under new management. The house has been redecorated and made more inviting.

The Majestic Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., has been taken over by two Italians who have renamed the house the "Umbria." Vaudeville and pictures appealing to the Italian colony are offered and a ten-cent admission is charged.

Carlyle Blackwell recently stopped off at Syracuse, N. Y., on his way to California to say "Hello" to the people of his own home town.

The Hippodrome, in New Orleans, is having remarkable success this summer by devoting a greater part of its attention to films of foreign manufacture. A great many of the productions have been from three to five reels.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

Fred Lovett, a local young man, who was formerly assistant manager of one of the local theatres in Providence, R. I., and of late the manager of a theatre in Massachusetts, will shortly assume the management of the New Theatre in Olneyville.

Martin Toohey, the popular manager of the Scenic Temple, Providence, R. I., will resign shortly, it is said, and take the management of the New Emery Theatre, almost completed. Mr. Toohey will also take a few of the Scenic Temple employees with him, so the rumor goes.

The Blackstone Hotel, of Providence, R. I., it is understood, will soon be torn down and a picture theatre erected in its place. The Blackstone is located in the heart of the business district, and the resulting theatre should do a tremendous business.

Work has commenced on the big Hippodrome on Fountain street, Providence, R. I. It is said that the Hippodrome will seat seven thousand when completed.

The popularity of the motion picture in Providence can best be judged from the fact that three years ago there were approximately six motion picture theatres in Providence, and in 1915, when the proposed theatres are completed, there will be fifteen motion picture theatres in operation.

J. J. McCarter, formerly of Batesville, Miss., is having erected at Water Valley, Miss., an airdome for a moving picture show.

Brown & Pilgrim have just established the first motion picture show in Philadelphia, Neshoba County, Miss.

Brown Brothers have again reopened the "Little Hippodrome," at North Warren and West Hanover streets in Trenton, N. J. This motion picture house, built for them about a year ago, has had a checkered career. It has been under several managements since. Andrew Brown is now the moving spirit in the house.

The New Grand Central Theatre, Grand and Lucas avenues, St. Louis, has run "Les Miserables" at two different times during the past few months. The first engagement lasted three weeks, and the second two weeks, but so many requests came to the manager of the New Grand Central, William Sievers, for another chance to see the feature, that he decided to give a third presentation of the famous pictures.

Director Paul Powell, of the Western Lubin studio, last week began the production of a two-reel mountain story, "The Four Narrative." The scenario is by Marc Edmond Jones, and Miss Velma Whitman will play the lead.

Mae Bennett La Reno, singer at the Grand Theatre at Venice, was run down a few evenings ago by an automobile while walking to the tracks to board a car. She was badly bruised about her throat and shoulders, and the driver of the machine, in attempting to prevent hitting her, ran into a brick building. He has since been in a bospital hovering between life and death.

Eddie Abeles and Charles Richmond are recent arrivals at the Lasky studio. The former will play in "Bobbie Burnitt" and "Ready Money," to be filmed under the direction of Oscar Apfel. Richmond will play in "The Rose and the Ring." "What's-His-Name?" with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, has been finished under the direction of Cecil de Mille, the last scenes taken being those of the interior and stage of a theatre, when a large number of extra people were used.

In the two-reel Western picture, "Poncho," recently made at the Western Lubin studio, is one real punch that was not made intentionally. While in a chase scene, in which William Parsons, on horseback, and holding Miss Velma Whitman on the horse while she partially supported herself with one stirrup, was being followed by a number of cowboys, the horse jumped sideways.

The actress' foot slipped from the stirrup and she fell almost to the ground before being caught by Mr. Parsons. In raising her to the saddle she swung under the horse and was kicked. The chase was completed, and the average picture fan will not be able to tell that the fall was accidental. Miss Whitman was unable to report at the studio for more than a week as a result of the accident.

In a Rex, Leonard, drama, entitled "For the Secret Service," little Ella Hall, one of the youngest leading women on the screen, recently wore a full evening dress for the first time in her life.

She is only 17 years old and it is only recently, since she has been in the company of which Robert Leonard is director and star, that she has been assigned roles of a full grown woman.

Bob Frazer, of the Eclair Western studio, has developed a talent for taxidermy. His specimens of gila monsters and rattlesnakes are works of art. Bob says so himself, which proves the truth of this statement.

Ralph Ince, with a company of Vitagraph players, is taking a four reel picture in which Earle Williams will assume the lead. The scenes are being enacted at Bay Shore, L. I.

Theodore Marston, another of the Vitagraph producers, with his company of players is located in the Adirondacks, wbere he will portray at least four pictures in which the mountain scenery and lakes will furnisb the picturesque and romantic settings.

Miss Florence Hamilton, formerly leading lady for the Corse Payton Stock Company, Bridgeport, Conn., is to quit the stage to become a trained nurse. Miss Hamilton in private life is the wife of Jim Barry, a former actor and now manager of the Scenic Theatre, New Bedford, Mass.

Louisville boasts one entire family of motion picture actors and actresses. The family is that of Otto Schaefer and besides Mr. Schaefer is composed of his wife and their two daughters, Mary Pauline, 9, and Otis Elizabeth, 7.

The two juvenile members of the family are rapidly winning an enviable reputation among picture fans for their part in melodramatic and Wild West scenes. For several seasons they were connected with the Essanay Film Producing Company, but at present are appearing with their parents in productions of the Commercial Film Company, a recently organized Louisville concern.

The Henry Pathé Lehrman Company, with Billie Ritchie working in the lead roles, has recently come into the Universal fold at their Hollywood studios.

Although the company has been located at Hollywood but a few days, Manager Bernstein has already had erected for them a special stage 100 feet square.

The two-reel comedy drama, "Caroline," written by Ruth Ann Baldwin and produced by the Turner Special Feature Company, gives promise of being one of the most successful of recent Universal films. Otis Turner directed the production, and Anna Little plays in the title role and Herbert Rawlinson playing opposite her as the Prince of Balzovia.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Los Angeles, Aug. 24.

NOT content with an aeroplane and a Mercer racer, Mabel Normand has entered the amateur field, having purchased the seven horsepower cyclecar made by Shirley Williams, age 16 years, with which he won third place in the Vanderbilt, Jr., races at Ascot Park, Los Angeles, July 4th, making the fifty miles in one hour and six minutes. The cyclecar has a speed of fifty-five miles an hour.

Miss Normand has had the little racer finished in an elegant manner at one of the local garages, and for the next two months the young driver and maker of the car will use it in giving exhibition mile runs at fairs and amatcur race meets, the largest one he will attend being that at Tacoma, Wash., on Labor Day, when there will be a purse of $750 and three cups for the two fifty-mile races.

Local photoplayers have been advised by members of the Biograph producing companies that the local studio is to be opened August 30. This studio has been closed since June.

Orin Denny, who was with the Essanay Company for three years, the Universal for almost that period, and other companies in the capacity of laboratory foreman, has opened a commercial laboratory in Highland avenue, just below Hollywood boulevard. In this he will use the drum system, and at this time has practically all of his equipment installed.

Elaborate Lubin Production

The Lubin studio is closed this week to all companies except that producing "In the Dragon's Claws," under the direction of Leon Kent. The entire stage is being used for large sets, and the production will be the most elaborate ever made at this studio.

Following the completion of this three-reel feature, all players and directors will be given a vacation of two weeks, during which time Managing Director Wilbert Melville will pay a visit to the New York and Philadelphia offices of the Lubin Company.

The Kent Company has just finished a heart-interest story picture, "The Prisoner of Bleak House," in which Velma Whitman, William Parsons, Melvin Mayo, and L. C. Schumway played the leading parts, and the players under the direction of Paul Powell have made "The Wild Cat," a two reel picture featuring small town characters. .

Mabel Normand, The Keystone Girl, this week directed the production of a two reel comedy, "The Working Girl," which will be one of the early releases. The exterior scenes of the picture were made at Echo Park, Los Angeles, and show many pretty scenes.

Edeson in Ince Play

Robert Edeson has been contracted for six weeks' work with the New York Motion Picture Company, and has been working at the studio near Santa Monica, taking the lead in the production of a Western picture, from a scenario by Thomas H. Ince. Included in the big cast for this picture are W. S. Hart, Reginald Barker and others. The picture will consist of six or seven reels.

"The Typhoon," from the story by Charles Swickard, has been completed at the New York Motion Picture Company studio, and the negative is now on its way to the New York laboratory of the company. In this Sessue Hawayaka, the Japanese actor, who played the part of the father in "The Wrath of the Gods," played the lead.

Blanche Sweet, Ralph Lewis and Wallace Reed are being featured in a two-reel Majestic picture. "Her Awakening," from the scenario by F. E. Woods, produced by William Christy Cabanne. The story is one of heart-interest character.

In "The Runaway Freight," a Reliance two-reel picture made by Jack Adolfe, Francelia Billington played the lead, and rode the drawbeams, making a very sensational scene. This is a melodrama and the scenario is by Russell E. Smith.

"The Last Shot" Full of Sentiment

"A Mother's Trust" is the title of a one-reel picture made last week by Director Donald Crisp, featuring Robert Harron. Mr. Crisp has just completed the picture, "Down the Hill in Creditville," in which Dorothy Gish and Wallace Reid are featured.

Mae Marsh played the title role in a Western mining drama, "Meg of the Mines," produced by William Christy Cabanne, in which the legal owner of valuable property successfully battles a number of claim jumpers.

Sheriff Arthur Mackley's latest Western is "The Last Shot," in which a criminal closely followed by a posse sees a rattlesnake about to strike a child playing along the side of a mountain trail. He has but one load left in his gun, and his belt is empty. The hunted criminal saves the child's life. W. E. Lawrence and Joseph Singleton are principals in the cast.

Fay Tincher was the dairymaid in "Foiled Again," a comedy by Eddie Dillon's Komic company, and the many traps laid by the "villyun," Tod Browning, which she eluded, will make many laughs. In this Mr. Dillon plays lead as well as directs.

A Miniature Zoo

Vester Perry, Jack Conway and Frank Bennett are taking prominent parts in a two-reel Western drama, "How the Kids Went Over the Range," for the Reliance release. The story includes the mishaps of a hot-headed youth with a love for the great American game of poker. Irene Hunt is the heroine.

"The Sleep Walker" is the title of a Rcub Miller picture completed last week at the Keystone studio. Alice Edwards is featurcd.

Members of the Western Lubin companies are slowly converting the studio into a miniature zoo.

Louis Joseph Vance, novelist, author of "The Brass Bowl," "The Fortune Hunter," "The Black Bag" and others, including 'The Trey o' Hearts," now appearing serially in the Sunday "Tribune," arrived in Los Angeles recently from his home in Washington, D. C., and will remain here for several weeks in order to collaborate with Bess Meredith in preparing the scenario for the film version.

Mr. Vance completed this novel of adventure several months ago, but after selling it to the Universal company found many changes could be made in it that would materially add to its value as a motion picture story. The motion picture producing company, under the direction of Wilford Lucus, completed the filming of the seventh series, and in order not to delay the production the author rewrote the eighth instalment while en route to this city.

Vance Gets Humorous Souvenir

A dinner was given in honor of the author by Manager Isadore Bernstein, of the big U studios, at Hollywood Hotel recently, the guests being Wilford Lucus, director; Cleo Madison, leading woman; Bess Meredith, scenario author; George Larkin, leading man; Edward Sloman, heavy lead; Ray Handford, character lead; and Harry Vallijo, cameraman.

At the dinner each member presented Mr. Vance with a souvenir, labeled "To the author of our woes," and these included a potion of poison, a miniature scaffold, a revolver, wrecked ship, a small cannon, and others. In his napkin he found a trey of hearts, the death sign of the story.

Henry Walthall and Fred Burns, as commanders of the Ku-Klux Clan, in the filming of "The Clansman," by W. D. Griffith, put on the most exciting chase seen near Whittier, last week, when the horse Walthall was riding ran away. Because of his weak condition—having been out of the hospital for but a week following a serious illness—the favorite actor could not control the charger.

Director Griffith and Cameraman G. W. Bitzer were ahead in an automobile and the machine registered a speed of forty-three miles per hour for fully a mile. Fred Burns, formerly head cowboy for Buffalo Bill's Wild West, finally caught the horse Walthall was riding and was able to stop it before the actor was injured. In the scenes taken at Whittier 175 horses and three hundred men were used.

Stage Power Plant Fight

One of the last scenes to be filmed by the Lasky players for the picture "Bobbie Burnitt," in which Eddie Abeles is featured, was that of a fight in an electric power station between Billie Elmer, the actor-pugilist, playing the role of Biff Gates, protector of Burnitt, and H. B. Carpenter, who was the ring leader of a gang of thugs.

Jane Bernaudy, one of the Universal's best riders, will soon leave for Pendleton, Ore., where she will take part in the events for women and try to retain the medals she won last year for fancy riding and roping.

Edna Maison, Ray Gallagher and Bert Hadley are playing the leading parts in a one-reel society drama filmed under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. The scenario is by Earl R. Hewitt.

The Japanese-American Film Company's players have just completed a three-reel picture. "In Old Japan," in which the successes of a Japanese boy who comes to America and makes good in athletics are featured. Roger B. Cornell, a well-known physical trainer, is the principal American athlete. Jiu-jitsu methods of wrestling are featured.

Murdock McQuarrie is being featured in a one-reel character sketch story, on the order of "The Old Cobbler," produced by the Charles Gyblin Universal Company, written by Seymour Hastings. The title of this picture will be "The Old Bell Ringer," and McQuarrie will be supported by Ben Horning, of California Mission Play fame; Jeff Osborn and Agnes Vernon.

Hastings and McQuarrie Collaborate

Hastings and McQuarrie, in collaboration, are preparing the scenario for "The Derelict's Christmas," which will be produced in the near future.

Beverly Griffith, business manager of the Sterling Motion Picture Company, is now the owner of a new Packard, and his friends are daily fearing the year suspended sentence for speeding may be served if this new car does not behave.

The first one-reel subject to be made by the Jesse L. Lasky Company, "The Day of the Dog," was filmed last week, with Eddie Abeles and Bessie Barriscale in the principal parts.

The story is Western melodrama.

Lee Moran, Universal comedian, is now at Chicago to attend the funeral of his brother, who died suddenly.

The Joseph DeGrasse Universal Company is producing "Lights and Shadows," from a story by Ida May Park, in which Paulina Bush, Lon Chaney and Joe King are being featured.

Bess Meredith is playing the leading role in a one-reel comedy, by Calder Johnstone, "Mother's Vacation." Ernest Shields and Eddie Bolands have important parts. J. G. Blythestone has charge of the production. The Al Christie company is also filming "When Lizzie Got a Polish," by the same author.

New Trick Photograph Used

Warren Kerrigan is playing the title role in "The Gentleman from Kentucky," produced under the direction of Jacques Jaccard. Mr. Kerrigan will next take up the filming of the "Terrance O'Rourke" stories by Louis Joseph Vance.

Frances Ford and Grace Cunnard are taking the leads in a two-reel picture of mystery and melodrama, "The Phantom of the Violin," in which a feature will be a number of new features of trick photography.

The 101 Bison Company, under the direction of Henry McRea, has completed the Western picture, "The Law of the Range," from the story by Wayne Groves Barrows, and scenario by H. G. Stafford. The cast includes Sherman Bainbridge, Marie Walcamp, Lule Warrenton, Rex de Rosselli and Val Paul.

Complete Selig Zoo

The new buildings for the public zoo of the Selig Poloscope Company, at Mission Road and East Lake Park, Los Angeles, are now practically all completed, with the exception of exterior decorations, and all the animals have been transferred to their new quarters. The opening date has been fixed for September 1.

More than half of the forty-acre Selig farm will be used for the zoo.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"A Village Scandal." (Edison. Wed., Sept. 2.)—This is not about gossipy old women in a small village parlor, nor of loafers in the corner grocery, as one might think. It is about the little child of a drunken, worthless father who is taken in charge by Miss Wiggles. Afterwards she is adopted. There is some interest in the plight of the child, but the picture doesn't tell a well-connected story.

"The Viking Queen." (Edison. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 4.)—A stirring drama set in the days when the Norsemen roamed the seas and were the terror of the neighboring nations. The warlike character of these people is portrayed, and we see plenty of fighting. The men in the picture are typical Norsemen, tall and lithe, with flaxen hair and flowing mustaches. Great pains must have been used in selecting the actors to play these parts.

"The Honeymooners." (Vitagraph. Fri., Aug. 21.)—A picturized silent comedy with John Bunny, Mary Charleson and James Morrison providing the entertainment. Uncle John visits his nephew, who attempts to conceal his marriage. Uncle makes love to the maid, but he gets slapped in the face for it, and a wedding ring opens his eyes and he beholds the wife of his sole heir.

"The Reveler." (Selig. Fri., Aug. 21.)—A perfectly sober and industrious cowboy has a double who is not so sober. The puzzling thing to the cowboys at the camp is how Weary could have become so bad in such a short while. They lock him up to keep him out of mischief. But when the real Weary shows up, the riddle is solved.

"Making Auntie Welcome." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 22.)—Auntie is an undesirable person as far as the nephew-in-law is concerned, and when she puts in her appearance, nephew attempts to frighten her off by playing crazy. He succeeds only temporarily and gets locked up as a lunatic for his pains. On the same reel with "Sometimes It Works."

"What Became of Jane." (Selig. Sat., Aug. 22.)—Jane leaves her happy home to make her way in the city as a show girl. She falls in with the wrong sort of company and is rescued from her predicament by her faithful lover, who happens to come along at the right moment. He carries her back to the peace and contentment of her girlhood.

"Lily of the Valley." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 22.)—An appealing love story of a young lawyer and a sweet little girl who is his pupil when he takes a school for the summer. The girl's fortune is stolen by the trustee and the sacrifice of the young man to restore it plays a part in bringing the lovers closer together.

"The Gypsy Talisman." (Biograph. Sat., Aug. 22.)—How a girl, romantically inclined, outwits her maiden aunt and finds her Prince Charming by the aid of a magic little figure which she purchases from an old gypsy woman. The aunt loved the girl's father and, in revenge for having lost him, she tries to make an old maid of the girl.

"Broncho Billy's Wild Ride." (Essanay. Sat., Aug. 22.)—This popular hero in a too obvious story that can be anticipated from first to last. He escapes from the courtroom during his trial for some offense that is kept from us and makes a wild dash for liberty. He rescues the judge's daughter from a runaway steed and, of course, wins his pardon and, perhaps, the love of the girl.

"Kidnapped by Indians." (Kalem. Sat., Aug. 22.)—Another story of the girl that is raised up by the Indians and is later brought face to face with her father. The dramatic irony lies in the father's insulting treatment of his own daughter. Princess Mona Darkfeather plays the central role.

"Sometimes It Works." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 22.)—A comedy of the cocky little brother and the big, mighty brother from the West, and how they were mistaken by the lover of the sister when he was called upon to fight. The big one turns up as the champion of his sister, and this puts a different complexion on the matter for the lover.

"The Man From the Past." (Biograph. Mon., Aug. 24.)—An intense drama of the reappearance of an old lover to torment a woman who is now happily married. Luckily a burglar is in the house when the despicable character comes to the woman, and rescues her not only from this man but from the burning dwelling. The villain gets his deserts by not being rescued.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 51." (Selig. Mon., Aug. 24.)—Naturally war now holds the foremost place in this timely review of the world's happenings and will continue to for some months to come. The first pictures from the actual field of operations are given in this issue, being photographs made of the Belgian troops resting during a truce in the battle around Liege. These were made before the rigid censorship was enforced.

"Ward's Claim." Vitagraph. Mon., Aug. 24.)—The girl, the hero, and the villain are seen in the old relations but in new surroundings in this drama of mining life. The girl is the rightful heir to the claim. A wicked Mexican, with the aid of Indians, tries to usurp the claim, but the brave young prospector comes up to all the requirements of a hero, saves the mine for the girl, and thereby wins her gratitude and her heart.

"Two Men Who Waited." (Essanay. Tues., Aug. 25.)—The country girl who gets the fatal call of the stage is seen in the same old adventure with the rich man who frequents the theatre. Revelation of bills being paid out of his pocket brings disillusionment and sends her back to the man who is waiting on the farm for her. But the drama is an exceptionally strong exposition of this familiar theme, and Beverly Payne interprets the girl with rare feeling and sympathy.

"The Widow and the Twins." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 25.)—Sometimes it is a misfortune to resemble somebody else too closely, and so it is with the twin brother of a spendthrift in this comedy that, with "The Lucky Rube," makes a complete reel of smiles and laughs.

"The Lucky Rube." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Aug. 25.)—When it appears that he has been buncoed in buying a ring for which a big reward is offered, it turns out that this is a most fortunate thing for the farmer. For in capturing this same rascal he wins a reward of $500, just double the reward offered for the genuine ring. Country credulity is burlesqued very amusingly.

"The Sealed Oasis." (Selig. Tues., Aug. 25.)—A love story that ends in tragedy instead of the customary kiss and embrace. The lover goes on a trip into the desert, loses his way and perishes beside the irrigation pipe from thirst. The girl counts the days till his return and the wedding. The pathos will win the hearts of any audience.

"Henry Stanley the Lion Killer." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 25.)—A laughable farce of the pretentious hunter, who is at heart a coward, but a good bluffer and has a lot of luck. While the town is making a hero of him for his supposed prowess, a couple of bears get loose and upset the celebration. The hero runs like the rest at first, but when he discovers that the bears are tame he becomes a hero, sure enough, in the eyes of the villagers.

"Hearts of the Forest." (Edison. Sat., Sept. 5.)—Augustus Phillips, Marjorie Ellison and Alice Grey play the leads in this pretty drama. The gay wife deserts her hardworking husband and marries another man, who soon tires of her. She goes to the north to seek her husband and finds him happily married to another. She departs in sorrow.

"The Smuggler's Wife." (Biograph. Thurs., Aug. 20.)—A three-cornered drama of the alienation of affections. The smuggler falls in love with his wife's girlhood friend when she comes to visit them; the wife in revenge delivers him up to the revenue officers.

"Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent." (Essanay. Thurs., Aug. 20.)—Even with a lot of scuffling and knocking and kicking, this comedy provides only a fair dose of amusement. Slippery pretends injury by the railroad; it is a dummy that has been struck; but anyway, Slim goes to bed. But when the claim agent comes, he is out, and Sophie puts Pete to bed in his place and he gets the damages, $9.

"His Brother's Blood." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Aug. 20.)—If we can start with the premise of the flight of a young man because his roommate commits suicide and he fears he will be hanged, the rest of this drama works itself out very logically and with plenty of heart interest in the love of two men for one girl and the sacrifice of the husband when the other turns up and it becomes evident that the girl has never ceased to care for him.

"The Woes of a Waitress." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Aug. 20.)—Maurice Costello, Robert Gaillord, Naomi Childers and Marie Weirman in a bright comedy of the female food dispenser, the attractive villain and the staunch and faithful lover. The villain takes her to Coney and starts off with her money, but he is brought back by the loyal one and his detective friend.

"The Hand of Fate." (Kalem. Tues., Sept. 1.)—The undesired third party is too easily gotten rid of in this drama to make room for the marriage of the young people who really love each other. Even with such capable players as Alice Hollister, John E. Mackin and Harry Milarde, the feeling that the events are twisted to suit the outcome is not dispelled.

"The Oil Well Conspiracy." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 2.)—There is enough action in this two-reel feature, but somehow or other it is flat and uninteresting. The actors, try hard as they may, cannot put life into a story that is tiring and vague and pointless.

"The Winking Zulu." (Kalem. Fri., Sept. 4.)—John E. Brennan as an artist makes a ludicrous comedy, but when he gets tipsy on one stein of beer and dreams that he is among the savages of Zululand and is forced, in order to save his skin, to wed the lovely dusky princess, the merriment passes beyond bounds.

"The Gambler's Reformation." (Kalem. Sat., Sept. 5.)—Dealing with squawmen and a squaw and a valiant young white settler who is a gamhler, this story is replete with the atmosphere of the new, unsettled West of fifty years ago. Princess Mona Darkfeather is the central figure, the squawman's daughter, and she is rescued by the gambler from the hard life which is hers.

"The South African Mines." (Edison. Split reel. Wed., Aug. 26.)—Shown on the same reel with a picture, "Buster and His Goat," that will delight the children, this interesting view of the gold and diamond mines in the Transvaal, and the methods of mining has a most advantageous position. It is as if the maker threw out Buster Brown as a sop to catch the attention of children, and having their attention gives them the desirable information that is carried in this part.

"The Fable of the Difference Between Learning and Learning How." (Essanay. Wed., Aug. 26.)—The lesson to be drawn from this fable is that it is not always the best student that makes the most successful man. But the danger is that many who see this picture will believe that this is what always happens. As a matter of fact it is not, but that does not diminish the keenness and delightfulness of George Ade's satire. These are Essanay's best comedies.

"The Decision of Jim O'Farrell." (Selig. Wed., Aug. 26.)—The siren, the loving, devoted wife, and the pleasant, good-intentioned husband in a new version of the eternal triangle. Matters are made worse than they should be by the town gossips. After many heartburns, the wife gets her husband back when he learns by eavesdropping the true character of the rich and fascinating widow.

"Josie's Declaration of Independence." (Vitagraph. Wed., Aug. 26.)—Josie is the maid of all work in a narrow-minded and stingy family and she gets rebelliously tired of it. The upshot of it is that she reiterates the truth of the doctrine "that all men are created free and equal," except that she adds women in the liberty-loving class. What happens is too much fun to miss.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The Derelict and the Man." (Victor. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 4.—In which Walter Miller appears in a dual role, assisted by Irene Wallace. The derelict and the man whose resemblance is remarkable are both in a wreck. The derelict thinks that his double is dead, and impersonated him. But later the right man turns up. A stirring fight is staged in the last reel. The photography in the print shown is not of the best.

"The Foreman's Treachery." (Nestor. Wed., Sept. 2.)—Featuring Sherman Bainbridge and William Clifford. Exciting, absorbing and full of live action. A drama that will please all. The detective proves his rival in love unworthy by discovering that he robbed the safe of his firm.

"This Is the Life." (Powers. Fri., Sept. 4.)—A fair comedy with Edna Maison and Roy Gallagher leading. Two stenographers on their vacation make a bet as to who will make the best "catch." All that develops is that one wins. A few laughs.

"Detective Dan Cup." (Nestor. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—In order to make friends with the girl he has so often seen he steals her handbag. Then commences a chase between the famous detective and himself and a series of disguises that are bound to amuse. Clean and very funny. Much shown is taken aboard ship.

"The Boob's Nemesis." (Rex. Sun., Aug. 30.)—Played by Robert Leonard, Ella Hall and Harry Carter. A comedy-drama of unusual merit. The foolish farmhand goes after his employer's daughter, who has run away to the city with a married salesman. He brings her home, but even then she won't marry him and accepts another employee of her father's.

"A Baby Did It." (Nestor. Sat., Sept. 5.)—Eddie Lyons and Victoria Forde play the leads. Eddie finds a baby in his automobile, and as no owner shows up has to care for it. His fiancee thinks the baby belongs to him and has nothing more to do with him. Later Eddie meets the baby's mother, who is a widow, and his fiancee passes from his life. Not as much slapstick appears in this comedy as in most of this brand, but nevertheless it is a laugh throughout.

"Father's Bride." (Joker. Wed., Sept. 3.)—The young man gets into plenty of trouble in trying to conceal his wife from his father in order to receive ten thousand dollars. Ernest Shields and Bess Meredyth play the leads, and create many laughs.

"Oh, What's the Use." (Joker. Sat., Sept. 5.)—A sidesplitting slapstick, acted in a sidesplitting manner by Max Asher, Bob Vernon and Louise Fazenda. There is little plot to the picture, but it keeps one in a continual laugh.

"The Janitor's Son." (Frontier. Sun., Aug. 30.)—The janitor encounters a thief in his employer's office. He tells him his past history and how dishonesty caused him the loss of his wife and child. It develops that the thief is his own son, and a family reconciliation follows. Arthur Allardt, Joe Franz and Willis Robards are the principals. The latter is the director.

"Mesquite Pete's Fortune." (Eclair-Universal. Sun., Aug. 30.)—Pete forsakes his love for a widow, believed to be rich. The widow is ugly and poor, but Pete has to marry her. Many laughs will be produced by this comedy, which is laid in the West.

"Snookee's Disguise." (Sterling. Thurs., Aug. 27.)—With Ford Sterling and an able cast. A flirtatious wife, operating in a restaurant results in a general mix-up in that place. Sidesplitting.

"Universal Ike in the Dance at the Little O." (Universal Ike. Tues., Aug. 25.)—Ike can't go to the dance because he has no clothes. To get revenge he fills the well full of whiskey and all the dancers get drunk. Very funny.

"Tale of a Hat." (Sterling. Fri., Aug. 21.)—The rent money in the old man's hat and later the loss of it causes a great disturbance and many laughs before it is found.

"A Rural Love Affair." (Sterling. Mon., Aug. 24.)—A kid comedy better than most. A good part of the action transpires in an underground cave out of which Billy is attempting to emerge.

"Counterfeiters." (Victor. Two reels. Fri., Aug. 28.)—Florence Lawrence, Matt Moore and William O'Neil are the principals in this excellent comedy-drama. Mother's choice turns out to be a counterfeiter instead of a count, as she had thought; so the daughter is free to marry the man she desires.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"Those Country Kids." (Keystone. Sat., Aug. 22.)—An excellent farce featuring Mabel Normand and Roscoe Arbuckle, the Keystone fat boy. The usual chase is a feature of the picture and it is unusually funny. A fight in the parson's house puts an end to the picture with all the participants exhausted.

"That Minstrel Man." (Keystone. Wed., Aug. 19.)—Roscoe Arbuckle appears as a negress in this picture, and a funny one he makes. All the rest of the characters are darkies. In the minstrel show the negress creates a disturbance and breaks it up. Nothing offensive in this sidesplitter.

"Her Last Chance." (Keystone. Sat., Aug. 29.)—Trick photography, rapid action and capable rough acting make this comedy an excellent release. A great deal of fun is furnished by a grocery store scene.

"The Silver Bell." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—How a Mexican, an unwelcome suitor for the hand of the rich man's daughter, won her and redeemed himself in the eyes of the father by returning the silver bell that had been stolen from the mission, is the outline of this story. It is alive with action, and holds the interest continually.

"Susie's New Shoes." (Beauty. Tues., Aug. 25.)—Joseph Harris as a fake blind man assists Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer, the husband and wife, who are this time at odds over the price of shoes. Many humorous situations stamp this as a fine comedy.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 32." (Reliance. Mon., Aug. 24.)—After Margaret has tried on some new sweaters and hats, we learn that the thief of the cameos is Dunbar's brother and old partner in crime. Dunbar keeps this knowledge to himself and promises Mrs. Knickerbocker that he will soon return the jewels.

"Granny." (Majestic. Tues., Aug. 25.)—This drama, featuring Dorothy Gish as a poor servant girl, will most surely be enjoyed by all. She protects a tenant of the boarding house from the thieving intentions of the landlord.

"When America Was Young." Broncho. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 2.)—An Indian story far better than the average, containing a lot of absorbing action. An uprising of redskins is quelled through the heroism of two frontiersmen. Their children, a boy and a girl, aid them materially. A number of thrilling battle scenes appear.

"Stacked Cards." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 4.)—Quite risque in parts, but containing the elements of a true melodrama, in which class the picture is one of the best, until the finale, which is rather weak. The corrupt political ring ruins the chances of the candidate for mayor, by employing a woman of the underworld. Years later when the man is in Alaska, he meets the same woman, who is in love with and is loved by an Alaskan miner. The other man lays bare the truth about the woman and there the picture ends.

"The Second Mrs. Roebuck." (Majestic. Two reels. Sun., Aug. 23.)—Blanche Sweet, R. A. Walsh, Wallace Reid and Mary Alden are the principals of this drama, which is somewhat poor in regard to plot, as it is rather old. The excellent acting of the leads carries it through. Fine photography. The young actor deserts his wife and child. Years later when his daughter is grown and married she serves her husband's sister a turn by preventing her from marrying her father.

"A Dog's Good Deed." (Thanhouser. Sun., Aug. 23.)—Pleasing and novel, a picture that all will enjoy. Two remarkably well trained dogs perform. The rich dog, seeing that his poor canine cousin is unable to pull a cart laden with clothes, goes out and does the trick himself.

"For the Last Edition." (Reliance. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 22.)—Fine entertainment furnished by this lively drama. The cub reporter is unable to get a story of an impending strike, but with the assistance of a feminine contemporary he gets the story and she lays bare the fact that the employers of the strikers are grossly dishonest. A freight car is exploded, making a striking scene. Irene Hunt plays the lead.

"The Belle of the School." (Princess. Fri., Aug. 21.)—A well-produced story and one of the best of the Princess offering. Muriel Ostriche, Boyd Marshall and Rene Farrington are the principals. The belle of the school assumes the blame for the thefts of a poor girl, whose thefts were instigated by her lack of smart clothes. But her lover discovers the truth and the story ends well for all concerned.

"A Lesson in Mechanics." (Majestic. Fri., Aug. 21.)—An exceptionally humorous and excellently produced comedy with Robert Harron and Dorothy Gish playing leads. The farmer boy who has attained riches is in love with a rich young girl but is afraid that she is somewhat of a snob. But it turns out she isn't after one has enjoyed many hearty laughs.

"Lodging for the Night." (American. Wed., Aug. 26.)—The greedy mountaineer plans to rob his lodger but is prevented by his daughter, who is in love with the man. A scuffle ensues in which the father meets death. The girl departs with the traveler. Ed Coxen, Charlotte Burton and George Field plan the leads in this entertaining picture.

"The Stolen Ore." (Reliance. Wed., Aug. 26.)—The wounded prospector who is cared for by a miner and his daughter pays for their hospitality by attempting to rob his host. He is caught by the girl's lover. Exciting from start to finish.

"A Physical Culture Romance." (Komic. Sun., Aug. 23.)—None of the boys like Fay until she has taken a course in physical culture which, besides developing her muscles, develops her beauty. Then the boys are all crazy over her, but she turns them all down. Rather an unfinished ending to this comedy, which is otherwise good.

"Conscience." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., Aug. 25.)—Irving Cummings, Mignon Anderson and Ernest Ward are the principals of this drama. Gleason, a bank teller, robs a poor man of money and then wins an enormous amount at the roulette wheel, with which to send his wife west for her health. He is conscience-stricken and, after confessing to his wife, returns the money to the beggar, who, dazed because of his great wealth, returns most of it to the man. A pretty and entertaining story but more improbable than most.

NEWS WEEKLIES

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 50." (Selig. Thurs., Aug. 20.)—We have almost forgotten poor little Mexico and her troubles in the absorption of the great European war. This review reminds us that important events in the history of that country are still going on by showing us General Carranza's entrance into the capital, and the assumption of the government by the Constitutionalists. The effect of the European war upon food markets is an interesting sidelight that is presented.

"Mutual Weekly No. 87."—Clear photography and timely subjects characterize the program of the company this week. Several "war" scenes are shown which cannot fail to appeal to the public. Among them are French battleships at rendezvous in the English channel; French torpedo boats going into action. A number of intimate views of the Russian royal family takes the spectator to the upper part of the European continent. Other views consist of the reception of the Japanese ambassador in Paris; ex-Queen Amelia of Portugal; a varnish factory in Germany; and the men appointed to the new Federal banking board.

"Mutual Weekly, No. 88."—This is a "war number" and contains several vivid scenes likely to appeal to the public just now. The first picture shows the French fleet in the North Sea; aeroplane scouts reconnoitering; speedy torpedo boats in convoy of slower moving battleships; artillery along the French border; the king of Italy inspecting his fleet at Genoa; capture of guns and ammunition; the French leaving for the front; the kings of Denmark and Sweden discussing the subject of neutrality; a British cruiser, cleared for action, waiting outside New York Harbor for the approach of possible German prizes; and other striking pictures of timely interest.

"Universal Animated Weekly, No. 127." (Wed., Aug. 12.)—A picture of King George and Queen Mary visiting the Kaiser is rather out of date but interesting. A fine view of the British navy is shown, followed by pictures of the French troops on drill. Other pictures connected with the European struggle are shown and a few domestic scenes follow. The cartoons by Hy Mayer are excellent.

"Animated Weekly, No. 129."—Among the military subjects this week are: The English populace showing their patriotism during a parade of London cadets upholding the Empire's war policy; the Kaiser's crack regiment in review; an accident to an English engineering corps. Among the non-military subjects are Pope Pius X at rest; the Massachusetts state seal in flowers; Christy Mathewson signing a contract to appear in Universal films; a novel tournament between rival hose companies at Connellsville, Pa.; a glass-blowers' convention, and a derelict destroyer patrolling New York Harbor.

The fifth of the "Bill" series being produced by Eddie Dillon, of the Komic brand, is now completed and sent East for positives for the Mutual program. In this Bill organizes the office boys of the New York "World" into a union and then leads a strike, for higher wages. Fay Tincher and Tod Browning, appearing in this series, are in receipt of compliments from their many friends for their excellent work. Tammany Young is playing the role of Bill.

Marshall Neilan, who for the past week has been ill from the result of ptomaine poisoning, by canned meats eaten when the company was at Santa Barbara, Cal., recently, is again at the Kalem Hollywood studio producing a rube picture in which he and Miss Ruth Roland play the leads. Lloyd V. Hamilton, who was injured in a fall in which his kneecap was fractured at Santa Barbara, is also in the cast.

While filming this piece the other day a barn dance scene was put over and it proved to be such great sport that the company took a half hour off to have a real barn dance on the Kalem stage.

Albert W. Hale, who has produced for many of the leading companies, is now managing director of the Kalem Santa Monica studio and is making comedy with Johnnie Brennon and Carrie Clark Ward as his leads. Other members of the company are Betty Teare, ingenue; Will H. Brown, famous for his acts in musical comedy while with Oliver Morosco; James Gibson, an Irish comedian; and William Crooley has charge of the camera.

The company has just completed a spectacular comedy made in Jones' Canon, near Santa Monica. In this sixty extras were used as Zulus.

Charley Murray, formerly of Murray and Mack, is now with the Keystone, and has made arrangements with his former partner to come to the funmaker's parlor and assist in filming three old favorites of the popular team, each in three reels.

Mack is to be cast as a bluefish, according to Murray, who is going to play the only role in which he has not appeared—the Spanish cactus. The titles of the three sketches are "Finnigan's Ball," "Shooting the Chutes," and "McKenna's Flirtation."

While attempting to rescue Edna Goodrich in a scene depicting an attempted suicide from the pier at Cafe Nat Goodwin at Venice, recently, for the two-reel production, "Mrs. Will o' the Wisp," Jay Morley, heavy of the company, together with Miss Goodrich, almost lost their lives when the undertow carried them out past the end of the pier and they were being carried by great waves toward the piling.

A fisherman pasing rescued the couple. Both are good swimmers, but were unable to battle the waves because of the heavy clothing they were wearing.

"The Man Who Was Misunderstood," a two reel drama by George Hall, will be the first picture that King Baggot, Imp star, will appear in under the direction of George Lessey.

It will be remembered that Mr. Lessey left the Edison Company after two years of directing to join the Universal. With this splendid pair, Mr. Lessey and King Baggot, pulling together some big things in Imp feature plays are promised.

Manufacturers Organize to Hold Exposition

Motion Picture Trades Association, Inc., Formed in New York by Prominent Men in the the Film Industry

SINCE the Motion Picture Convention at Dayton there has been a general impression throughout the trade that the manufacturers were organized. On just what lines or for what purpose was kept religiously from the public.

During the week the Secretary of State issued a charter to the Motion Picture Trades Association, Inc. The names of the directors, as filed at Albany, are F. J. Rembusch, Jos. Brandt, H. B. Coles, Robert Kane, W. J. Maxey, W. A. Johnson, Ernst Glantzberg, E. E. Fulton, A. H. Byrd, Carl Anderson and Jos. W. Farnham.

The papers were filed by the Hon. Job E. Hedges, of New York City, and, pursuant to his advice, all particulars relative to the organization had been withheld pending such time that the organizers of this movement could perfect their plans on broad principles.

A. H. Byrd, secretary of the organization, gave out during the week the plan and scope of the association.

"In the organization of this movement," said Mr. Byrd, "we eliminate all personal feeling and get down to business on a basis where we can unite all of the interests without prejudice to anyone and our application recites that we are formed for the purpose of fostering the interests of the manufacturers, exhibitors, exchanges, dealers, and all others engaged in the motion picture industry, to diffuse accurate and reliable information to members."

Mr. Byrd further stated that it was the purpose of the Trades Association to hold at least one national show. However, at present the time and place was indefinite inasmuch as Mr. Rembusch, the chairman, had not appointed the show committee.

However, there were resolutions passed to the effect that there should be at least one show held in 1915, in the City of New York and on recommendation that the show committee take under serious consideration giving one also in the city of Chicago.

At a meeting called during the past week of the directors and members of the Motion Picture Trades Association, the following officers were elected to hold office until the first annual meeting, the third Tuesday in October. They are: F. J. Rembusch, president; C. Anderson, vice-president; W. A. Johnson, treasurer; A. H. Byrd, secretary.

"THE CRUISE OF THE HELL SHIP"

(Balboa-Box Office—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

IT is a somewhat daring undertaking to attempt to reproduce all the mystery and adventure and excitement of a sea story, and yet that is what has been accomplished in this Balboa picture.

It presents with grim and horrible realism the cruise of a tramp steamer with only the blind captain on board and piloting the vessel, which finally runs aground on a desert island.

A CHANCE TO GET HOME

The story is a big one, and the pictures give a sense of this bigness, a sense of the greatness of nature and the smallness of man in comparison. Human nature stands forth revealed in its true colors, much of its brutality, coarseness, baseness and meanness, but the other side, too, tenderness and sweetness and faithfulness and generosity.

Hell Parsons, the skipper of the Hell Ship, is a specimen of man dominated by natural instincts, uncivilized, unrestrained, barbaric. He is subject to fits of cruelty and brutality that make life unbearable for those around. So mean is he to his crew that they all desert, and leave him to steer his ship alone. Soon he loses his sight.

He does not give up, but keeps doggedly on. Brute that he is, the perseverance, the superb courage and the devil-may-care recklessness of the man excite our admiration. None of this is lost in the impersonation that Larry Peyton gives us of this savage.

In contrast with this man there is Van Brunt, who has been rescued by the Hell Ship. At first he is cowed by the domineering Parsons, but when the latter tries his tactics on a young girl that has been picked up also, he shows what he is made of. Van Brunt's very nature seems to have undergone a complete change under the effect of the gruelling experience of the voyage. But what he loses in refinement he gains in stamina.

The two young people escape together and live on the island to which Parsons afterwards drifts in his solitary vessel. They return kindness for cruelty and try to help him, and, when the boat catches afire, they risk their lives to save him in vain. Soon afterward they sight a ship and the two are carried back home.

The story is well connected and compact, and shows dramatic and pictorial economy of detail. There is not too much, but there is enough, and we are not left with the sense of incompleteness when the third and final reel is unwound.

Most of the boat scenes are unusually good, but one must be remarked as faulty, no matter how reluctantly. When the Hell Ship runs aground on the island it is photographed too far up on land and the stern seems to be forward. Furthermore, the boat is still rocking after this happens.

"THE CHIMES"

(Hepworth—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

FOR all lovers of Dickens this picture will prove a rare treat. It is seldom that an old familiar story is reproduced for us in motion pictures without much of the best part being lost; often the delicate touches of the author in characterization, the whimsical or witty dialogue, the clever holding of plot interest, or the masterly descriptions of character or place disappear entirely.

But all of these we have richly in this particular one of Dickens' stories, and it cannot be said that one particle of any of these has been lost in making the story into a photoplay, except those delightful bits of cockney humor that sparkle through the speeches. Yet is it strictly true that these are altogether missing? Much of Dickens' humor is in his characterization, in his reproduction of the personal appearance of his characters, so often odd and queer-looking, as well as of their speech.

And here we have before our eyes old Trotty Veck, kindly and easy going, Alderman Cute, pompous and bull-headed, Sir Joseph Bowley, round but hardly genial, and all the rest.

We have said that the characters are caught as if they were stepping right out of the pages of the "Christmas Stories." The credit for creating this pleasant illusion is due entirely to the excellent actors and actresses that take the several parts.

Warrick Buckland really imitates the inimitable Trotty Veck to perfection. Tom Butt is an imposing Alderman Cute. Violet Hopson and Muriel Smith arouse our sympathies as Meg and Lillian. John MacAndrews measures up to the requirements of hopelessness and desperation that we must see in Will Fern, and Harry Gilbey is the typical smug English nobleman, Sir Richard Bowley.

It would be unfair not to mention the particularly good photography that has gone into the making of these pictures, especially the inside of Trotty's home. The tri-dimensional effect of these is capital, the persons and objects standing out from each other distinctly.

The play is produced by Thomas Bentley, the famous portrayer of Dickensian characters on the stage.

"UNDER ROYAL PATRONAGE"

(Essanay)

REVIEWED BY C. J. VERHALEN

TWO big powerful acts with just the right amount of snap and mystery to it; plenty of good acting and a corking good story make this production stand out as something different and stamp it a splendid photoplay.

Great care was exercised by Producer Calvert in the detail of this production. The uniforming, the interior furnishings and the exterior locations are all that one could wish for in a costume production of this sort.

The acting of Francis X. Bushman, who assumes the leading role, is typical of the character he portrays. Beverley Bayne playing opposite to him also convinces in her interpretation of the role of bogus princess. These two popular players are ably assisted by Thomas Commeford, Bryant Washburn, Chas. Hitchcock, and also E. H. Calvert, who plays a part and also produced the picture.

The picture was dramatized from a story taken from "Munsey's Magazine" and is of the George Barr McCutcheon type, of a supposed small principality in Europe.

ALL-STAR COMPLETES FIRST YEAR

Owing to the fact that the All-Star Feature Corporation has just completed its first year of producing and that the existing contracts for the majority of territories of the United States and the world begin with the fiscal year commencing September 1, there has been considerable activity at the All-Star general offices during the past ten days.

The announcement of a quartet of releases such as Lew Dockstader, Ethel Barrymore, "Shores Acres" and William Faversham has brought this product in demand in the motion picture industry.

While it has not definitely been given out at the offices who are to be the distributors of All-Star pictures for the coming year, it is generally presumed that the list will remain pretty much the same as it has in times gone by. Already more than 70 per cent of last year's agencies have signified their desire to negotiate with the All-Star Company for another twelve months' period.

WARNER COMEDIES A HIT IN CAPITAL

Special to The Motion Picture News

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.

Sidney B. Lust, local manager of Warner's Features, states that the single reel comedies now offered by this office have been eagerly sought by his patrons. These releases have been a chief cause in the Warner offices offering a daily program to the exhibitor, as other exchanges do.

Heretofore, carrying only features, Warner's films simply supplemented the exhibitor's show, but with the combination of a single reel comedy a complete program is possible. This offering has been accepted by many exhibitors booking with this office.

"TEMPEST AND SUNSHINE" IN PICTURES

The Imp Company is producing the well-known and once widely read emotional novel by Mary J. Holmes, "Tempest and Sunshine."

Playing the leads in this drama are Alexander Gaden, Dorothy Phillips and Howard Crampton. It has been produced under the direction of Frank Crane, who has achieved success with this style of drama. The play will be released September 3, in two reels.

ADVERTISING FOR UNIVERSAL SERIAL

A special pamphlet for assisting exhibitors to conduct an extensive advertising campaign has been issued by the Universal Company for its serial "The Trey o' Hearts."

It will be found to aid greatly in laying out a series of newspaper and other forms of publicity, as it contains a list of slugs, borders, electros, mats, herald cuts and teaser zincos, to be obtained from the company at a nominal price. Many of the halftones consist of prominent Universal players.

With a desire to promote large patronage through co-operation of this nature, the Universal firm has placed within reach of every exhibitor arranging to show "The Trey o' Hearts" unusual means for advertising this popular photoplay.

BON RAY NEGOTIATES FOR WORLD'S FAIR CONTRACT

The Bon Ray Film Company, of Woodside, Long Island, N. Y., has recently closed contracts with practically all of the southern states for producing motion pictures for use in the respective state buildings at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco.

The work so far contracted for will amount to about 250,000 feet of film. S. I. Connor, G. W. Brennan, and Albert Blum, business representatives of the Bon Ray Film Company, are now in the south handling the details of this work.

Otto Gilmore, Wm. J. Kraft and Wm. Colfax are on the camera end of the work, which is being pushed with all possible speed in order to be completed by the first of November.

BENNETT SEES "THE INSIDE"

Richard Bennett, the actor of "Damaged Goods" fame, was a recent visitor to the Reliance and Majestic-Mutual studios. "Damaged Goods" was having quite an extended run in Los Angeles.

Bennett had seen "The Escape" and considered it the greatest motion picture he has ever seen.

He had never witnessed motion pictures being taken and was anxious to see D. W. Griffith at work directing a picture. Mr. Bennett called at the studios, where he was met by Mr. Griffith and escorted through the plant.

A huge table, seating twenty-seven people, has recently been installed in the mess room at the Lasky studios. The table is made of one piece from a California redwood tree.

In the Edison multiple "The Long Way," adapted from the novel by Mary Imlay Taylor, Robert Brower was designated to march at the head of a procession of colored soldiers.

At the click of the camera the soldiers refused to be photographed and attempted to turn back. But, Brower, from his experience with the colored folk in the South, applied his soft and humorous treatment with the result that the men marched with the skill of a well-trained regiment.

William Wadsworth, the funmaker in the Edison Wood B. Wedd comedies, is giving free advice to the people on how to gain weight. After consuming three quarts of milk at one sitting his anatomical expansion was so great that he cannot understand why people should remain thin.

While Jessie Stevens, the Edison stout lady, was riding in a hansom cab for the comedy film "Love by the Pound," her great weight went drashing through the floor of the cab and Jessie was forced to hobble along between the wheels until the frightened steed could be brought to a halt.

Since Carlton King, of Edison, has declared his intention of purchasing an automobile he has received an abundance of literature and sample parts of a machine, from rubber tire to carbureter. As Carlton feels that some company might send him a sample automobile, he is in no particular hurry to purchase one at present.

B. C. Neat, Jr., has succeeded D. L. Martin, of Louisville, as manager of the Arcade Theatre, Paducah, Ky.

Motion picture photographers have been busy for several days at the Old Taylor distillery, Paducah, Ky., making a complete film record of all the processes connected with the distillation of whisky.

The film will follow the progress of the malt, barley and corn from the elevator through all the processes of distillation until the finished product, a bottle of bond bourbon of the sort that has made Kentucky famous is reached. The Old Taylor Distillery Company will supply these films for exhibition all over the United States.

Swimming as a sport has long been popular among the young women of Maysville, Ky., but it remained for Anna Belle Ward, manager of the Pastime picture theatre to break all previous records made by local swimmers. Swimming upstream and across the current Miss Ward landed three miles from the point of starting.

She was in no distress at the finish and declared that she could have gone on without difficulty. The river is about one and a quarter miles wide at the point she made her swim and the current ranges between three and four miles an hour.

The People's Church, Omaha, of which the Rev. Charles W. Savidge is pastor, has started presenting religious motion pictures in which various phases of Christ's life are portrayed on the screen. The Rev. Mr. Savidge has invited the general public to attend. The attendance at his church has doubled several times, as the exhibitions are free.

Representatives of the Queen and Crescent Railroad were in Somerset, Ky., recently consulting with local business men relative to the making of motion pictures of Somerset and its surroundings. They stated that the Queen and Crescent Railroad were making a series of pictures of the different towns and cities along its lines that will be shown all over the country.

It is intended to use the film in calling attention to the agricultural and commercial opportunities existing along the lines of that company.

The "Universal Boy" (Matty Roubert) had one of the strongest experiences of his young but adventuresome career the other day when the Honorable Yong Yang Ying, Chinese Consul-General, visited him at the Universal Imp studio to pose before the camera in a scene with the little fellow in his latest series entitled "Matty Solves a Chinese Kidnapping Mystery."

The first drama, which will be produced by the Rex company, of which Joseph de Grasse is director and in which Pauline Bush is to be featured, is entitled "The Girl Who Was Afraid of Love." The story was written especially for Miss Bush by Caroline Willey and contains a character delineation of a super-bashful and sensitive girl. Others who have been cast in this drama are Lon Chaney, Joseph King and Beatrice Van.

Robert Leonard, actor and director of Rex dramas, is just completing another of his "Boob" comedies. It is entitled "The Boob's Nemesis." Ella Hall plays the principal female role.

Clay Pumphrey, an expert operator, formerly with the Colonial and Moose Theatres, Danville, Ky., now is making a tour of the State with the tuberculosis demonstration car sent out by the Kentucky board of health.

McConnell and Pennell, of McCook, Neb., recently arranged to get a 6-A Power machine from Fred Van Husan, manager of the Laemmle Service, Omaha. Manager Van Husan sold seven 6-A Power machines within three days last week and told about it as an indication of the promising business in this territory.

Schulkin and Miller, of Sioux City, Ia., bought of Manager Van Husan the chairs, machines and other equipment for a 650 capacity theatre to be opened on Fourth street, Sioux City, Ia., soon. The theatre will probably be called the Frolic.

Charter of incorporation of the Harlequin, a new motion-picture theatre, has just been announced in Charleston, Miss. The incorporators are all prominent Charleston men. Among the stockholders are: C. R. Cooper, H. H. Womble, Jake Weinstein, H. L. Gary, C. W. Leggett, Dr. Thompson Anderson, M. H. Tripp, J. R. Oakes, W. F. Lambert, W. O. McMullen. The picture show is now in operation.

Work of remodeling the Gaiety Theatre, at Springfield, Ill., has begun and $20,000 will be spent in improving this popular playhouse. The work is to be completed by fall, when the theatre will open with motion pictures and vaudeville.

The management of the Casino Theatre, Spokane, has been granted a building permit for remodeling to cost $1,000. The operating rooms are to be moved and enlarged and the offices will be made more roomy.

The largest steel trusses ever used in construction work in Spokane have been delivered on the site of the new Lincoln Theatre, Sprague and Lincoln, and are being put in place.

The new picture house requires three of the trusses, each sixty feet in length and weighing twenty-five tons. They are thirteen feet wide.

Director Joseph de Grasse is engaged in the production of a one-reel drama by Rupert Julian, leading man in the Rex company. It is entitled "The Hole in the Garden Wall." The leading female role is played by Elsie Jane Wilson.

Manager Jack Breslin, of the Crescent Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., has booked the Essanay masterpiece, "One Wonderful Night," for three days' showing and has ordered 3,000 post cards of Francis Bushman, which will be distributed at matinee performances for a week in advance.

Two thousand dollars has been appropriated by the City Council of St. Louis for free motion pictures in the down-town parks and playgrounds.

"How clear the pictures are!"

You've often overheard that remark—and it's as strong a commendation, brings as much business as does a favorable comment on the picture story itself.

The "clearest pictures" are on Eastman film because the product is right, chemically and physically.

It is easily identifiable by the stencil "Eastman" in the margin.

$250,000 PARAMOUNT PROGRAM FOR STANLEY THEATRE

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Aug. 27.

When it was announced a few weeks ago that the Paramount Pictures Corporation had been formed, Stanley Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company, this city, lost no time in closing a contract for the Philadelphia representation of the Paramount corporation, the aforesaid contract involving an estimated expenditure of approximately $250,000.

All of the Paramount program leases will first be shown in Philadelphia at the Stanley Theatre. The first on Monday, August 31, will introduce H. B. Warner, who starred in "Jimmy Valentine" and "The Ghost Breaker" in the powerful drama, "The Lost Paradise," written by Henry C. DeMille. Following this a week later will appear Dustin Farnum in "The Virginian," a dramatization of Owen Wister's story of Western life.

MAKE PLAYGROUND FILM

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 25.

At the recent Greater Birmingham Playground Day held at the Alabama State Fair grounds, near Birmingham, motion picture films were made of something over 2,000 children of the city playground association engaged in games and contests at one time.

The playground association plans to book the film in all parts of the state and place parts of it with one of the "weeklies," so that it will be shown in all parts of the country.

NEXT PICTURE PLAYHOUSE RELEASE

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., has selected as its next release "The Mystery of the Poison Pool," in five reels, in which is featured James Gordon.

The play is from the pen of James Dawley. Betty Harte, who has taken the leading roles with the Famous Players, and who for years was a star for the Selig and other prominent companies, takes the leading woman's part.

LUBIN STAGES RAILROAD WRECK

The Lubin Film Company has arranged to take a photograph of a railroad "collision" on the Pittsburgh and Susquehanna railroad at a point between Moshannon and Sterling, two towns near Phillipsburgh, Pa., during a celebration in the latter place on Labor Day.

Two locomotives will be arranged in such a manner that the camera will convey a vivid picture of the crash resulting from the contact of huge engines in a railway wreck.

The Value of Portrait Posters

We are spending millions every year to familiarize the picture fan with the players on our staff.

We pay salaries to the highest class artists in the world. We get the best screen stars that money can buy to act in pictures for you.

But how many of you up-to-date exhibitors really take advantage of this?

How many real, live, up-to-the-minute exhibitors use special portrait posters of the greatest collection of picture stars in the universe?

We want to see special portrait posters in front of every Universal theatre in the country.

We want you to take advantage of the greatest publicity in the world and to familiarize your patrons with the players on our program.

Go to your exchange NOW and DEMAND PORTRAIT POSTERS, if they cannot supply you, write or wire

"THE LITTLEST REBEL"

(IN SIX ACTS)

¶ "The Littlest Rebel" has been lauded to the skies by both press and public.

¶ "The Littlest Rebel" contains more heart-interest and real war-time action than any other feature on the market.

¶ "The Littlest Rebel" was a tremendous success as a stage production.

¶ "The Littlest Rebel" as a photoplay production stands second to none.

"The proof of the celluloid is in the seeing"

¶ If you are of the "SHOW ME" type send us a list of your open dates—come to the office, let us convince you by projecting this feature on the screen. We are willing to "SHOW YOU."

¶ Exhibitors who are now playing this picture are meeting with unprecedented success. They have something that absolutely stands back of the advertising.

¶ You, as an exhibitor, professing to show your clientele the best there is in motion pictures, cannot afford to overlook this one. They will thank you for it—you will thank us.

¶ If you cannot come to the office pay a visit to your competitor's theatre. HE WILL "SHOW YOU!"

¶ A full line of "Ticket Selling" posters and advertising matter (convincing and necessary arguments for an exhibitor) has been prepared and waiting for you.

THE BOND OF LOVE	An American 2-part novelty drama done by members of the Yale University Dramatic Association, with the Yale campus and interior views as a setting. A college play, the first ever produced in films, written and played by college students. 1-3-6 sheet posters.
WHILE FIRE RAGED	A 5-part drama of love, sacrifice, and panic. The captain of a trans-Atlantic liner forbids his son, the mate, to marry a celebrated dancing girl who has taken passage on the ship. Fire breaks out in mid-ocean and the girl gives a wonderful exhibition of bravery. 1-3-6 sheet posters.
THE MONEY LENDER	In 4 reels. A story with a sure-fire human appeal, which, at the same time, gives under-the-surface views of the life and customs of orthodox Jews in Austrian Poland. The money lender himself is a character marvelously acted and sympathetic. Remarkable synagogue scenes. 1-3-6 sheet posters.
THE PERILS OF PAULINE	Has your attendance been falling off of late? Pauline falls off too, but it's the kind of falling off that will put you on your feet. Now she falls off a cliff into a river and that's only one of her near-to-death adventures. She sets a new pace in motion picture daring and in box-office receipts. PAULINE PLEASES ON BOTH SIDES OF THE TICKET-WINDOW

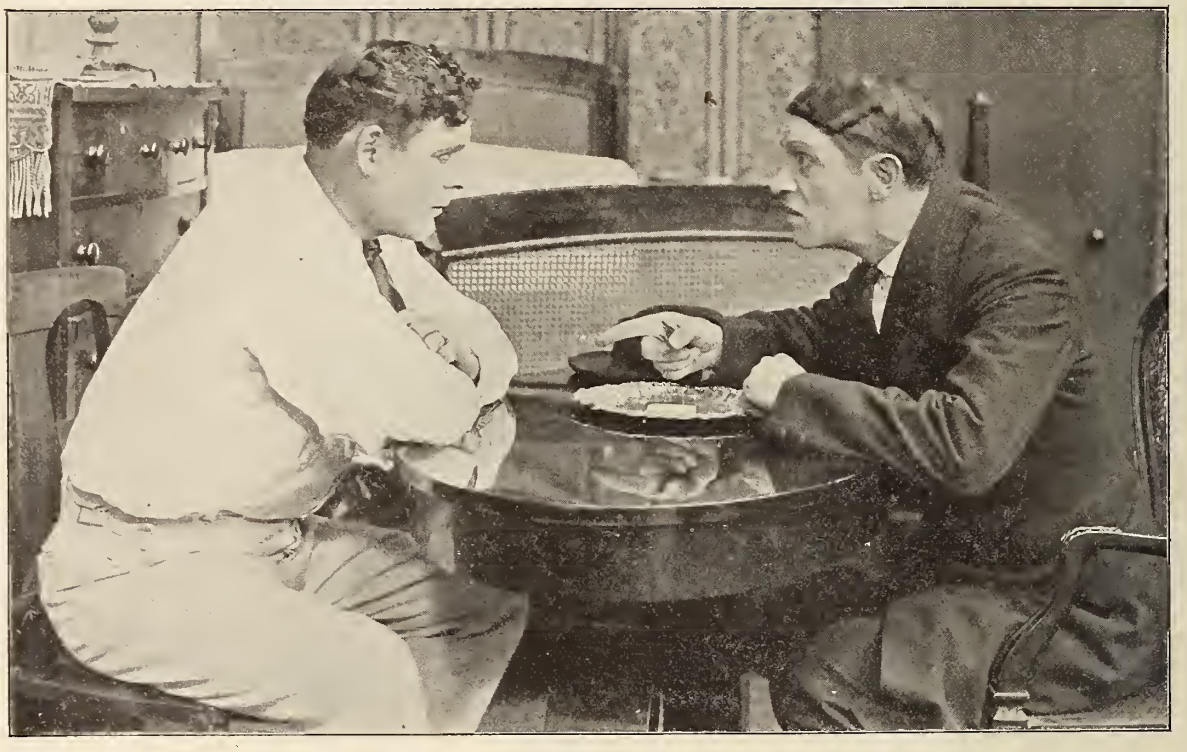
MILLER BROS.' 101 RANCH

When We Were Young



Something entirely out-of-the-ordinary in Western pictures—memories of two aged sweethearts who met and loved and dared death together in the days when painted redskins spread desolation over the plains. The picture shows the memories, and does it in the wonderfully realistic fashion that is characteristic of the famous 101 Ranch pictures. The rides and the fights—the savagery of the Indians and heroism of the plainsmen- all are so close to the real thing that you hold your breath during many a thrilling moment.

The Arrow's Tongue

Another absolutely unique story of the old West. Picture this: A dying half-breed boy with an arrow in his breast dashing across the plains on a white horse. He rushes past a wagon train—the plains-men heed the arrow's warning and prepare to fight. He darts by a squad of troopers—they gallop madly in the direction whence he came. Everywhere the dying half-breed boy and the white horse and the bloody arrow spread the message of coming redskin hordes. And in the scenes that ensue you can almost hear the warwhoops.

Face Value

A Dramatic Adaptation of a recent Magazine Story

By W. B. M. FERGUSON IN TWO PARTS

An absorbingly interesting drama which unfolds the various phases of its plot in a delightfully original manner. Attempting to impersonate Silas Wilding's nephew and so becoming heir to a fortune, Kelly married a girl on "face value" and thereupon gets so deeply entangled in a plot that his fortune and happiness seem highly improbable. The story ends auspiciously.

—Ed. Spiegel, Manager Strand Theatre, Newark.

Press Comments

"Obtaining such a worth-while film from a market already overstocked with trashy, alleged 'War Features' was a triumph for the 'STRAND' Theatre."—New York Sun.

"'ENGLAND'S MENACE'—(3 parts)—is a powerful plea not only to England but to this country, not for war and bloodshed but for preparedness to prevent both. It comes now in the nature of a prophecy—it stirred all England and will undoubtedly cause a sensation among thinking Americans. It is of peculiar interest to the citizens of a country which has so small a standing army as the United States."—Morning Telegraph, New York, 8, 30, 14.

"It seems as if the London Film Company had been gifted with clairvoyant powers in producing this subject at this time. 'ENGLAND'S MENACE' is a tribute to the powers of both the author, Bannister Merwin, and the director, Harold Shaw, who carried out the details of the scenario with remarkable skill. The story implies the assistance of the British Government, which probably realized the power contained in such a picture for arousing public opinion on the vital subject of Home Defense."—The Motion Picture News, New York, 9, 5, 14.

"The theme is well carried out—the series of incidents in the action of the picture (ENGLAND'S MENACE) are concise and sustain the deepest interest. The scenes showing the battleships stripped for action and in war array are impressive to a high degree."
—Moving Picture World, New York, 9, 5, 14.

Attention of Mr. W. W. Hodkinson

My dear Mr. Hodkinson:

Now that the Strand has contracted for the Paramount program I am looking forward with great [illegible]ions to the coming releases.

To say the least, I am delighted with what I have already seen that is ready to be released and it leads me to expect results hitherto undreamed of.

Of course, you know I am very well acquainted with what you have done on the coast and I know that you are absolutely sincere in working for the uplift of the Motion Pictures and mutual benefit of all concerned.

Your plan has been most successful on the coast and I see no reason why it should not be successful here I personally know of the splendid enthusiasm of all of the manufacturers in reference to the Paramount program and there is no question at all but what such effort must prove successful. You may rely upon my heartiest co-operation in every way. Any first class exhibitor should consider himself lucky indeed to have obtained the francnise for Paramount service.

Wishing you and yours every success in the new undertaking, believe me to be

Most sincerely yours,

Managing Director.

Mr. W. E. Smith, Pres.,

Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:-

We are enclosing herewith check on account of contract executed this day for Paramount Pictures for the City of Philadelphia.

The eras alloted to the different theatres under this contract leaves only 10% of the City of Philadelphia without a Paramount program.

We were very glad to be enabled to embrace the opportunity to secure these pictures, and certainly hope that many other companies work along the lines which your program indicates.

This contract, while we believe it to be the largest ever made in the history of the Film Business by any one company, only supplies six (6) theatres out of thirty three (33) under our direction in this city.

The benefit to those theatres supplied should more than repay them for the seemingly high price which they will pay for this service.

The points of advantage, in our minds, are as follows:-

1- The regularity of good productions, which will be handled by capable directors.
2- The drawing power of the best stars.
3- Also, and probably one of the most important points - the protection the theatres so supplied, has to certain alloted eras.

We wish that our success shall be mutual in this undertaking and beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

"The Exhibitor's Medium of Communication with His Fellow Showman"

Volume X — September 12, 1914 — Number 10

System in Advertising

THE "Paramount Pictures" advertisement, a two-page spread in the last issue of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is a most interesting piece of publicity.

It brings to the writer's mind a discussion that arose nearly a year ago, when this publication made the editorial prophecy that in 1914 several big advertising campaigns would be launched introducing trade-marked pictures directly to the public.

"WHAT, then, will your publication do?" was the question asked by several.

"In reaching the public, mediums of wide and popular circulation will be used. Won't this eliminate the picture trade journal, then, as an advertising medium?"

"ON the contrary," was the reply. "Advertising to the public will increase the usefulness of the trade paper; for the latter will be employed to tell the exhibitor how the public is being reached through general mediums and why he should book those pictures for which a public demand is being created.

"THE closer such a journal is to the exhibitor, and the wider its exhibitor circulation the more necessary and valuable will be its function in such a comprehensive campaign.

"It will be one of the cogs in a complete chain of advertising machinery, systematically designed to market pictures to the public and through the exhibitor."

THE "Paramount Picture" advertisement is just such an advertising cog. It is a necessary part of a well-planned, completely arranged selling system —one that cannot help be successful. It gives to a trade paper an opportunity to use its fullest power.

THE advertisement in itself is well worthy of close study.

It illustrates, first, the opening gun of the compaign, —an imposing spread in the "Saturday Evening Post." Even this reproduction can be read.

The two other illustrations are equally important. One is the "Paramount Pictures" trademark, the symbol which this advertising will make familiar to the public eye, so that people will know what it means when they see it at the theatre front.

The other is the Paramount poster to appear on the billboards in five hundred cities.

IT will be noted that these two important illustrations also appear in the "Post" advertisement. Again, it will be noted that the six portraits which head the "Post" spread also head the big poster.

In this way the whole campaign is "tied up," connected, made doubly strong in effect.

FIRST, you will read the whole story of Paramount Pictures in the "Post," at your leisure, your interest being particularly excited by the human note introduced through the personalities who produced the pictures.

Then, later, you will see, as you travel, the Paramount posters, recognizing the same personalities, and remembering also that you saw an illustration of this very same poster in the advertisement.

That will bring back to your mind the story of "Paramount Pictures," just as though the advertisement were repeated.

IN this campaign, the "Post" reaches several millions of people and the posters more millions.

The trade-journal only reaches several thousand readers.

BUT where the millions spend dimes and quarters each in admissions, the trade-journal readers spend very heavily in proportion for bookings. They buy in gross lots for the public's piecemeal purchases.

So the advertising rate in the trade-journal is much higher than that of the popular mediums—because of its greater purchasing power per reader.

THE moral of which for the motion picture advertiser is: when you buy trade-journal circulation, be sure you are getting all and only trade circulation—not an inconsequential fraction of the millions who only spend dimes and quarters and can only be economically reached through general mediums.

$85,000 FIRE WRECKS THEATRE

Special to The Motion Picture News

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 3.

The Hopkins Theatre, the place where motion pictures were first shown in Louisville a little more than a decade ago, has been almost totally destroyed by fire, and it is doubtful if the site of the building in Market street will be used again for theatricals.

The Hopkins, with a seating capacity of more than 2,500, was one of the largest theatres in this country devoted exclusively to the exhibition of motion pictures. The loss of $85,000 on the building is partly covered by insurance.

WARNER'S OPENS WINNIPEG EXCHANGE

M. Feldstein has just opened up the latest link in the trans-continental chain of Warner's Features, Inc., exchanges in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

The exchange is fully equipped to handle the territory from Fort William, Ontario, to Calgary, Alberta. As soon as the Winnipeg branch is operating smoothly, other exchanges will be established at Regina, Sask., and Calgary.

Higher Prices Hold Los Angeles Patrons

No Falling Off in Attendance, Though One Picture Is Repeated at Advance Prices After Earlier Showing—Intermission Concert a Success

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Aug. 31.

THAT increase in price does not affect attendance of theatres here was shown last week at both the Alhambra and Miller's Theatre. The former heretofore was a five-cent house, using first-run program of one and two-reel subjects.

A second run of the Lasky picture, "The Man on the Box," with Max Figman, was shown in connection with the first showing of the current series of "The Trey o' Hearts," for ten and twenty cents and the attendance was greater than ever before.

"The Christian," shown two weeks at Clune's Auditorium, was projected at Miller's this week for ten and twenty cents admission. The former prices were ten and fifteen cents.

The attendance was better than usual and the eight hundred seats were insufficient to accommodate the attendance at the evening performances.

Tally's Broadway introduced a pleasing novelty recently in the nature of a five-minute concert during intermission. During this period the screen and draperies were raised, giving the audience a view of the stage cozily set. The floor of the orchestra pit was then elevated to the level of the stage, while the musicians remained in their places.

The concert consisted of two numbers, and then the pit floor and players were lowered. The feature, an innovation in Los Angeles, caused much comment among the patrons of the theatre.

"Martin Eden," the six-reel picture by Bosworth, Inc., from the story by Jack London, was the attraction at Tally's.

Nebraska Airdomes Close After Big Season

Other Picture Houses Opening in Expectation of Record Fall Business—Outlook Bright for Iowa, Kansas, the Dakotas and Nebraska

Special to The Motion Picture News

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 2.

SIGNS of increased activity in the motion picture world mark the advent of autumn in the territory fed from Omaha. The Royal Amusement Company, LaMars, Ia., of which G. A. Topping is secretary, is completing a large motion picture house which will be opened about September 15. A new theatre is being built at Beatrice, Neb. R. R. Booth has bought the Empress Theatre, of Nebraska City, Neb., from O. G. Leidigh. E. P. Leidigh has been the manager.

The airdomes in Omaha and South Omaha are closing now, at the end of the most successful season they have ever known. Those that have been established a year or more experienced the greatest prosperity, they report, but the new airdomes brought enough returns to highly satisfy their proprietors.

The few theatres in this territory which closed during the hot months are opening again in anticipation of a record business. The increase is noted especially in the exchanges. Exhibitors are livening up to their possibilities with a greater vim than ever before, it is noted, and this winter will undoubtedly see a great advance in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and the Dakotas.

Cleveland Police Ban Misleading "War" Posters

Take Exception to Advertising Matter Said to Illustrate "Actual Scenes Taken on the Battlefields of Europe"

Special to The Motion Picture News

Cleveland, O., Sept. 3.

SO great has become the demand for war films here that some of the less scrupulous managers have made statements which have aroused the ire of Police Prosecutor Poulson.

Prosecutor Poulson has had brought to his attention a display poster before one of the Cleveland houses advertising war films "illustrating actual pictures taken on the battlefields of Europe."

The veracity of these films, the prosecutor says, is to be greatly doubted. Mr. Poulson is determined to stop the use of fake or misleading posters. He plans an immediate investigation and promises stern measures against offenders.

Where films dealing with foreign army life cannot be obtained, American military dramas have been shown to satisfy the public thirst for warfare.

For the reason that military subjects appear so frequently in them, the various news-weeklies are much in demand. Every manager is making a special effort to let it be known that at his theatre a film of this nature can be seen.

COURT LIFTS "LID" FROM WAR FILMS

Grants Permanent Injunction to San Francisco Exhibitor Who Complained of Interference by Chief White—Way Now Open to All Exhibitors Similarly Situated—War Pictures at All Theatres—Stillwell Assails League's Attitude in Letter

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

San Francisco, August 31.

THE recent efforts of Chief of Police White to stop the Silver Palace Theatre from displaying films showing war scenes has been effectually blocked, and all danger of there being a self-appointed censor to dictate the policy of San Francisco motion picture houses has been removed.

Following the recent order of the Chief of Police that no war pictures could be shown in this city, the Silver Palace Theatre showed a drama, "Faithful Unto Death," and its manager, Charles Stillwell, was arrested.

A temporary injunction was secured against that police official and the picture was shown for four days. A permanent injunction was applied for and when the case was brought before the court this was granted.

Points Way for Relief

While this injunction does not mean that the order of the Chief of Police has been swept aside, it points the way for other exhibitors in case they are interfered with.

Since this injunction was secured the activities of the authorities in attempting to suppress war pictures have been stopped and films of this character are being freely shown by all exhibitors who wish to feature them.

A member of the local board of censorship, who conducts a large house on Market street, recently featured "War Is Hell," and was visited by the Chief of Police. However, it was not the film that was objected to, but the immense sign that was displayed, and this was removed rather than cause trouble.

Police Modified their Order

The original order of the police included films dealing with the wars of any nation, America included. After the protest by the League, referred to in last week's issue of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the order was modified to permit American war pictures to be shown. To the modified order the League, apparently, gave approval.

That Mr. Stilwell resented the exercise of the police authority over war films to any degree was plain. The action of the League in silently, at any rate, acquiescing in the revised ruling of the police has disappointed and irritated Mr. Stilwell, as will appear from the letter printed below.

This letter was sent to the San Francisco League, and their action upon it is now awaited. The letter is given here in full:

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 18, 1914.

"Motion Picture Exhibitors League of San Francisco,

"San Francisco, Cal.

"Gentlemen:—Having been informed by the secretary, Mr. R. L. Marks, that if my dues were paid to date I might have the floor at any meeting to express myself in reference to the actions of two officers of this League in appearing before Chief of Police White on the subject of censuring war pictures, and, realizing the truth in the statement of the secretary regarding the dues, I am taking this manner of laying the matter before you, earnestly hoping that you will give due consideration to same.

"During the conversation referred to, Mr. Marks confirmed reports and statements as published in the San Francisco 'Examiner' of August 11 (clipping enclosed) to the effect that the president and himself as secretary of the M. P. E. L. of San Francisco, acting for the League, had appeared before Chief of Police White and put the League on record as favoring the action of the police in censuring all war pictures other than American.

"Sunday night Mr. Marks and the writer discussed briefly the then impending ban on war pictures. He was informed that the Silver Palace, having a war picture booked, intended showing it and were expecting trouble if censors enforced the order. While Mr. Marks stated that he was to a certain extent in favor of Chief White's order, he gave me no reason to believe any immediate action by the League was contemplated, saying he had no idea of the course they would pursue.

LOBBY OF SAN FRANCISCO THEATRE WHILE A FORBIDDEN WAR FILM WAS ON EXHIBITION

"Monday, as expected, the picture entitled 'Faithful Unto Death' was condemned by Corporal Peschon of the Censor Board, film confiscated and the writer arrested. Case was dismissed; restraining order against police department secured, and picture shown again.

Protests League's Action

"As an exhibitor of San Francisco, for the good of the business, I protested against the unauthorized action of the president and secretary of the M. P. E. L. of San Francisco and beg leave to call your attention to the following facts, fully convinced that in so doing it may help to bring about a condition entirely lacking in the League at the present.

"The utter lack of any help or support, moral or otherwise, to be expected is aptly illustrated in past experiences of the Silver Palace Theatre.

"The Silver Palace, as you are aware, has had considerable trouble with the Board of Censors in the past, and has incurred great expense as a result. In almost every case it has called upon the League for the help and moral support to which their membership entitled them. Has it, with the exception of one case, ever had this assistance rendered? No! Why?

"For the past year and a half has this League had the unanimous support of its members in any crisis or action taken for general uplift of the business? No! Why?

"Has there been any attempted co-operation with exchanges for mutual advantage that has not caused a series of dissentions and ended in a fiasco? No! Why?

"Has the League for the past year and a half been slowly losing attendance of members until it is a rare occasion indeed when there are more than a bare quorum present at any regular meeting? Yes! Why?

"Has the control of the members slowly slipped from the grasp of the League to such an extent that some houses in almost every district and every house in some districts are running an unlimited number of reels for five cents; in some cases as many as nine or ten reels? Yes! Why?

Some Criticisms

"Has the dignity of this League been upheld by both officers and members to such an extent that they are in a position to demand and receive the respect that should be accorded to an organization of this kind? No! Why? Is it not a fact that some actual members, exchanges and non-member exhibitors consider the League as a joke and have no hesitancy in so stating? Yes! Why?

"Has the M. P. E. L. of San Francisco, known nationally as one of the strongest locals, affiliated with the National League, slowly retrograded and wasted away through internal strife and petty bickering to merely a name and a memory? Yes! Why?

"As a possible reason for the necessity of some of the above mentioned questions, I refer you to the second paragraph of this communication, which furnishes one instance of the high-handed usurpation of authority by the few and the violation of the rights of other members of this League who have a right to an opportunity to voice their opinion before any action in any manner is taken. The facts in this particular instance follow:

"Two officers of the M. P. E. L. of San Francisco, the president and secretary, without authority or sanction of the League, or knowledge of its members, appeared before Chief of Police White and put the League on record, intentionally or otherwise, as favoring the action of the police department in censoring films depicting war of any

TYPE OF LOBBY WHICH POLICE OF SAN FRANCISCO OBJECT TO AS "BLOCKADED"

European nation, either as fiction or fact, and this at a time when an exhibitor of San Francisco was then in the courts contesting the legality of the police censorship in a matter that directly affected every exhibitor and exchange of San Francisco and the cities and towns of northern California whose local censor boards are influenced to some extent by the ruling of the San Francisco censors.

"Has this League ever advocated or fought for any form of local censorship? That it should now stand in the false light of acquiescence to, or what is far worse, as favoring stringent and unwarranted censorship imposed at this time by the police is due solely to the fact that the policy of this League has been in the past and is now turned, twisted and juggled by a few for reasons that are sufficient only unto themselves?

Will Bring Stricter Censorship

"Did these gentlemen give this matter careful and thorough consideration before acting, or did they commit the League and its influence to this course governed solely by conditions existing in their own particular locality, without thought or regard to possible circumstances surrounding other exhibitors, a number of whom are so situated that the enforcement of the drastic ruling of police and censors in this matter will result in hardship and financial loss immediately, and indirectly lead to a stricter censorship of all films in the future?

"As an exhibitor who in the past has been a loyal member of the M. P. E. L. of San Francisco, believing the action of the president and secretary to be against the wishes of the majority of the exhibitors of San Francisco, I, as manager of the Silver Palace Theatre, 729 Market street, enter protest against the assumption of the authority as vested in the League as a whole by any officer or officers of this League without the knowledge and due sanction of the League, according to the constitution and by-laws.

"Therefore, I trust some member who is in good standing will make a motion that statements of the president and secretary as published August 11 be repudiated; that a committee be appointed to wait upon Chief of Police White and express the opinion of the League as ordered by a vote of the members present.

"Respectfully yours,

(Signed) "CHARLES STILLWELL,

SPOKANE LEAGUE LAUNCHED

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 31.

The Spokane Moving Picture Exhibitors League, formerly christened under that name and permanently organized, has started its career.

The membership of the league is to include managers of Spokane and its neighbor city, Hillyard. Succeeding the temporary officers, the following have been elected to handle the organization's affairs:

B. W. Copeland, of the Rex, president; C. E. Stilwell, of the Unique, vice-president; A. R. Patton, of the Lyric, secretary, and Sam W. B Cohn, of the Spokane, treasurer. A constitution and by-laws was adopted. The organization will meet for business on the first Tuesday of each month and socially on the third Tuesday.

Predict Building Boom in Pittsburgh

New Building Laws of State Make Remodeling of Old Buildings, as Heretofore Done, Too Costly To Be Practical—Two Theatres Nearly Ready to Open; Numerous Others, After Remodeling, Resume Operations—Other News of Pittsburgh and Vicinity

Special to The Motion Picture News

Pittsburgh, Sept. 3.

THIS fall will see the inauguration of a big building boom among the motion picture exhibitors in this section. Thousands of dollars will be spent by the film men in erecting costly theatres wherein to conduct photoplays in other than the poor, unhealthy buildings which have been the case in so many instances in this city.

The new building laws make it almost impossible to change storerooms into theatres now and it is hardly possible to find quarters that can be changed with little expense into motion picture playhouses, so that the building of new theatres seems to be the only solution to the problem.

A number of exhibitors who are operating theatres in the city at present state they will shortly begin the erection of new theatres that will be modern in every respect and will be ventilated in such a manner as to make them comfortable at all times of the year.

Two New Theatres Under Way

Clark & Rowland are at present erecting two theatres here. The Regent, in East Liberty, is scheduled to open on October 1, and their new theatre in Homewood, as yet unnamed, is so far completed that it is expected it will open on September 15.

The Regent is located in Penn avenue west of Highland avenue, and is in the business section of East Liberty. East Liberty is a residential section with a business center equal to any of its size in the United States. The section has a population of 150,000 to draw from and the possibilities of the motion picture business are practically unlimited.

The main auditorium of the Regent will have a seating capacity of 1,000 and will be absolutely fireproof. It will have sixteen fire exits and a new idea in ventilating the theatre is being installed which when complete will cost $4,000.

The music for the theatre will be furnished by an organ costing $12,000, and in addition to this the theatre will have a regular orchestra.

The equipment of the theatre will be of the most modern type and will be the best that can be secured. A new screen of the latest design and texture is also to be installed, together with three projection machines new to Pittsburgh theatres. Another novelty to be added to the theatre will be a monster electric sign twenty-four feet high with an electric fountain on top. This will be placed at the front of the theatre to attract attention.

The total cost of the building and equipment will be close to $65,000.

Other Improvements Planned

The Homewood house is being erected on a lot 48 by 120 feet, at the corner of Homewood avenue and Bennett street, and is also in the center of a thickly populated section. The house will be modern in every particular and will cost, when completed, $35,000.

The East Liberty Cameraphone Theatre will no doubt be closed for the next two weeks on account of the extensive improvements that are being made. At first it was thought this would not be necessary, but the management decided that it would be best as the large amount of work would necessarily cause the patrons of the theatre a great deal of annoyance.

The seating capacity of the theatre is to be increased from 600 to 1,000, and the improvements will cost the theatre $22,000. H. B. Kester is the manager, and the theatre is the oldest in East Liberty.

The improvements that have been made to the Alhambra Theatre in Penn Avenue, East Liberty, have been completed and that theatre is now listed among the finest in this section, displaying none but motion pictures. An additional 150 seats have been added to the capacity of the house, making it now seat 750.

More than $6,000 was spent on the improvements, which include new equipment and the remodeling of the interior. Nat Friedberg is the manager of the theatre.

The Gem Theatre, at 6280 Frankstown avenue, has completed its remodeling work and now has a seating capacity of 300. A large amount of equipment has been added to the theatre and an automatic ticket machine has been installed.

Manager Leo F. Levinson, of the World Film Corporation, reports the big Shubert production of "The Lure" is making good here, and he has booked it up solid for a number of weeks. He also has a number of other big features which, he states, are going some and will be in steady service for a number of weeks.

Max W. Herring, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Warner's Features, has tendered his resignation to the company. Mr. Herring will remain in the motion picture business in the city.

The Grand Theatre, formerly the Comique, in Kittanning, Pa., has changed hands, Kirke & Wable taking charge of the place. It was formerly under the management of Weyman & Shankel. A number of improvements are to be made to the theatre.

Ludwig, Hommel & Company furnished two 6A Power machines for the new Empire Theatre at Connellsville, and other equipment, last week. The local company has a number of big contracts for theatres now under construction.

Additional New Theatres

Henry Gauding, who recently erected a new and up-to-date theatre in Boggs avenue, Mt. Washington, has named the new house the Lincoln. It is a credit to that section of the city and has a seating capacity of 450. Modern equipment and the best of projection machines have been installed.

Buckhannon, W. Va., is to have a new theatre, which is to be opened on October 1 by W. B. Phillips. Both motion pictures and vaudeville will be used. Ludwig Hommel & Company are furnishing the entire equipment for this theatre, and nothing is being overlooked.

The Keystone Theatre at Natrona, Pa., is being remodeled by John Hafner, its proprietor. The interior is being remodeled and two new Power 6A machines are being installed.

All of the theatres in Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, which include the Columbia, Minerva, Downtown Cameraphone and Olympic, are soon to raise their price from five to ten cents. This was decided by the fact that the rents are soon to be increased in this section, and the higher price of the shows makes it necessary to make the move.

GAUMONT OFFICER GOES TO WAR

Among those in this country called away to the European war was Lucien Veuve, treasurer of the Gaumont Company, who sailed August 26, on "La France." He joined the 39th Regiment of the French Infantry.

DE MILLE WINS SCREEN REPUTATION

Cecil B. De Mille who, since its organization, has been director-general of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, was one of the first recruits from the "legitimate" to the screen world. Mr. De Mille began about two years ago studying the field of motography, and last December left for Hollywood, Cal., where, in co-operation with Oscar Apfel, he produced "The Squaw Man" for the Lasky Company.

Mr. De Mille progressed so rapidly that his work on "The Call of the North," the recent Lasky production, stamps him as one of the foremost motion picture directors.

Real War Pictures Will Be Rarities

Correspondent of English Paper Declares That Difficulties Confronting Camera Men are Practically Insurmountable—Might Trail After Armies Later

THE difficulties of obtaining pictures of actual scenes in the Belgian zone of hostilities, on account of suspicion of the military authorities, who are in constant fear of spies, have been set forth in a recent article in the "Bioscope."

A correspondent of that publication writes that at the outbreak of the war it was worth a man's life to carry a camera. In relating his own experiences in Belgium he said that if his credentials were passed on favorably by the Brussels' authorities, there was still danger from mobs.

In the first few days following the declaration of war, to take a picture meant risking death. A camera was looked upon as the outward and visible signs of a spy, and anyone so unfortunate as to be caught far from the protection of the guards was apt to be torn limb from limb. And this "protection consisted of arrest, which might lead later to a quick court martial and execution.

A friend of the correspondent was placed under arrest twelve times in one day, regardless of the fact that he had left his apparatus at home. After the panicky feeling of the inhabitants subsided somewhat, permits began to be issued to photographers, but they were not allowed to go beyond the city limits. This was the extent to which the most venturesome and eager cameraman was allowed to go "to the front."

The correspondent also stated that the English and French authorities were dead set against admitting photographers to the battle lines. Thus pictures of actual fighting are out of the question, but he thinks that eventually camera men might be allowed to trail in the rear of the successful armies. This, however, is only a supposition.

Even if a man could slide through the lines, he further declares, expecting to take pictures unnoticed, his bulky apparatus would make it impossible to carry out the plan. His difficulties are greater than the ordinary still-picture photographer, who with a box small enough for quick concealment, might be able to escape undetected.

FILM PATIN BON VOYAGE

Over one hundred people bid Claude Patin "bon voyage" when he sailed on the S.S. "France," which left New York Wednesday, August 26, for Havre.

A motion picture was made of Mr. Patin, bidding good-bye to his friends, which was shown at the Strand Theatre later.

The pilot who escorted the "France" safely out of the harbor was Frank T. Egan, a brother of Agnes Egan Cobb, and he stated the colors would be dipped for Mr. Patin in his honor.

As the "France" pulled out from her dock the crew of an English boat lying alongside cheered the vessel on its way and waved English flags until the steamship was out of sight.

Carbon Prices Advanced by War Situation

Radical Changes Following "News" Interview with Bio Importer Invalidated the Facts Published in Issue of August 22

RADICAL changes which occurred suddenly and immediately following an interview granted a representative of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS by Charles L. Kiewert, vice-president of the Charles L. Kiewert Company, importers of the Bio brand, Milwaukee, on the carbon situation, appearing in the issue of August 22, invalidated the statements contained in the report of the correspondent, resulting in considerable regrettable misunderstanding over prices in many quarters of the trade.

It was stated that the war would not affect prices. On the other hand, the price of carbons has advanced. The conditions governing the increase in the case of the Kiewert Company are due to consignments from the other side being held up at the last minute.

The Kiewert Company states that three large shipments, which the company expected would help steady the market for some time, at the time the interview was given out, could not be delivered because two steamers were recalled to Hamburg by wireless. The third consignment was shipped on the steamer "President Lincoln," according to advices the company received from the manufacturers in Germany, but it was later learned that the steamship arrived in New York without bringing the carbons.

Disappointed in not receiving any of the large importations expected by the company, the Kiewert people distributed the supply on hand with equal impartiality, and issued a statement to their customers to the effect that further orders would be filled as soon as any delivery of the three consignments are made by the steamship companies.

The Cash Value of Good Architecture

The Exhibitor Who Builds a Beautiful Theatre Will Be Repaid in Worth-While Patronage—The Success of the Wilmette Theatre Is a Striking Proof of the Fact That "It Pays to Build Artistically"

WITH film drama established on a permanent footing there has come a realization of the importance of presenting it amid proper surroundings. In the case of the most artistic productions the theatre must be on a par with their quality.

A beautiful piece of statuary or a wonderful painting executed by an old master would hardly find its best setting in the ballyhoo tent of a circus. To be sure the exhibition would draw a crowd, but it is pretty safe to assume that the throng would not comprise those who appreciate the artistry of the masterpieces.

It is the same way with picture patrons. Those who see only the best films and could not be induced to enter a theatre where the highest representations of the motion picture art were not shown cannot be expected to become patrons of fourth and fifth-rate houses.

Now that people of education and critical knowledge of drama and acting have become patrons of motion pictures, the theatres catering to this class must maintain a high standard in advertising, management, interior decoration and architecture.

This question of architecture is a vital one, not so much in respect to its material side as in its exterior decorative effects. The practical part, the comfortable seating of patrons, fire exits, etc., are already understood, as evidenced on every hand.

But it's the artistic side of the subject we have to deal with now. For a house exhibiting pictures of exceptional merit the people expected to come and see them are influenced by the outside appearance of the theatre. Freakish achitecture repels them; but good architecture, pleasing to a cultivated eye, will decide at once in favor of the theatre.

Generally speaking, a theatre front designed in simple, dignified style has greater drawing power for the exclusive picture-goers of a community.

Indeed, in some cases, like that of the Village Theatre, in Wilmette, Ill., a suburb fifteen miles out of Chicago, lines of classic severity constitute the architectural magnet for this class of patronage. A glance at the accompanying illustrations will indicate what is meant.

Here is one of the most successful motion picture houses in the country, considering that the population of the town is not more than about eight thousand. It ranks with the handsomest theatres in the country, and the designer has demonstrated what can be done by a strict adherence to the principles of good taste and sound architectural lines.

The effect is most striking; there is absolutely nothing to offend the keenest artistic sensibilities. The man or woman of culture who had never seen a motion picture would feel on viewing the Village Theatre for the first time that anything shown in such a building must be worth seeing, and would straightway walk in, bent on discovery.

As they passed through the lobby to the box office the visitors would notice on the terra cotta walls to the right, present and coming programs announced in a manner in keeping.

The absence of flaming posters and knock-you-in-the-eye advertising features are conspicuous by their absence.

The conventional electrical sign is not in use at the Wilmette Theatre. Instead, there is a leaded glass sign five feet in diameter which gives the date of the settlement in the village by the Frenchman Ouilmette, with the date of the erection of the theatre. In the center is the portrait of a French trapper, representing the character of Ouilmette.

A CLOSER VIEW OF THE WILMETTE, WHERE THE OLD LOBBY DISPLAY IS UNKNOWN

The theatre has a seating capacity of six hundred, with four wide aisles, all of which are in cork tile, noiseless and non-slipping. The seating is in upholstered leather, both back and seat, with thirty-two inches between chairs, giving ample space. A Kimball organ and grand piano have been installed. The lighting system is unique, inasmuch as its reflector lights, the Baily-Cove, dispense with the hanging basket effect of the ordinary indirect lighting system. A Superior screen and two Simplex motor-driven machines are in use.

The theatre is a model of architectural elegance, and with its interior attractions is an ideal neighborhood house, drawing upon the cream of the best patronage.

IVAN FILM DRAWS CROWDS

The Grand Theatre, Grand and Chrystie streets, New York, with a 2,000 seating capacity, opened for the season as a high-class photoplay house, on Friday evening, August 28, with the "Sins of the Parents," for a ten days' engagement, featuring Mme. Sarah Adler with a star cast.

For this occasion the entire house was decorated. A special box was prepared in honor of Mme. Sarah Adler, who witnessed the first performance, and saw herself in the role of Laura Henderson.

The "Sins of the Parents" is the record breaker in the history of the Grand Theatre. On Sunday from 1 p. m. to 11 p. m., the management announced that they handled 11,240 people that paid admission. The film was made by Ivan Film Productions, Inc.

BIG CHANCE FOR REAL WAR FILMS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Milwaukee, Sept. 2.

There is a big chance for some one to make considerable money in Milwaukee with a picture of the German Army either mobilizing or on the way to the front.

This picture, however, would have to be the genuine article, and could not be faked as there is a very big German population here, hungry for something from the Vaterland. They would resent anything not the real article, and would be quick to discover a fake as many of them are former German officers.

Just such a picture is being widely sought at present by local exhibitors, and the man that has one will have little trouble in placing it.

The interest the Germans are taking in the war is intense and as the local papers, despite protests from the various German societies and individuals, have been unable to give them much German news a picture of this nature would be sure to "pack them" for a number of weeks.

Kansas City Censors Issue Film Report

Censorship Division Passed on 539,000 Feet Between October 1, 1913, and September 1, 1914—Rejected Thirty-two Entire Reels

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 1.

A REPORT has just been made public by the censorship division of the board of public welfare here showing that 539,000 feet of films were reviewed between the dates October 1, 1913, and September 1, 1914. Of that amount, thirty-two entire reels were rejected and 21,455 feet were ordered cut out. Of those totally rejected all were three-reel subjects, with the exception of one two-reel and one six-reel drama.

The censorship division is now working under a recently enacted ordinance by which the censor and a board of appeals—none of the members of which are exhibitors—are given absolute power. No films passed entirely by the national board are viewed by the local censor unless a complaint is lodged. However, films in which cut-outs were ordered by that board or films that were not presented before it must be viewed by the local workers. No films passed by the national body have been rejected here.

The members of the appeal board serve without pay and are three in number. The chairman is Judge H. C. McDougal, former city counselor; Battle McArdle, an attorney, and Trigg A. Long, an insurance man. They are given the power to revoke a theatre's licence in case the censor's orders are violated several times.

Film Firm At Odds With Chicago Censors

"Chimney Sweeps," Picture Playhouse Feature, Disapproved by Them, Though National Board and Other Censors Passed It

"THE Chimney Sweeps," a Pasquali feature, controlled by the Picture Playhouse Film Company in this country, has struck a snag in the Chicago Municipal Censorship Board, after having passed the National Board and various other state boards, including Pennsylvania, favorably.

As the entire production is based on the illegitimacy of a child, the Chicago board claims that it is not suitable to be seen by the public of that city, and they have declined to deliver a permit to the Picture Playhouse Company unless nine of the subtitles are obliterated which, however, will alter the entire plot of the production.

The Picture Playhouse Company have declined to make these changes, claiming that it will literally cut the "meat" from the film, but the censors contend that in its present state it is not suitable to show, for they claim the moral effect will prove bad, especially upon the minds of the younger class of the motion picture goers.

However, the company propose to bide their time and then demand a special permit, to be allowed to show the picture to all those over twenty-one years of age. Only those titles pertaining to the illegitimacy of the child are the ones over which there is a dispute.

Pictures and Opera Put On at the Academy

One of New York's Oldest Theatres, Now a William Fox House, Under the Management of F. M. McClintic, Extensively Remodeled

THE latest addition to the fast-growing class of motion picture houses which run the highly popular combination of feature pictures and extracts from operas, is the Academy of Music, at Fourteenth street and Irving place, New York City, which opened Monday, August 31, with that variety of entertainment.

Under the able direction of Mr. McClintic, the manager, the theatre has been extensively altered to suit the requirements of a motion picture house. It seats approximately 2,700. A twenty-piece orchestra, led by George F. Briegel, and a Moeller pipe organ, played by H. Leslie Goss, will furnish the music for the house. Two Simplex machines have been installed.

The program of the first week featured the De Luxe six-reel picture, "Sealed Orders," and was followed by two comedies and two operatic recitals by the National Grand Opera Company.

William Fox is the financier of the proposition and F. M. McClintic the manager of the house, which is equipped with all the latest motion picture theatre accessories. The lighting effects of the stage are very ingeniously devised.

The Academy of Music is one of New York's oldest theatres, having been opened over half a century ago. Its entrance into the circle of motion picture theatres is only another sign of the rapid growth of this industry.

COOL WEATHER REVIVES CINCINNATI THEATRES

Optimism Now Discernible in Exchanges and Theatres and Increased Business is Once More the Rule—McMahan and Jackson Win Decision Which Union Operators Claim as Their Victory Young Woman Exhibitor Takes Unique Method of Advertising Her Theatre

Special to The Motion Picture News

Cincinnati, Sept. 3.

SINCE the evening temperature has fallen to a normal degree of coolness the motion picture business in and about Cincinnati has shown a corresponding stimulation.

This activity has been reflected as well in the local film exchanges and a decided optimistic spirit, as the result, has replaced the sourness and complaints of a month ago.

Many theatres in the outlying districts which depended upon small neighborhoods for patronage and were forced to close down during the heated term, have been newly clothed at the hands of painters and decorators internally and externally, and now present smiling and attractive fronts, ready, with open arms, to again receive the prodigal "movie" fan.

Increased business during the past several weeks has been the rule in the downtown districts.

A number of the legitimate houses which, for a time during the summer, were showing motion pictures, are now actively engaged in presenting their regular programs. This fact only serves to reduce competition, but the real reason for the boom in business is the weather.

"Neptune's Daughter" Remains

The Annette Kellermann photoplay "Neptune's Daughter" has been playing to capacity houses at Keith's during the past week, so that it will play another week's engagement. The Lyric will close its motion picture season this week with Lyman H. Howe's motion pictures of the Panama Canal.

W. R. Sheehan, of New York, representing the William Fox motion picture interests was in Cincinnati recently. He made tentative arrangements to open a branch of the Box Office Attraction Company here to cover southern Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky with its film exchange.

Mr. Sheehan while here gave out an interesting interview regarding European war films. Expectations of exhibitors and patrons of motion picture theatres that animated pictures of the war scenes may soon be seen in this country will probably not be realized for some time, he said.

Owing to the strict censorship which has covered all news of activities in the war zone, he says, motion pictures, if any are obtained, will probably not be shown in America until after peace has been established. The military censors are blocking the camera men at every step and where the educational advantages of actual scenes from the front cannot be overestimated, such films will be held, if only for their educational and historical value, but will not be shown to the public until the censors put their O. K. on them.

The Paramount Pictures program will be seen in Cincinnati shortly at the Lubin and the Nordland Plaza theatres.

Ask for New Warner Program

Many inquiries have been received by A. Muller, manager of the Warner's Features Company, regarding the new weekly program of twenty-one reels.

The business of this company in West Virginia has increased to such an extent during the past several weeks that the establishment of a branch exchange office at Charleston is being considered. If this office is opened, H. S. Peed, of the local office, will be placed in charge.

The firm of McMahan & Jackson, operators of the Independent Features Company, of this city, was awarded a judgment of $99 in the Municipal Court, Friday, against A. Niedenthal, of Evanston. The firm claimed to have had a contract with Niedenthal calling for 15 cents a foot for feature films and that while a three-real feature was being run off the first reel caught fire and damaged all three reels.

It was claimed that Niedenthal's operator was a non-union man and that he had been refused a license several days before the fire occurred. McMahan and Jackson sued for $300, but this amount was halved by the Court.

The case was decided on the basis that two of the reels which were in the booth should not have been there. The Court awarded $45 for each of the two films. Only $9 was allowed on the first film, which was slightly damaged, and, in a measure, caused the fire.

Union Operators Jubilant

Union operators in Cincinnati consider the winning of the case by McMahan & Jackson a vindication of the union cause. Exhibitors in the future, they declare, will be more careful about employing non-union operators.

The Pastime Theatre, a motion picture house of Maysville, Ky., was given an unusual amount of free advertising the past week, when the fair proprietress, Miss Anna Belle Ward, a miss of eighteen summers, appeared here, following a woman's championship swimming race of three miles on the Ohio River and challenged the winner to race her any distance between three and five miles.

Miss Ward was an entrant in the race, but a sudden attack of illness prevented her from being a contestant. As soon as the winner completed the course the young Maysville exhibitor was ready, and from her skiff in which she had followed the progress of the race, she issued her challenge.

More publicity for Miss Ward and her theatre will follow this new championship race, which is now being arranged. Immediately after the challenge was issued, Miss Ward's pictures were taken, and she was interviewed by the reporters. The young exhibitor then returned home to look after the evening performance at the Pastime.

A Believer in Publicity

"I believe in publicity," she said. "I found out very early in my career that it does not do for one to hide one's light under a bushel, even if she does happen to be a woman and as such is constitutionally shy. My swimming is one of the very best advertising assets I have."

"LIVE-WIRING" THE WAR

Special to The Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Sept. 2.

The European war and the public's thirst for war news has been put to good use by Manager Harry Graham, of the Butterfly Theatre. Finding that his patrons were flocking to the bulletin boards for the latest flashes from the front, Mr. Graham made arrangements with one of the local papers to keep him supplied with bulletins, in return for which he ran a slide announcing that he was getting his bulletins from this paper and to watch for their extras for the latest war news. As it is impossible to buy the privilege of running advertising slides at the Butterfly, the paper was very glad for the exchange of courtesies.

The bulletins Mr. Graham posted in a conspicuous place in his lobby with the result that the war fans were attracted away from the bulletins where they had been congregating and a great majority of them went into the Butterfly to see the pictures.

The Pass Disease and Its Victims

By Charles B. Taylor

The "Deadhead" Is as Prevalent and Perennial a Pest to the Exhibitor as of Old to the Theatre Manager—Those Who Ask Most Deserve Least—And the Victims of the Disease Are the Exhibitors

"PASSES" is quite an unusual subject, but nevertheless a most important one to countless managers who are daily being "pestered" to death for a pass to their motion picture show.

The telephone bell rings in the manager's office.

"Hello, this is Mr. Blank, advertising solicitor of the Blade. I would like to have six box seats for to-night. Will you leave them in the box-office for me in my name?"

"I am sorry, Mr. Blank, but to-night being Thursday, I expect to have a big house and I cannot turn my patrons who occupy box seats away. I will be glad to let you have seats in any other part of the house, however.

"Oh, never mind, then, we will go somewhere else," is the reply.

Such a thing is getting to be a common occurrence in Buffalo.

THE other day a local advertising man on one of the big local dailies stopped one of the managers and asked him for a book of tickets to his theatre. The book contained 50 tickets, and just because it was a "book," he thought he had better tackle the manager for the whole thing. This man had never done anything for the theatre in the way of publicity except perhaps knocking the theatre, which is a boost from some people, we have been told.

Upon being refused, he threatened to see what he could do about having the write-up on the following Sunday for this theatre cut down, and carrying out his threat, went to the managing editor and told him to run about five lines on the Blenheim Theatre, as the business office was not getting any passes.

The managing editor, being a "prince of a good fellow," who gives everybody a square deal and who is in turn always "taken care of" with all the passes he wants, and could have the whole theatre if he wanted it, told Mr. Advertising Man what his position was and that he was not running the dramatic page, etc., and then some.

BOOKING and passes are two things that are keeping the Buffalo managers busy. Everybody who is anybody seems to think that they have the privilege of free admission to their theatre. The result is that the managers are being pressed more and more for passes. What the ultimate result will be is only conjectural.

Copy boys, elevator boys, make-up men, advertising solicitors, advertising-window men, in fact, every position on the newspaper, policemen, city officials, exchange men, open market bookers, sign painters, "Men Higher Up" and so on and so forth, down through a long list of so-called and would be dignitaries.

The "pass disease" is a terrible thing once it has got the hold on anyone. After you receive the first, you want the second and then the third, and before long you hate to pay for admission. If you have to go down in your jeans for a dime, you have bad dreams all night.

There are some people who are entitled to passes and these are the newspaper men who handle the copy such as city editor, dramatic editor, managing editor, in fact, anyone who helps the publicity in any way in their editorial position for, be it known that an editor is not interested especially in your theatre.

Your ad brings no money to his pocket, but when you present him with a hand full of passes—you notice the result in the write-up you get the next day.

THEN again some managers do not like to be liberal with their passes, even to these men. This is a bad mistake and makes it hard for the press representative to get his copy "across." When a press agent enters the editorial sanctum, the first thing that passes through an editor's mind is "well, how many do I get." Goodnight, and also farewell.

With the growing popularity of motion pictures and the consequent construction of large theatres for exclusive showing of the new art, managers are having just as much trouble as legitimate house managers have.

If there is anybody that a manager of a theatre hates it is a newspaper man, for as a rule the first thing that the latter says is, "May I have two for to-night?"

Nothing but box seats for the entire family will go for some advertising solicitors and they are usually the ones who do not deserve the courtesy. When Buffalo managers are literally "held up" with the threat that if a box of passes is not forthcoming their write-up is going to suffer, in spite of the fact that they are entitled to it, it looks as though some strict rules are going to be laid down in the near future with regard to passes and who shall receive them.

Latest New York Uptown Film House Opens

Adelphi, Owned by A. J. Wolf, J. W. Springer and L. Hamburger, and Costing $100,000, Will Use All Programs

UNDER the management of the Trio Amusement Company, Inc., of which A. J. Wolf, J. W. Springer and L. Hamburger are the stockholders, the Adelphi Theatre, situated at Broadway and Eighty-ninth street, New York City, was opened to the public on Tuesday evening, August 25.

The interior of the theatre is decorated in pearl gray, creating a pretty effect in combination with rose-colored carpets. The theatre has one small balcony comprised of loges, where smoking is permitted. The balcony and orchestra together seat 1,200. The house was built at a cost of approximately $100,000.

The service which the management will use is a selection from all programs. The features will be changed on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and the balance of the program each day. The first program that the house offered consisted of an Essanay drama entitled "Two Men Who Waited," and was followed by "A Fair Rebel," the latest Klaw & Erlanger release.

After a short intermission "The Character Woman," an Eclair subject, was shown, and the World Film Corporation's latest release, "Jess of the Mountain Country," a comedy-drama acted by child players, put an end to the highly successful first night.

The price of admission to the house is ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents in the afternoon, and fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five in the evenings.

NOT WITH RAMO NOW

C. A. Maddox, of Kansas City, Mo., and William Conn, of Minneapolis, Minn., are no longer in the employ of Ramo Films, Inc., and have no connection whatsoever with that company.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

Prince of Wales Makes Appeal for Funds Through Motion Picture Slides—Scheme Broached for Raising Money for Families of Cinema Men Killed in the War—Conditions in Scotland Holding Firm—Channel Islands Feel Scare Without Reason

SLIDES have been sent to all exhibitors in England for the purpose of appealing to the public for contributions to a national relief fund. A letter as follows accompanied the slides:

"H.R.H. Prince of Wales having approached the three branches of the trade with the suggestion that an appeal for funds should be made on the screens of all the cinema theatres in the kingdom, it was agreed at a joint conference of the trade to raise a fund to provide the necessary slides.

"The exhibitors' contribution will be the exhibition of the slides sent herewith, which it is hoped you will show continuously while the fund is in existence."

The slide contains this appeal from the Prince of Wales:

"At such a moment we all stand together and it is to the heart of the British people that I confidently make this most urgent appeal."

Directions then follow for forwarding the money, which is to be sent to Buckingham Palace. The letters do not have to be stamped, as the government decided to frank all such communications without any question.

This action of the Prince of Wales suggested to the "Bioscope" a plan for helping the families of those in the industry whom hostilities may have thrown out of employment.

The idea is not to make a direct appeal to the trade for money. On the other hand, exhibitors are asked to organize special entertainments at which films are loaned for the occasion by manufacturers and exchange men. The proceeds will be devoted to a fund distributed under the supervision of the organizing committee.

With the exception of one motion picture house, all the film theatres in Brussels are closed, according to a dispatch in a London daily.

Eclair Making Deliveries

It is announced by the Eclair Company, Limited, that releases ordered up to and including September 24 will be delivered. The British house organ of the company, the "Eclair Journal," will not be discontinued, but on the other hand, will contain a number of interesting views of the seat of war from special correspondents sent out by the concern. In addition to this special films interesting the British public in particular will be released from time to time.

So far, the film trade in Scotland has not been materially affected by the war. The public still attends the theatres, drawn by pictures of timely interest, such as the regular troops and territorials in mobilization, and numerous navy subjects. The pictures were instrumental in arousing the most enthusiastic patriotism of the people.

Scotland Conditions Not Bad

In some of the districts far removed from the industrial centers, where exhibitors could not obtain timely films readily, the theatres were not able to benefit by the enthusiasm generated by war subjects.

Then, again, in places like Stirling, Wick, Dunfermline and Arbroath, the military authorities commandeered the motion picture houses for the quartering of the mobilized territorial troops. However, this action of expediency will not result in the permanent closing of the halls, and the proprietors look forward to their being released for business purposes when the authorities locate the soldiers in regular camps.

The same calm prevails in other Scottish cities. Business in Glasgow and its environs, Edinburgh, Dundee, Aberdeen and Inverness are now at normal, following the first excitement of the declaration of hostilities. The demand for topical subjects of a war nature has been filled in practically every instance.

Appeal for Public Patronage

The "Bioscope," one of the foremost British trade journals, whose opinions carry weight with the English exhibitor, has issued a one-page supplement appealing to the general public for support of the motion picture industry during the grave crisis abroad.

The sheet, neatly printed in blue with a red border and containing a British flag in the middle, has been printed with the idea of giving the theatre manager something effective to catch the attention of pedestrians. The placard is designed for pasting on poster frames on the sidewalks or in the lobbies.

The appeal points out the hardships from unemployment confronting the 150,000 men and women engaged in the industry throughout the British Isles, if there is any degree of falling off in patronage.

The "Bioscope" hopes that the public will, whenever possible, support motion picture theatres during the critical period of the nation.

A British trade paper has begun the publication of an honor list, consisting of men connected with the film industry who have enlisted for the war in either the British, French or Russian armies.

Unnecessary Scare in Channel Islands

Because of the mobilization of the militia in the islands of Guernsey and Jersey and the falling off of holiday visitors, the motion picture theatres have experienced considerable lack of attendance. The war scare in the channel islands is entirely unnecessary, it is reported, as communication with the mainland has not been interrupted, the mailboats arriving daily from Southampton.

It was feared, too, that the local authorities in Jersey might refuse to renew the license of the theatres as they expired, but the newspapers in the island have pointed out the injustice of such a proceeding, as it would result in adding just so many more to the army of unemployed. The men who are now patronizing the innocent amusements afforded by the motion picture theatres would also probably haunt the saloons and cafes.

The authorities saw at once the reasonableness of the request made by the newspapers, and naturally wanted to take action for the best interests of the community. So far, there has been no interference.

TAKING ADVANTAGE OF THE WAR

Special to The Motion Picture News

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 3.

The management of the Colonial Theatre of this city is displaying considerable enterprise in connection with the European war. Even though films of the war are not available as yet for this theatre, the manager, knowing that the public is "eating up" everything in connection with the war, has set aside part of the space on his billboards in front of his theatre, on which he pastes the telegraph pages of the newspapers as fast as they appear on the streets, giving the latest details of the war.

Folks stop to look over these dispatches, attracted by the scare heads evolved by the editors, and, incidentally, they notice the announcements of the films being shown inside.

The Colonial is on Main street, so that the lobby display is seen by thousands, and the device is catching many patrons.

STAR BLACKWELL IN DAVIS DRAMA

For their second release, the Favorite Players Film Company have secured the rights to make a photo dramatization of Richard Harding Davis' famous story, "The Man Who Could Not Lose," featuring Carlyle

CARLYLE BLACKWELL

Blackwell in the leading role, scenario by Robert A. Dillon.

This is in keeping with the policy of the above-mentioned company to produce only the works of well-known authors for their productions.

DAVID H. THOMPSON BACK IN FILMS

Announcement is made by the Thanhouser Film Corporation that David H. Thompson is to appear in pictures again. A year ago, the Thanhouser Company decided that it needed some one to handle its extra people and cast, so Dave was selected.

The call of the motion picture was too great for Dave, so he tutored Frank Grimmer, an assistant director, and when the time was ripe, Frank "stepped in" and Dave "stepped out."

Dave will be remembered for his work in "Aurora Floyd," "Kathleen, the Irish Rose," "Their Golden Wedding," "The Musician's Daughter," and other Thanhouser productions.

TERRY WILL OPEN SOON

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 3.

The Ellen Terry Theatre will open in a few weeks. John R. Oshei, manager of the Teck Theatre, and a large stockholder in the Ellen Terry, announces that an outside man will managed this theatre, but has not disclosed the new manager's name.

National Board Makes Neutrality Move

Asks Exhibitors to Run Captions Before War Films, Requesting Spectators to Refrain from Making Any Sympathetic Demonstration

THE importance of the sentiment expressed in the proclamation of President Wilson to the effect that the people of this country should refrain from taking sides in the European war, for the purpose of avoiding any unnecessary expression of feeling likely to be engendered by the sympathies of our diversified population, was recognized by the film industry.

The National Board of Censorship saw in the appeal an opportunity for exhibitors throughout the country to perform a service in the interest of local peace and national dignity. The organization has issued a request to exhibitors to run a caption before war films asking audiences to refrain from uttering any partisan expressions.

The letter from the board follows:

"Gentlemen: August 27.

"The preservation of a spirit of absolute neutrality on the part of the American people, as suggested by President Wilson in his recent proclamation, is a matter so vitally important that the National Board of Censorship makes the following suggestion:

"When you are producing pictures containing war scenes, please precede the actual pictures with about five feet of caption asking the audience kindly to refrain from any expressions of partisanship as the pictures are shown. You will strengthen such an announcement very materially by adding that this request is directly in line with the policy of President Wilson.

"We further suggest that scenes which tend to arouse race hatred because of their realism and horrible detail be treated in a restrained manner.

"Thank you.

"Very truly yours,

"NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP OF MOTION PICTURES"

Mr. Binder sent a copy of the letter to President Wilson and received this reply:

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

Aug. 28th, 1914.

My Dear Mr. Binder: I have your letter of August 27th, and thank you very much for your courtesy in calling my attention to the enclosures. I shall be glad to bring it to the President's attention as you suggest.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) J. P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

Los Angeles Houses Pledge to Raise Prices

Theatres Showing First and Second Runs of Paramount Service Must Charge Ten Cents for Front Seats

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Aug. 24.

TWO very important film contracts have been made in the past week by Thomas L. Tally, owner of the Tally Broadway, who recently secured Los Angeles rights for the entire program of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. The Paramount pictures will form the program for three of the principal film houses for the next year.

Mr. Tally is to have choice of the service for his house, and will run each picture one week. The other first-run program will be shown at Miller's Theatre, which has heretofore been using seven reels of General and Eclectic pictures.

Frank Hawkins, of the Alhambra, where the Universal program has been used since the opening of the house more than a year ago, has contracted for the first choice of pictures for second-week projection.

The contracts became effective for the Alhambra, August 24, when "The Man On the Box," with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, will be shown, following a week's run at the Tally, and at Miller's, August 31.

The three theatre managers will co-operate in advertising the pictures, and will receive material help from the Paramount people. It is planned to use 150 24-sheet stands, 50 of which are paid for by the manufacturer.

The names of the houses and date lithos will be changed daily from the first to the second-run houses. United newspaper advertising will be used and the managers are planning to furnish matter for page and half-page copy.

One feature of the contracts is the stipulation regarding admission prices. Each theatre, whether first or second-week run, must charge ten cents for seats in the front section of the theatres, twenty cents for rear seats, and if the theatre has loges, the prices for these has been stipulated to be thirty cents.

The Alhambra has been a five-cent house and the prices here will be raised to ten and twenty cents. Miller's Theatre has heretofore charged ten and fifteen cents, which will hereafter charge ten and twenty. Later Mr. Miller anticipates loges will be added. The Miller's Theatre will add an orchestra in addition to pipe-organ concerts.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "The Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "The Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

WAR NEWS DRAWS PATRONS

IF a crowd is seen gathered in front of a Cleveland downtown building these days, it's a safe bet that they are gathered about one of the motion picture houses where a pictorial news service similar to that furnished by the Elliot company, of New York, is used

The psychological effect of the European war has been to create a demand for actual battle scenes and for pictures illustrating foreign army life. Several Cleveland managers, especially in the downtown district, have been quick to observe the business-getting possibilities latent in this exhibition of human weakness.

The Dreamland and the Bijou are good examples of theatres which are showing increased box-office receipts at a small expense. On either side of the lobby of these theatres are poster boards bearing prints from a pictorial bureau.

Prominently displayed, they attract the eye of a passer-by, eager for some authentic, tangible information of the war. He stops and looks.

From the war photos, his observing eye strays to the posters announcing the day's attraction at the theatre. If the posters appear attractive, and especially if they deal with a military plot (leave that to the manager) there is every chance that he will enter.

Result—one more perfectly good admission price. And this is repeated many times.

AN OASIS IN THE THEATRE

MANAGER AL SARDINO, of the Savoy Theatre, South Warren street, Syracuse, N. Y., always scheming how to make things more comfortable, pleasing and inviting to his patrons, has hit upon something popular and practical, especially for the hot weather.

As you enter the theatre your attention is attracted immediately to the sound of bubbling water which you find spouting from a marble fountain located just midway between the two aisles and directly behind the last row of seats.

The fountain being of the continuous flow type and not requiring cups, makes it at once sanitary and inviting. To see the number of people who use it both upon entering and leaving the theatre is sufficient indication that its installation is thoroughly appreciated.

HIS PRICES DIDN'T MELT

Moore's Garden Theatre, which is and has always been the highest priced motion picture house in Washington, ten to twenty-five cents, has not found it necessary to drop its prices during the summer months and the attendance has not dropped either.

"I never have done such business in my career before at this time," said Mr. Moore. "I lay it to the high-class pictures that I am showing, through which I have been able to appeal to educational, professional, and official circles. The fact that I have been in a position to give private and special performances of films of national, international or of historic significance before President Wilson, congressional men, cabinet members and other officers has served to introduce the motion picture theatre to many who had shunned it heretofore.

"Another cause of the exceptional popularity of the Garden at this particular time has been the announcement of a Mary Pickford picture every day. I have made arrangements whereby all re-issues of Miss Pickford's early photoplays will come to the Garden first. Most important of all, the masterpieces of this charming little actress from the Famous Players studio will make their initial appearance in Washington at this theatre. The latest one of these is 'The Eagle's Mate,' which will be an attraction shortly."

Tom Moore is about the most progressive man in the business. He is into the future before the future comes. He was the first to venture into the big theatre proposition with big features and high prices. He is an indefatigable worker, who counts not time, labor, nor expense to accomplish his aim.

NO "ICED AIR" FOR HIM

H. M. NEWSOME, owner and operator of the Trianon, the Amuse-u and the Princess Theatres in Birmingham, Ala., does not believe in the merits of the new ventilation and cooling scheme known as iced air.

With the advent of the hot weather Mr. Newsome has paid particular attention to the cooling and refreshing of the air in his theatres and he states that the best thing in his estimation is enough draw-fans to completely change the air in the theatre every ten or fifteen minutes. Mr. Newsome has just installed a new draw-fan in the rear of his big theatre, the Trianon, near the stage, which throws the air out into the alley behind the house. He has already several big fans working in the ceiling of this big theatre, but the room was so big that these fans did not draw the foul air directly off the audience fast enough.

With these large draw fans in operation, there is a complete change of new and fresh air in the Trianon every ten or fifteen minutes and while this air is just pulled in from the outside and is not cooled in any way before it strikes the audience, it is fresh enough to keep the audience cool and comfortable. "It is foul and bad air that makes an audience hot," he states.

AN ECLIPSE OF THE SUN

THE Angelich Brothers, who operate the Sun Theatre at 13 North Broadway, St. Louis, and the Rainbow Theatre at 107 North Broadway, have hit upon a good scheme for the summer months. It has always been their custom to close one of the theatres for the hot season, and this year they closed the Sun, and by an ingenious front which has been made to fit the lobby, the theatre is turned into a candy shop, which is also operated by the same firm, and to stimulate business at the Rainbow, an admission ticket is given with each purchase of sweetmeats. As soon as the weather gets cooler the false front will be taken from the lobby.

COURTESY AN ASSET

THAT the personal equation plays a large part in the success of the motion picture house is the belief of Frank J. Chadwick, manager of the Olympia Theatre at 953-55 Elizabeth avenue, Elizabeth, N. J. Mr. Chadwick believes that a pleasant "Howdy" or "Good Afternoon" is worth dollars and cents to the motion picture man, and he says his experience has proved it.

During performances Mr. Chadwick is always to be found in the foyer of his theatre where he extends a cheery greeting to every one who comes in. He talks politics with the men, chats neighborhood gossip with the women, and "kids" the youngsters. As a result his audiences know him and he knows his audiences, and mutual benefit is derived. He has played to good business all summer.

On warm nights everyone who enters the Olympia Theatre is presented with a fan. These fans were shipped to Mr. Chadwick by a baby food concern free of cost, so the plan costs him nothing, but has been very favorably received.

Every Tuesday copies of "Movies," the official publication of the General Film Company, are distributed in the theatre and Mr. Chadwick says they draw just as many people to his place as a feature picture would. And they are far less expensive.

On the front cover of "Movies" generally appears the photograph of one of the General Film stars, and Mr. Chadwick always tries to book a photoplay in which this star appears.

HIS CHILD IN FILMS

CHARLEY FRANKE, proprietor of the Airdome, Twenty-eighth and Farnam streets, Omaha, has started a fad that is likely to become popular. He has had films 200 feet long taken of his little daughter for the last three years and intends to have a film taken of her once every year. "While it costs more than an ordinary photograph, just think how valuable it will be to her when she is grown up," he said.

The local newspapers have been giving his innovation wide publicity and several of the wealthier class have engaged the services of local motion picture machine men to take short films of their children. Franke showed the picture of his little girl on the screen at his theatre and it made a decided hit.

"I have a 65-ampier machine that insures the distinctness of the pictures, and I choose the pictures that will suit my patrons—pretty dramas, good comedies, educational and scenic pictures. I take plenty of time to pick out my pictures," said Mr. Franke.

LAYS STRESS ON VENTILATION

"THE importance of proper ventilation in the conduct of a successful motion picture theatre is something too many managers overlook," says David Levinson, secretary and general director of the Novelty Amusement Company in a large American city.

"When I started in the business I first used a disinfectant which was then being tried out in a number of houses as a substitute for natural ventilation. Artificial means, however, were soon discarded. After making a few changes in the house and by opening the theatre every morning and keeping it open to within a short time of the beginning of the day's program the problem was successfully solved. Any disagreeable odor in a house will certainly prove harmful and more effectively than probably any other cause drive away the very class of patron most desired by a first-class theatre."

To combat rowdyism of the mischievous, and often pernicious small boy, and the admission of persons who are under the influence of liquor are frequently the source of much annoyance to the picture theatre manager. Mr. Levinson early in his career had his share of trouble along this line and the rules which he has evolved through experience have proven highly gratifying and, he claims, have played no small part in bringing success to the Novelty.

"I reserve the right to refuse admission to any person whom I think might prove objectionable to other patrons of the house. I will not sell admission to anyone who has been drinking, for such a person, if allowed inside, might fall asleep or become ill.

"Not so very long ago," he says in recounting an experience he recently had with an intoxicated person, "a man whom I knew by sight as a frequent visitor to the theatre came up to the window and asked for a ticket. I explained to him that I could not admit him to the theatre while he was in his present condition. At first he was insistent and inclined to be angry, but finally I prevailed upon him to go away. The next day he sought me out and thanked me for my action in refusing him admission. Of course, I might have made an enemy of this man, but he was a sensible sort of fellow and, instead, became a friend.

"I have been threatened with a lawsuit because some boys were ejected from the theatre for rowdyism. The price of admission was returned to the boys at the time they were ejected and the threatened suit is causing me no concern. At all hazards I intend to maintain a respectable theatre."

MAKING A "WHITE ELEPHANT" PROFITABLE

T. M. RENNE, manager of the Opera House at Ypsilanti, Mich., has turned into a successful motion picture theatre a house which was an elephant on the hands of the original owners. He has done it all with a pleasant smile and an intelligent catering to the particular patronage which he draws.

The Opera House cost him $9,000. It seats 840. To fill it up nightly at ten cents a seat meant a tidy income. To have it nearly empty meant a loss.

Ypsilanti is a college town. Mr. Renne arranged to get a program of features that would appeal to intellectual people. Once or twice a week he runs a six-reel feature of a high order, no blood and thunder stuff. When he wanted to open up on Sundays he got a classic—"Joan of Arc," to name the picture. He gave a free matinee for school children. He invited the city officials in. He petitioned the council. The city fathers said if he would run religious, historical or educational pictures on Sundays he might operate the house on Sunday. They were mighty pleased.

Mr. Renne depends on his lobby display and word of mouth of his patrons to fill the house. He has a 60-foot lobby and he is liberal with the pictures and the posters. He has tried the local papers for advertising purposes, but says he does not see results. If he could get satisfactory rates with Detroit papers which circulate largely in Ypsilanti he would use them, but their rates are high.

Mr. Renne has the color question to meet in Ypsilanti. He insists that negroes, of whom there are a large number in Ypsilanti, take seats in the gallery of his house. Recently suit was brought by Alfred Sanderson, of the Cleary Business College, to force Renne to give him access to the lower floor of the theatre. Prosecuting Attorney John Burke conducted the case for the negro in justice court. General John P. Kirk represented Renne. It was really hoped that a verdict might be given for the negro, that an appeal might be taken to the circuit court and a more authoritative ruling secured, but on two trials the jury disagreed, the first, one for conviction, four for acquittal; the second, two for conviction, four for acquittal. On a third trial the jury acquitted Renne, holding that a theatre manager has a right to say where patrons of his theatre shall sit. Trial was then brought by a second negro, a companion of Sanderson, and a similar verdict secured.

KANSAS CITY WILL HAVE THEATRE DE LUXE

THE Middle West has commenced the erection of the motion picture de luxe—the film-drama house that will compete in equipment and interior decoration with the best of the "legitimate" houses.

The remodeling of the Willis Wood Theatre, Kansas City, for films, commencing several weeks ago, will not be completed until the end of September and will cost in all more than $50,000.

The Willis Wood Theatre was built about ten years ago as Kansas City's finest theatre, in which were to be shown the best theatre productions. It was large, commodious, and handsomely equipped.

Two months ago H. B. Lappe, owner of a string of motion picture houses here, and Hugh Tighe, a wealthy coal and lumber dealer here, entered into a ten-year lease on the theatre with Colonel Willis Wood, its owner. The yearly rental was not made public, but it is understood that the amount is at least $20,000 a year.

Mr. Lappe and Mr. Tighe employed Jackson & McIlvane, architects, to draw up comprehensive remodeling plans, and to co-operate with Mrs. Marie V. Rothermel, who will be the manager, in working them out. Mrs. Rothermel went to Europe and visited Berlin, Paris, and London in her search for new ideas. She already knew the best that New York afforded. Then the remodeling began.

The house is being completely overhauled. A pipe organ that is almost a duplicate of that in the Hotel Astor, in New York, is being installed at a cost of $30,000. Fifteen hundred new seats—the widest and most comfortable that could be obtained—are taking the place of the former seats. They will cost, it is said, $5,000 alone. A comprehensive decorating scheme by which the interior will become ivory, tan and gold, is being worked out by the painters. The terra cotta work in the lobby is being reglazed and the exterior of the house is being gone over with soap and brush to restore the natural color to the brick.

But perhaps the most novel feature of the new theatre will be the stage. It is very deep and wide. The projecting screen will be placed at the extreme back and in front an Italian garden effect will be arranged. Flowering plants, a fountain that will play while the lights are up, all opening on a conservatory stage set on the left—that will be the stage as seen from the pit of the house. In front of the stage, the orchestra pit with the organ keyboard will remain and it is planned to have an orchestra of between fifteen and twenty men.

The boxes, loges and two balconies will remain. An elevator is being installed in the lobby to carry persons to the balcony entrances. In addition, a new lighting, heating and cooling system is being put in throughout.

"In Europe, the little picture house is being driven to the wall," Mrs. Rothermel says. "In Paris, London, and Berlin only the house de luxe is drawing. And they are packed. I was there, of course, before the war scare came up.

"In both this country and abroad, the motion picture house is becoming a theatre. It is a misnomer to call it other than a theatre—its greatest possibilities will never be realized until it has reached the standard of the legitimate playhouse in every respect."

The admission prices have not been announced. But reserved seats will be sold and it is possible that as high as seventy-five, or at least fifty cents, will be charged for certain parts of the house.

The remodeling and reconstruction of the Willis Wood—now in its first stages—is only one manifestation of the wave for better theatre houses that is sweeping over the Middle West. It is true, as exchange men point out, that somewhat more than half of the houses in the Middle West are remodeled store buildings. But, as the exchange men also point out, this percentage gradually is decreasing and better constructed buildings are being used for the exhibition of the film drama.

REGENT, BUFFALO, NEAR COMPLETION

Decorators are putting the finishing touches on the Regent Theatre at the corner of Main and Utica Streets, Buffalo, N. Y., which will open the middle of September, under the supervision of Harold Edel.

ILLINOIS THEATRE PLANNED

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., probably will have a new motion picture theatre within a short time. Plans for the building contemplate a house that will seat 1,000 or 1,500 persons, and to cost between $30,000 and $40,000. The proposition is being boosted by local men who have had experience in the business and who believe Bloomington to be an ideal location for a large picture theatre.

The name of the promoters are withheld for the present, but the Bloomington "Pantagraph," a newspaper, says they can be obtained by communicating with the "Pantagraph."

THEATRE BUILDING HUMS ON THE COAST

THE Turner & Dahnken circuit, which is now the greatest on the Coast, will shortly be strengthened by the addition of several very large houses. The new house at Berkeley, Cal., is rapidly approaching completion and will undoubtedly be ready for occupancy in October.

No effort will be made to put it into commission, however, until it is in perfect shape as a large theatre is already being conducted there. The new house will be one of the finest on the circuit of this firm and will seat almost two thousand persons.

Work is just being commenced on a new theatre for this concern at Watsonville, and another will be erected within the next year at Oakland. Plans are also under consideration for the erection of new houses at both Richmond and Sacramento, where theatres are now maintained.

SCRANTON FIRM LEASES WILKES-BARRE SITE

THE Treon Company, of Scranton, has announced that it has acquired the lease of a valuable site located at the corner of Public Square and South Main street, this city. The site is the most desirable in Wilkes-Barre and a big department store will have to vacate to make room for the new house. Manager Fred W. Hermann, of the Savoy Theatre, will have charge of the erection of the new playhouse. The plans for the new house will be announced in THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS at a later date.

$50,000 THEATRE FOR WILKES-BARRE

THERE has been decided activity in motion picture circles in the Wyoming Valley, Pa., during the last week. Wilkes-Barre is to have a brand new theatre in the central section of the city; another legitimate house goes into the hands of a motion picture amusement company, and several new houses are to be built in nearby towns.

The most important announcement of the week was that of Jacob Theis, an insurance man of this city. Mr. Theis has never been connected with the motion picture industry, other than owning buildings which he rented to exhibitors. He owns the building formerly occupied by the Uno Theatre, South Main street. He has announced that he will erect a $50,000 structure on the site. The new building will be up-to-date in every respect and will be devoted to films.

When interviewed by a MOTION PICTURE NEWS correspondent, Mr. Theis said that architect Henry Maier had completed plans for the theatre. The seating capacity will be one thousand. The building will be sixty feet in depth and thirty-four in width.

One of the features of the structure is that there will not be one step in the entire arrangement. The curtain will be 20x16 feet. The service to be used has not been agreed upon as yet. Joseph Stiles, formerly manager of a local film exchange, will probably be named as manager.

1,400-SEAT HOUSE PROMISED IN ILLINOIS CITY

THE Finn & Heiman Amusement Company, of Chicago, will erect a $150,000 vaudeville and motion picture theatre in Decatur, Ill., during 1915, according to announcement just made. The theatre will seat between 1,200 and 1,400 persons and will be the largest motion picture theatre in Illinois outside Chicago. The decision to erect the new playhouse was made at a meeting in Decatur which was attended by Marcus Heiman, general manager of the F. & H. circuit; Sam Kahl, general booking manager; Sam Harris, special representative of the F. & H. company, and James J. Moran, of Decatur.

BUILDS SECOND THEATRE IN LOS ANGELES

S. STERN, owner of Victoria Theatre at 2570 Pico street, and Starland, 2700 North Broadway, Los Angeles, is now building an eight hundred-seat house at Twentieth street and Central avenue, which will be ready for use about October 1. While he has not fully decided upon the policy of this new theatre, he is of the opinion pictures and one or two acts of vaudeville will be shown for a ten cents admission fee. The new theatre will cost about $25,000.

Alterations and Improvements

The Theatre Fresno, Fresno, Cal., is being remodeled, and will be opened as a motion picture house in September under the management of Fred Voight.

The Royal Theatre, 1715 Carson street, South Side, Pittsburgh, is closed to permit the laying of a new concrete floor. Twelve men were kept constantly at work. The setting of the chairs on the concrete floor was no easy task, but under the direction of Manager J. A. Bonheyr the work was completed in fast time.

The Homewood Theatre, 820 Homewood avenue, Pittsburgh, is being enlarged and improved. The rear part of the building has been torn out and the structure extended back forty feet, which will permit of the installation of sixty additional seats.

The big pipe-organ being installed at the Olympic Theatre in Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, is being rushed to completion as fast as possible, and three shifts of workmen are being used so as to have the organ ready for work in the shortest possible time. The organ that is now working in the theatre will be shipped to the Olympic Theatre at Monessen, Pa.

The Pier Theatre, at Venice, Cal., owned and managed by J. O. Keiser, has just been re-decorated and refurnished throughout, which included the installation of a new motor-driven Simplex projecting machine by D. S. Markowitz, of the Los Angeles agency.

The Varsity Theatre, on San Pablo avenue, Berkeley, Cal., has been enlarged by adding to the rear of the house, and space has been provided for about two hundred and seventy additional seats, making the total seating capacity about seven hundred and fifty. This theatre is conducted by C. L. Mehrten, treasurer of the California Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and enjoys a good patronage.

The Dixon Theatre, in Tarentum, Pa., which was closed for some time in order that repairs and improvements of a wide character could be made, has been opened again. It is a model motion picture house in every respect, and has a number of features not found in some of the larger theatres in Pittsburgh.

Messrs. Stubbs & Paddock, of the Savoy Theatre, San Barnardino, Cal., are having extensive repairs made on their theatre. A new lobby is now being built, and new seats and decorations will be added. When the house is reopened a five-piece orchestra will be used. The prices will be five and ten cents for the regular program, with fifteen and twenty cents admission when features are shown.

The Euclid Theatre, at Ontario, Cal., owned and managed by H. E. Milling, is now in the new building, recently completed. Here there is a seating capacity of 450 seats, all new, new Powers 6-A machines, and an excellent ventilating system. Big feature pictures will be shown two nights each week, the music will be furnished by a four-piece orchestra, and the prices of admission have been permanently fixed at ten and twenty cents.

The Broadway Theatre, on East Main street, Waterbury, Conn., has been closed in order that it may be remodeled. The long lobby has been shortened in order to increase the seating capacity. The interior is also being given a "housecleaning," and the latest improvements are being installed. The Broadway was one of the first picture houses to be opened in Waterbury, and it is as popular to-day as it was the opening week. This is because the management has kept abreast of the time and traveled on the car of progress. The theatre is a feature house. It uses posters exclusively.

Sales and Leases

K. H. Grantham has sold the Academy Theatre at Forty-eighth street and Normandy avenue, Los Angeles, to B. Haun, who recently disposed of his theatre in Montana and went to that city. Mr. Grantham is owner of the Olympus at 2014 East First street.

George K. Robinson, a showman of thirty years' experience, has leased the Lyric motion picture theatre, Fitchburg, Mass., from Cornelius Quinlan, and intends to open with a matinee performance Labor Day.

The Pitt Theatre, Pittsburgh, was sold by the receiver appointed by Judge Thomas J. Ford at public sale on August 31. The sale was requested by J. Frank McHenery, who was named receiver. After taking the theatre over and conducting it for two weeks he stated to the court he deemed it unadvisable to continue it longer, and stated it should be sold. He operated the theatre with feature films and was unable to make any money.

This is one of the best theatres for motion pictures in Pittsburgh, and should make money.

The Imperial Theatre, in Beaver avenue, North Side, Pittsburgh, has changed hands, the new lessee being A. R. Robinson, of the Robinson Realty Company. The old manager, T. R. Eichholtz, continues in his position. Vaudeville will be added to the motion picture program at the theatre when the fall season opens.

Mr. Barton, formerly of the Rex Theatre at Washington, Pa., has sold that theatre and has purchased the Opera House at Monessen, Pa. His new house is a well-equipped theatre of 650 capacity, and will be run as a vaudeville and motion picture house during the coming fall and winter.

The Acropolis Theatre, at 4829 Second avenue, Pittsburgh, has changed hands, Mr. Sexauer having sold the house to Max Steinberger, a business man of Hazelwood, Pa. The new proprietor took charge of the house and will shortly make a number of improvements in the place.

The Lyric Theatre, at Sentinel, Okla., has been purchased by F. C. Rogers and will be rechristened the Nusho.

S. J. Richards, formerly of Albia, Ia., will open a new house in Ottumwa, Kan., soon. It will be known as the Starlight.

C. E. Hoover has leased a building at 112 East Ohio street, North Side, Pittsburgh, and will shortly begin turning the first floor of the building into a motion picture theatre.

Two large lights are to be erected in front of the theatre he owns at New Castle, Pa. He has been given permission by the city fathers and Mr. Ray states he will have the most brilliantly lighted spot in New Castle.

Walter Pruyn and his son, Ferrel, have purchased from Clarence Nuckles the motion picture house which he owned at Marshall, Ill. Mr. Ferrel Pruyn will manage the picture show and plans, besides a number of improvements, to show a first-class run of films.

The Melbourne Theatre, Seattle, Wash., formerly owned by The Melbourne Amusement Company, of which Eugene Levy is the main stockholder, has just been sold to J. S. Shortley, who has been operating theatres in Oregon and Idaho. Mr. Shortley has closed the house for two weeks in order to thoroughly remodel and refit it, changing the ventilating plant and installing a very fine and ornamental marquis and electric sign in the front. The Melbourne has a seating capacity of 650, a large mirror screen, a $5,000 organ, and is located in the busiest district in the city. The alterations completed, the Melbourne will be operated as a ten-cent house with a first-run program, using one big feature every two weeks.

C. W. Joehrendt, of Thomas, Okla., has purchased the Globe motion picture theatre at Monticello, Ill., from Frank F. Miner, and has assumed management of it. Mr. Joehrendt is an experienced motion picture exhibitor and plans a number of improvements in the Monticello house.

I. Bernstein has purchased the Alhambra Theatre on North Main street, Waterbury, Conn. Mr. Bernstein is young in years, but not in moving picture experience, and plans "big things" for his house. He uses the Mutual program and has contracted to exhibit "The Trey o' Hearts," the opening reels of which will be shown the first week of September.

The Alhambra seats about 600 in orchestra and gallery. It has a "fibre" screen and a Powers projecting machine. The lobby is one of the finest in the city, and the advertising display second to none hereabouts.

Harry G. Houghton, who for twelve years has been connected with the Amsterdam, N. Y., office of the New York Telephone Company, in the capacity of salesman, has leased the Star Theatre, in Mechanicsburg, Pa., and will embark in the moving picture business.

The Lyric Theatre, at 134 Main street, Rahway, N. J., which has been under the management of the Messrs. Beers for some time past, has been bought by L. E. Van Dorn, Jr., of New Brunswick, who has a theatre in that city and also one in Hackensack, N. J. It is the intention of the new management to give the public some of the finest things in the way of moving pictures.

Plans are being made for the opening of a new motion picture theatre at Jackson, Ky. It is said that the management of the old Lyric Theatre at Winchester is back of the project. If the new theatre is opened at Jackson it will be the second house devoted to motion pictures in that town.

The Bijou Theatre on North Main street, Kewance, Ill., which has been closed for some time, has been re-opened by N. M. and W. A. McLaughlin who came to Kewanee from Rio. The new proprietors are showing Mutual films.

The Orpheum Theatre of Omaha has started again this season to follow the plan of giving a news picture at the close of its daily vaudeville program.

Cultivating the Newspapers

By Roe S. Eastman

This Manager Did It With a Newspapermen's Matinee, and the Results in Notices in the Editions of the Day More Than Justified His Outlay of Time, Money and Hospitality

FEW motion picture exhibitors in Cincinnati use the newspapers to advertise their pictures. Probably many of them do not believe in publicity, or do not think it is worth the expense.

This by way of foreword to a little story about John F. Royal, who recognizes the efficacy of newspaper advertising.

John F. Royal is the manager of Keith's Theatre, devoted to motion picture and vaudeville. He secured recently the big feature film, "Neptune's Daughter," in which Annette Kellermann appears as the star, through the McMahan & Jackson agency, which has the state rights to the film.

Securing the picture a week in advance of the time at which he was to show it, he conceived the idea that to get advance criticisms published in the Cincinnati newspapers would be the biggest kind of publicity for him. Accordingly he laid his plans.

AN invitation was sent to every newspaper man in the city to attend a special performance at the theatre on a certain afternoon, at a time when Royal knew both morning and afternoon newspaper men would have the opportunity to be his guests.

A little mystery was thrown about the performance when the manager passed the word along to several of the scribes that this was to be an "unexpurgated" performance, especially arranged to allow the newspaper men of Cincinnati an opportunity to get the first peep at the beautiful Annette Kellermann in an absolutely new and bewitching role. This message had its desired effect.

When the time for the performance came around every newspaperman in the city was on hand, ready to be entertained. Royal had dispensed with the regular afternoon performance, the full orchestra was retained to play entrancing operatic airs in the darkened theatre, and Mr. Royal was at the door himself passing out fat cigars to the men as they entered.

Smoking ordinarily is taboo at Keith's, but Royal made it plain that the scribes were his guests, and for this occasion the house was theirs and smoking his Perfectos was the rule. Thus hospitably received, the guests settled themselves comfortably to the enjoyment of a really wonderful picture.

THE success of the manager's plan was strikingly apparent in the papers the next day. Each of the morning papers carried detailed descriptions of the picture, with favorable criticisms and pictures of Miss Kellermann taken from the photoplay.

The afternoon papers were equally generous, and comments on the attraction at Keith's for the following week were made from every standpoint calculated to attract the public.

Among the interesting accounts of the special performance was the following, which appeared in the "Times-Star":

"Had Kaiser Wilhelm, Emperor Nicholas, King Albert, King George and President Poincare strolled into Cincinnati unannounced and held a peace conference there hardly could have been more local newspaper talent on hand than gathered late Tuesday afternoon to see a "movie" show.

"Any lay citizen, acquainted in newspaper circles, who stood near Keith's Theatre at 4:30 p. m., would surely have thought a news happening of international significance was "breaking." First came a "special feature writer," then a city editor, an assistant city editor, a squad of reporters, a managing editor or two, several dramatic editors, a few editorial writers, a special photographer, and an artist, a telegraph 'war' editor, and even a few fleet-footed (?) office boys.

"But not a war cloud broke. The 'towering intellects' were present as the guests of Manager Royal of Keith's, who had arraigned a private performance of 'Neptune's Daughter,' in which Annette Kellermann is shown to advantage.

"The newspaper men were there to give their opinions as to whether she was shown to too much advantage, as some censors have said. After weighing the question expertly, taking into consideration all lines of Annette's art, the scribes decided that not even those prudish censors of war news could object to the picture as it will be shown at the local theatre."

ROYAL has shown himself to be a live wire on many other occasions. He is a former newspaper man of Boston, and measures his success by the publicity he has obtained through similar advertising stunts. During the summer when the regular vaudeville season was over, he converted his lobby into a cool and inviting bower.

Everything was painted white, and trellis work was placed along the entrance with trailing green vines creeping over the arbor. A cooling system had been installed and one of the big pipes was placed alongside the ticket-selling booth, in the center of the improvised arbor, so that patrons might feel the cool blasts of air as they approached the window.

Neat signs announced that the temperature inside the house was 20 degrees cooler than on the street. A big clock above the booth indicated the time for the beginning of each performance.

Attendants and ushers were garbed in white and the whole atmosphere was one of inviting coolness and comfort. Even outside the lobby, hanging from the edges of the canopied entrance, were great baskets of green ferns. The theatre actually seemed an oasis of mountain coolness in the midst of the sizzling heat of the city streets.

FOUR- AND SIX-REELERS TAKE IN TRENTON

Special to The Motion Picture News

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 2.

State Street Theatre, the largest motion picture house in the city, has been most fortunate this season in making its selections of four- and six-reel subjects. "The Line-Up at Police Headquarters" and "Through Dante's Flames" proved big drawing cards. The Jack London picture, "John Barleycorn," and "The Little Gray Lady" were the attraction this week and scored well.

The State Street Theatre will enter the market for the best four-, five- or six-reel subjects for three-day runs. The booking of the pictures will be made direct by Milton Hirschfeld, of the Amalgamated Vaudeville Company Agency, Columbia Theatre Building, New York City.

PAWLEYS FORM NEW FIRM

Special to The Motion Picture News

Asbury Park, N. J., Sept. 3.

Three Asbury Park men, Francis A. Pawley, Bernard S. Pawley and Raymond Pawley, are the incorporators of a new $125,000 corporation which was granted a certificate recently at the office of Secretary of State David S. Creater in Trenton.

The new company, the Paramount Finance Company, is organized to build and operate theatres. It is at present interested in the operation of the Paramount Theatre, Newark, described as the most beautiful motion picture playhouse in the state.

WAR FILMS DOUBLE PITTSBURGH RECEIPTS

Special to The Motion Picture News

Pittsburgh, Sept. 3.

Mayer Silverman, of the Liberty Film Renting Company, has just received a war film said to be authentic views of the present great war in Europe. Good paper has been prepared for it and it should coin money in this section.

The Columbia Theatre, in Fifth avenue, ran a war picture last week and filled their house to the doors all day long. It was not a picture of the present war, but it made a hit in this city and a record-breaking day in the receipts was reported.

The Downtown Cameraphone Theatre, in Fifth avenue, also had a war picture of last week, and it made the receipts of the house almost double for the day's business. These two theatres are wide awake to the demands of their patrons and are trying to secure other pictures of wars regardless of where they have been taken.

$100,000 ST. LOUIS THEATRE OPENS

Special to The Motion Picture News

St. Louis, Sept. 2.

The new $100,000 Lindell Theatre, Grand avenue and Hebert street, opened recently for motion picture performances. Fifty Boy Scouts from Bryan Hill School paraded before the opening and Mayor Henry W. Kiel spoke.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 2,000 persons. It has a modern cooling system for summer and a heating and ventilating plant. It is a few blocks from the old Lindell Park and adjoins the old Lindell tract.

It is owned by the Great Northern Amusement Company. Officers of the company are: J. M. Eberling, president; F. W. Linn, vice-president; Herman Hannibal, secretary, and Dr. D. A. Thompson, treasurer. The officers with Gustav Hartkopf and Walter A. Ehrler constitute the Board of Directors. The theatre is under the management of Arthur W. Smith.

WILL SCREEN ORIGINAL LOCALE

A feature of the realism which the California Motion Picture Corporation has incorporated in its film dramatization of Bret Harte's "Salomy Jane" will be a rejuvenation of Hang Town, a typical early mining camp of the Far West.

The settlement in the '40s and the '50s teemed with all the outlawry, that called the celebrated vigilantes into existence. Under more modern nomenclature Hang Town has become Placerville.

Bosworth Ready With New London Film

"AN Odyssey of the North," a six-reel feature production by Bosworth, Inc., taken from Jack London's story, is to be released September 3. This is one of a collection of stories written by Mr. London called "The Son of the Wolf."

"Naass" and "Unga"—the last of the descendants of two white men, shipwrecked at an Eskimo village—on the day of their wedding are rudely separated. Unga is stolen by Axel Gunderson, a sea captain.

Remembering only the appeal in the eyes of his sweetheart, Naass starts out in search of her, follows the pair as best he can from city to city until a clue leads to the sealing grounds. Here he is captured by Russians in waters forbidden to sealers and sent to Siberia.

Undaunted, he escapes from the salt mines, traces his bride after innumerable hardships through Alaska to San Francisco. There he learns that Axel and Unga left the day before for the Klondike.

With a bait with which to trap Axel in the shape of a map leading to a wonderful mine in the unknown mountains of the interior of that country given him by a dying prospector; he starts out.

At Dawson the long search is ended. He overtakes the pair but they do not remember him and he easily persuades them to go with him in search of the mine. Then he destroys the caches for the return trip, kills the dogs, and watches with the exultation of the just avenger Axel's death from starvation and frost. Then when death is very near himself and Unga, he reveals his identity.

Studios of Favorite Players Inspected

Fifteen Motor from Los Angeles to Edendale, Guests of Carlyle Blackwell, Designer of the Company's Plant

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Aug. 31.

A PARTY of fifteen guests inspected the studios of the Favorite Players Film Company, which were designed by Carlyle Blackwell and constructed under his personal supervision.

The new studios at Edendale consist of a spacious building that will contain every known device for turning out the best pictures possible. The factory building is one hundred feet wide by sixty feet deep, two stories high, and the entire construction is of brick and concrete, making it absolutely fireproof.

One million feet of reel a week is the capacity of this factory.

The interior of the studios are forty feet high and are almost enclosed by plain plate glass. The dressing rooms, etc., are along the side of the studio. A tank twenty-five feet wide is constructed in the floor for water and trap scenes. The very latest electrical devices for electric lighting have been installed.

The studios met with the highest praise from Mr. Blackwell's guests, and after completing their inspection, the party motored back to Los Angeles, where a tasteful luncheon was served.

How Exhibitors Advertise

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING: WHAT IT CAN DO

THE Alhambra Theatre, Seattle, is about three blocks out of the regular trend of travel. It is a "legitimate" house that has been a photoplay house for two years, has a seating capacity of about 1,350. The theatre is not up to date in appointments, and has no organ, only a piano to accompany the pictures. It is a ten-cent house running Universal program and changing twice a week, running five reels at each change. There are six other big photoplay houses in the downtown district, five of which are much nicer than the Alhambra.

Now, all of this explanation is given in order to show what the managers are up against. They decided to run the serial, "The Trey o' Hearts," and immediately made plans for extensive advertising. They figured it out this way:

"We want the greatest possible number of people to see the first instalment, we will put on a good comedy, another drama, and 'The Animated Weekly,' along with it. That, with a musical number by a male instrumental trio will make a 'bang up' show and they will come back. We will get them 'going' on the serial, and the subsequent numbers will be eagerly awaited."

They picked out the Seattle "Daily and Sunday Times," the evening paper with the largest circulation, which carries most of the local photoplay as well as mercantile space, and concentrated all their space in it.

Thursday night they ran five four-inch single-column ads, scattered through the paper. These ads consisted of a "cut" of a trey of hearts with such copy as, "What am I?" "Good to eat—no," over each cut.

Friday this was repeated with different copy over the cuts. Saturday the same, with "I'll tell you to-morrow, look at this paper then," over the cuts. Sunday they ran a six-reel ad on the film page, saying, "The Trey o' Hearts," a new serial, would have its Seattle showing Monday. Monday night the big ad came out, a full page or seven columns by twenty-two inches, 154 inches.

Now, this campaign cost about $260.00. Monday night at 7:10 o'clock the theatre was full and people were beginning to stand in the foyer. By 8 o'clock there was a big crowd waiting to gain admission.

Many people were turned away, but with the intention of returning Tuesday. Tuesday's matinee business was just double the regular Tuesday average and Tuesday night's business was capacity and ran ahead of Monday night. About 4,000 people were handled Monday night and about 6,500 Tuesday.

Did it pay? All the regular patrons were there and about 4,500 more and all day Wednesday yet to go.

Local exhibitors watched the result closely and classed it as a great big howling success.

The "Trey o' Hearts" is certainly being talked of all over this city, and it is a safe bet that the business of the last four days of the week (that is, after the next change of bill) will be far ahead of the average four days' business, showing that a great many new patrons were gained by the house that did not wait for the second instalment, but came back on the next change of program. The "Times" gave them a two-column story Sunday on the strength of the full page of Monday.

AFTER ADVERTISING—WHAT ?

GETTING people into a motion picture theatre through advertising in any of its forms—newspaper or lobby display—is one thing, and, according to many, it is the big thing.

But, after all, it is the impression created by the appearance of the theatre inside, by the pictures, the courtesy of the attaches, the air, the seats and their arrangement, that keeps folks coming, that makes them feel that, when they have a few minutes to spare again, they will drop in at the same place.

In other words, the follow-up work of the management must be watched as closely as the initial advertising that starts folks coming.

For a patron to receive such treatment, or to see such pictures or hear such music that he determines not to come again, is money wasted.

All the time and effort that have been spent in getting that patron into the theatre are not only wasted, but the patron, going away in that frame of mind, is a distinct drawback to the house.

He may take occasion to say something discrediting the house, and do much damage to business, so it is up to the managers, after they have fixed up their lobbies, to see that things inside are such that no one can go away feeling that the promise given by newspaper or other advertising has not been carried out.

In other words, managers who spend much time and money in arranging lobby displays should see that everything about the theatre is carried out on the same scale—that there is no let-down in the effort to please once the patron has purchased a ticket and gone inside.

If a patron sees brass-mounted frames, with handsome cards and pictures in the lobby, with plants, uniformed attaches and handsome decorations, and goes inside to find slovenly ushers, mediocre pictures, bad music, poor air and uncomfortable seats, he has a right to feel aggrieved, or at least disillusioned. Things have not been carried out on the same scale that the lobby promised.

On the other hand, if a patron, attracted by the outward appearance of a theatre, finds things on the inside just as bright and attractive as in the lobby, he is in a fair way to come again.

Then the exhibitor has a fine opportunity, by announcing coming attractions, to give the patron something to think of in the way of an extra inducement to come again.

The advance announcements must be brief and clear, and must not occupy too much time in the showing. Just a minute or two while the audience is changed at the close of a picture is plenty, or between shows.

The value of the screen for making announcements is far and away ahead of the lobby, for the screen catches the attention of the people who are already patrons, and who are likely to come again if something can be promised to interest them.

Building up a steady patronage by keeping people coming who once venture into a theatre is the real secret of the success of the picture business.

ADVERTISING METHODS IN WASHINGTON

THERE was a time when the screen formed a medium for local advertising, and it was most effective. In Washington this has been reduced to a minimum, but there is a form of advertisement that is in use at some of the picture parks that is both neat and attractive. This is the illuminated electric signs, which are employed at both Central and Savoy Parks. These are given a place not far from the screen, neatly constructed, and not gaudy in coloring.

Speaking to the managers about these, they both voiced the same opinion.

"We were somewhat dubious about using these advertisements, believing they might cheapen the park, but a trial proved them to be ornamental and satisfying to our patrons. They furnished a subdued light in that portion of the park and from a restful diversion during the change of reels, similar to the advertisements in a theatre program. Of course we mean to be very particular in the material advertised, which will always be strictly high class. We have heard no complaints from patrons, which is gratifying—and the financial return is also gratifying."

A SCREEN advertisement that has become very popular, even quite essential, in the National Capital, is the announcement of coming attractions. These are slides which give the films to be seen at that particular theatre for a week or ten days in advance, with the particular actor or actress being features and a comment on the theme of the play.

Such advertisement of a program is very helpful to patrons, so much so that the photoplay fans of Washington have come to expect them. Usually these are very attractive displays, but occasionally they will be hand-written—very badly at that after the magnification of the projection machine—and in such cases they had best be omitted. They only cause unfavorable comment from the spectators.

The Moore chain of theatres go a little further. In addition to making the advance announcements by slides, they will also run a slide inviting the public to read the advertisements in the daily newspapers. In this way Mr. Moore does the local press a good turn.

The refined screen advertisement as mentioned above accentuate how quickly the motion picture amusement has passed out of the mediocre and even beyond the vaudeville. For even now the curtains and back "drops" of vaudeville theatres still carry advertisements of beers, facial powders, chewing gums, etc. The up-to-date exhibitor will not tolerate that to-day.

GREAT NORTHERN OPENS NORTHWESTERN OFFICE

The Great Northern Film Company has opened a rental office in Minneapolis, Minn., where all the Great Northern features may be obtained in territory adjacent to that city.

The office opened on September 1, with a large number of big attractions, and is already doing business. The address of the office is 319-321 Kasota Building, at Fourth street and Hennepin avenue, and the branch manager is Mr. J. E. Moyer. The company expects, from the outlook, that it will do a large business.

Famous Players Releases Important Plays

Expects to Show in Three Months' Schedule Nine Well-Known Stars—Five Appear in Pictures for the First Time

FAMOUS Players has arranged to release through the Paramount Pictures Corporation a number of important film dramas during the next three months.

The program consists of the following stars and plays:

Henrietta Crosman in the emotional drama by Mrs. Burton Harrison, "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch," released September 10; Mary Pickford in "Such a Little Queen," the romantic comedy by Channing Pollock, released September 21; Mme. Bertha Kalich, in a play by the Spanish dramatist, Angel Guimera, released October 5, and David Higgins in "His Last Dollar," released October 15.

Others are: Maclyn Arbuckle in "The County Chairman," Henry W. Savage's production, by George Ade, with many of the original cast, including the star and Willis P. Sweatman, released October 26; Mary Pickford in "Behind the Scenes," a play of theatrical life by Margaret Mayo, author of "Baby Mine," released November 2; John Barrymore in H. A. Du Souchet's comedy, "The Man from Mexico," released November 9; and Marguerite Clark in a typical characterization by Mary Germaine, entitled "Wildflower."

Of the nine stars who appear on this program, H. B. Warner, Henrietta Grosman, Mme. Bertha Kalich, Maclyn Arbuckle and Marguerite Clark made their debut before the motion picture public through these subjects. John Barrymore made his first appearance in films in a former Famous Players release, "An American Citizen."

Mary Pickford is expected to surpass all her former triumphs in the two releases that represent that star on the program, "Such a Little Queen" and "Behind the Scenes."

Form Organization to Issue Warner Program

United Motion Picture Producers, Inc., Meet and Elect Officers—New Releases Ready in a Month, Say Those in Charge

THE producing companies which are responsible for providing the big complete program to be released by Warner's Features, Inc., met Saturday, August 29, and perfected their organization. The name adopted for the new company is the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc. The officers elected are Ludwig G. B. Erb, president; Gilbert P. Hamilton, vice-president; Leo C. Stern, treasurer.

This is the first time in the motion picture industry that an organization of manufacturers has been formed for the purpose of providing a program for a releasing company. The idea is that by operating under a general governing body, the individual companies will obtain better results and greater benefits are to be expected than by independent operation.

The new program will be ready for first release in about a month. The time is now ready to receive applications for bookings.

In this connection, P. A. Powers, president of Warner's Features, Inc., stated that in addition to the program the concern would handle big features of four or more reels.

"Richelieu" Scheduled for Regular Program

Universal Decides to Release Elaborate Production with No Extra Rental Price—Play Affords Insight into National Character

FOR several weeks the Universal has been advertising "Richelieu" as a special Universal feature. This involves an extra charge to the exchange but none will be made.

The decision to put "Richelieu" on the regular program without extra charge was brought about by a conference between President Laemmle and the exchanges when the present unsettled condition in the amusement field, owing to the present war in Europe, was discussed.

While at the present moment there has been no decided effect on the American market generally, there is a certain amount of retrenchment and nervousness in the industrial field, and to enable the Universal exhibitors to start the fall season off right, it is going to be released to them on the regular program without an additional rental price.

With France now in the public eye, fighting the greatest fight of her existence, the production will be favorably received by the general public. The French have done great things in the past; what their position will be no one knows after this deadly European war. In spirit and mind the people have not changed in the past two hundred years or more. In this play one is afforded an insight into the character, the passions, the ambitions, the cleverness and chief characteristics that have made the Frenchman what he is to-day.

Getting the Right Kind of Pictures

THE question this writer asks in his communication should command the attention of exchange men and manufacturers, for the problem is one requiring a satisfactory solution in the shortest possible time, in order to remove a chaotic condition menacing the prosperity of the motion picture business. The correspondent in making the declaration that film buyers should be supplied with what they want strikes the right keynote.

He also makes an observation on the changing conditions among theatres, which might be viewed in the light of a prediction which will probably come true in a very short period. He already sees in the distinction now made in the "uptown" and "downtown" houses of his city, with the different class of films in use by the various managers, the approach of a time when all motion picture theatres will fall into well-defined classifications, according to the character of pictures shown on the screen.

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 30.

Editor, The Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—How can the manager of a motion picture theatre, who cares enough about the quality of the pictures he presents to feel a personal interest in them and in their selection, be sure that he is getting just the pictures that he wants, and that he feels his audiences will appreciate and approve?

This is one of the big questions confronting managers to-day, and one which must be solved correctly, or managers will find it impossible to build up the kind of trade they want, and hold it.

In the dramatic world it is easy for a manager to know in advance just what sort of an attraction his house is going to present. He is in a position to feel sure that his attraction will be of a certain grade.

In fact, dramatic houses themselves are classed according to the nature of the entertainment offered, falling naturally into different classes such as houses presenting only first-class attractions at top prices; second-class houses, stock company theatres, vaudeville theatres, and burlesque houses. Patrons are able to inform themselves accurately in advance as to the class of house they are going to attend, and concerning the nature of the attraction they are going to see.

THE motion picture business has not reached that stage of development yet, but is fast coming to the point where some sort of classification must be made, not only of the pictures themselves, but of the houses as well. Before very many months, if the picture business keeps growing as it has during the past twelve months, theatres will be known by the grade of films they show, and ranked as the dramatic houses are to-day.

Managers of the picture houses which use first-run films depend almost entirely on the reports and judgment of agents in booking their films. Very rarely have they seen the films themselves before they are put on, and the judgment of an agent may not be at all like that of the manager himself as to whether a film is suitable for presentation in a certain house or not.

Enterprising managers should make it their business to let the manufacturers and agents know exactly what they like and what they do not like in various films sent them for use in their houses.

The exhibitors are the wholesale buyers of films. The films must be as they want them, or the manufacturers will soon come to grief, through the falling off in business of the man who buys at wholesale, and retails to the public.

THE solution problem, then, is the interest shown in the films by the exhibitors. They should have ideas of their own concerning the films, and should not be slow in expressing them. If they have no opportunity in advance to see the pictures they are buying, they can at least express their opinions concerning them, so that the same mistakes need not be made in future releases.

It is the man who has these ideas of his own, and who lets the exchange man and the manufacturer know them, who builds up a trade in his house. It is individuality that counts, and no manager should fall into a rut and take whatever the manufacturer decides to send him, just because he is using a certain service. There are too many feature services to be had these days for any manager to feel that he must tie himself up to any one manufacturer, and take what he sends, no matter what the nature of the films.

ROCHESTER.

Sticking to a Policy

Baltimore, Sept. 2.

Editor The Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—Having a well-defined policy, to be adhered to under all conditions, is perhaps one of the greatest assets and business builders a motion picture theatre can boast of. A well-thought-out campaign, and plan of procedure, with a definite aim or object in view, should be possessed by every manager of a motion picture house. If he has studied conditions sufficiently to form a correct conclusion, having a definite aim simplifies the task of any manager, and makes it possible for him to go about the job of building up a suitable clientele.

Nowadays there are so many different kinds of picture houses that the first thing a manager must do on taking charge of a house is to determine into what classification he shall put his theatre. He must determine how much he can charge at the door, how much he can give for the admission fee decided upon, and the nature of the films to be shown.

Determining upon the admission fee is one of the big problems of any manager new in a given field. The tendency of any manager is to run toward the higher figures, knowing that they will make it possible to give a better show than the five-cent admission, but there are many things to be taken into consideration before any house advances its figures above those at which the picture houses started.

In the minds of many people picture houses are always associated with five-cent pieces, and when anything more than five-cents is demanded they think they are being imposed upon, and it requires a great deal of explaining to convince them that the performance is worth more than five cents.

Seating capacity should play an important part in fixing the scale of admission. The man with the large seating capacity can afford to stay at five cents and give a pretty good exhibition.

The extent of the performance to be given depends, in a large measure, on the admission fee. At the same time there is considerable latitude for any manager in booking films, even if he decides to take one of the services offered by the larger film companies. There is always a choice to be made of films in any service, and a manager should make up his mind early what sort of films best please his patrons.

In some locations educational films may be used to advantage on every program. In others, the Westerns are always suitable. In practically every house comedies are in demand, but some can use more than others.

When it comes to taking special features, and extra reel pictures, a manager finds himself up against a hard problem, especially if he has made up his mind to stick to the lower rate of admission. It is practically impossible to show these features at low prices, and yet people have been educated by the larger houses to expect them.

Whether to show anything but pictures is another question that always comes up, and here again only the wishes of his patrons should be consulted.

Once the wishes of his patrons have been discovered, it is plain sailing for any manager. Then it is simply a question of keeping cool in summer, warm in winter, and clean under all conditions.

Yours truly, A Live Wire.

MILWAUKEE BUSINESS IS GOOD

Special to The Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 2.

WITH the arrival of the cool, damp evenings of early fall, Milwaukee exhibitors are experiencing the usual pre-autumn boom in their business.

Though the days are as yet a bit too warm to suit the exhibitor, the evenings are ideal, being just cool and damp enough to drive people off the streets into the theatres. The downtown houses in particular are feeling the good effects of the cool nights and the evening's business is gradually creeping up to the winter mark.

The war has had little or no effect on business as far as the exhibitor is concerned, unless it has stimulated it a bit. Up to date none of the houses have shown any war pictures, though the Majestic had a Burton Holmes war talk, which, though it got business, failed to please. Exhibitors have, on the whole, been a little shy of war pictures, either slides or films.

Police Dog Steals Necklace in Films

"Our Mutual Girl" Used a Canine Crook That Forgets Its Thief-Catching Training and Reverts to Wolfish Tendencies

THE thief catcher who trains dogs to aid him in his detection and capture of criminals is in danger of being hoisted by his own petard. The fact that a dog is intelligent enough to catch a thief proved to an expert in criminology that a dog would be successful also as a thief.

This is not an academic discussion of possibilities, but a cold statement of facts, for in Chapter 30 of "Our Mutual Girl," written by Irvin S. Cobb, a former German police dog is employed to steal a valuable cameo necklace. He does it with such skill and so defies detection after the act that what started out merely as fiction has turned into a very solemn condition.

This is the way she first was employed in the film: Mrs. Knickerbocker, Our Mutual Girl's wealthy aunt, purchases a $50,000 necklace at Tiffany's as her niece's birthday present. The aunt is seen to buy the antique cameos by the clever thief who owns Anni. He follows Mrs. Knickerbocker to her home, marks the various ways of ingress and egress and then gets his dog.

ANNI STEALS "OUR MUTUAL GIRL'S" NECKLACE

The dog's name is Anni von der Heinrichsburg. She is a German schaferhund (sheep dog), born at Hellingen, Weimar, Germany, on Dec. 10, 1909. So she is not five years old.

Anni comes from a splendid line of German police dogs, and as the Germans were first to utilize dogs for police, war and life-saving purposes, this lineage bespeaks years of inherited training. Anni's mother is Resel von Jena Paradies, the champion female dog of Germany. Her father was Siegfried von Jena Paradies, another champion.

Irvin S. Cobb, who is writing "Our Mutual Girl" scenarios, and Arthur James, editor of "Our Mutual Girl," heard of Anni, her antecedents and her combative tendencies. When they collaborated, the one as writer and the other as editor, they decided to work Anni into the film.

In the meanwhile Mrs. Knickerbocker has given Margaret, Our Mutual Girl, her present. And Our Mutual Girl, delighted with the splendid gift, rapturously shows it to all her friends. Then, girl-like, she leaves it in her dresser while she dines.

Anni hides under the bed until Margaret retires, and then gains possession of the necklace. The whole affair, shown in minute detail on the screen, proves beyond even the lawyer's reasonable doubt the possibilities of a skilled police dog as thief.

In a subsequent chapter of "Our Mutual Girl" Anni's owner is caught because he becomes arrogant and throws caution to the winds.

REGENT OPENING PUT OFF

Special to The Motion Picture News

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 3.

Because of delay in decorating, the Regent Theatre, at the corner of Main and Utica streets, will not open for two or three weeks. The Regent is to be one of the most attractive houses in Buffalo. Work on the other Mark house in the downtown section is progressing rapidly, and it is expected that the opening date will be some time in November.

Editor's Note.—This department is prepared to answer all questions from exhibitors relating to the use of music in connection with photoplays, and to suggest suitable music for current pictures. Correspondence will be welcomed

Getting the Best Out of the Music and the Pictures

By E. A. AHERN

DON'T try to silence a baby's cries by playing loudly. The softer you play the sooner the mother will quiet it.

A few things to take into consideration for the accompanying of pictures:

First—If convenient to the management of the house have the operator run the pictures through in advance of the regular show, so that the music can be arranged to fit the different scenes.

Second—In selecting your music try to remember the scenes that necessitate the change of music. Have your music so arranged that in changing from one piece to another you don't have to stop and look for the music for the next scene.

Some pianists can modulate from one key to another without making the break and connect each piece of music, but that requires practise.

Sometimes the changes in the picture are so sudden that this modulation is difficult, and we many times lose a point in so doing. I believe if one does this he should start the modulation a second before the change of scenes in order to have the music in the right key and tempo for the new scene.

Third—Appropriate music, of course, is the first requisite in accompanying the picture properly. This is another way I look at this "Appropriate Music" question. Select music that has the atmosphere, time and tempo; also music that has two or more different movements or themes, so you won't need to make an entire change of music to fit the scenes, but just play some of the movements in the same piece.

For illustration, take the last half of the first reel of "Notre Dame," by Pathé. In the first scene, "Leading Lady Is Waiting for Her Lover" play the "Melody of Love" from "Gypsy Love" until the archdeacon appears (villain); then the first part of same piece ("Gypsy Love") in a minor key. The tempo is moderato, but hurry it to fit the action of the picture.

You see I don't make an entire change of music, but just change from one theme to another, both in the same piece of music. I alternate the two movements according to whoever is on the screen, leading lady or heavy.

This is an old picture and probably some of you do not remember it, so we use one of Lubin's pictures, "When the Last Leaves Fall," released about three months ago, for illustration.

Here is another illustration:

Scene 1: A son leaving home after a quarrel with his father.

Scene 2: Saying farewell to her sweetheart.

Scene 3:—Far from home. For the music use "Prayer and Passion Waltz," "Lento," second strain.

In Scene 4, the man's death, play the introduction of "Prayer and Passion," written in 4-4 andante, played p.p. and "adagio." For Scene 5, one of the best storm scenes I ever saw, play the same music, third strain in D minor, both hands, bass clef. Play the melody with the left hand very loud but not "bangy." This scene was too long to keep playing the same strain all the time, so use the introduction of "Danube Waves," also in D minor, to get the storm effect.

For Scene 6, "The Following Morning," rest for a few seconds as the scene is "neutral."

These six scenes last about six minutes and require music that has three different tempos. By using "Prayer and Passion" I was able to supply these different tempos, and only change the music once, and that was to get away from the monotony of the same melody.

It gets on my nerves to keep "sawing" on one melody too long. I imagine it affects patrons of the house also.

For long scenes like this one I usually select another piece of music that has a minor strain; something like the one I am to play for the first of the picture like the above.

For an ordinary storm scene this third strain of "Prayer and Passion" would have pulled me over.

I suppose you are thinking to yourself, "He uses some old music." Yes, this piece was copyrighted in 1902, I believe. But do you know it was just the kind of music that this particular picture required. As long as the music fits the picture, play it if it was copyrighted when Columbus was a kid.

I played for a comedy some few nights ago "The Golden Hair Was Hanging Down Her Back" and "A Bicycle Built for Two." It hit the picture just right, and there were quite a few in the house that remember these old songs and it made them laugh.

The following is the music I used for Selig's "Escape of Jim Dolan," a two-reel Western: "Cowboy Capers" until jail scene, then "Autumn Bud Waltz" until "Breaking out of Jail." After that "The Bucking Broncho."

The action was very fast, showing the escape and changing of horses on the run. I played "Gray Eagle" (Indian), "Radium Dance" and "Sagawa" (Indian). I put lots of "pep" in this music and kept the tempo with the action.

In one of the scenes of "Dolan," Tom Mix, the best in his line, stops for a rest. Here I changed the music and stopped until action again picked up. Then I used "Starland" until he is captured by Indians. Then "Heap. Big Injun" until Dolan becomes loose from the horse; then right into valse lento pathetic until "On the Road to Recovery," waltz moderato.

By leaving out the tom tom effect in the left hand for "Gray Eagle" and "Sagawa," I had the Western atmosphere. In all of my Western music when I haven't enough I use an Indian and play a straight "chord" in the bass clef. This gives the right idea.

This picture required lively music nearly all the way through. If one was to let the music lag it would have a tendency to hold back the action, and thereby not hold the attention in the picture. And this is what we want to do—make the picture as lifelike as possible.

One must be alert if one intends to make a success of picture playing. When the action is fast keep up with the action, and use loud pedal, not too much.

I can tell when the patrons are interested in the picture and keep them "up in the air" as long as the action is fast. When Dolan jumped onto one of the horses from the rear, as he lit in the saddle I struck the piano an extra hard thump, and kept right on with the music.

THE PASSING OF THE SONG SLIDE

FOR the past few years exhibitors have cast about for something to go with the silent drama. With some it took the form of illustrated songs. A set of lantern slides illustrating a popular song was shown on the screen, accompanied by a singer and orchestra.

Others used a lecturer. A film was shown with someone explaining the story as it passed in review on the screen. Others, again, used a company of players who, out of sight of the audience, either in the wings or behind the curtain, supplied with voice and traps any sound called for by the picture.

This elusive "something" was proving quite a bug-bear. Probably the first "talking pictures," mechanical in the sense that a phonograph was used, was the Cameraphone, now extinct. Then lately we have the Edison and the Gaumont. The latter has had considerable vogue abroad.

According to Robert Grau, in the "Musical Observer," the Gaumont machine has seemed to find a larger public response than the American machine (Edison). Yet it is fair to state that in theatrical history there was nothing to compare with the Edison talking pictures as a theatrical attraction during its first two weeks in the vaudeville theatres.

That the public was attracted by the name of Edison alone is hardly true. The Kinetophone, as the machine is known, is yet a live proposition, with as many companies on tour now as at the outset; while it is being continually improved upon.

And now comes J. Mahan, of the Imperial Film Company, with his "Singing Pictures." If his plans should develop and create perhaps a new craze (for let us not forget the illustrated songs were once the rage), the much-sought-for "something" will have come, and present just the diversion so many now find lacking. Probably the best explanation of this latest innovation could be given in Mr. Mahan's own words:

"Our singing pictures win their way because they accompany the human voice. A man or a woman begins the song and simultaneously the picture in vivid action tells the story of the song on the screen. Song and picture move together as each verse is rendered. There is perfect harmony between the two—eye and ear are alike charmed. The films for the songs are prepared as carefully as for a photoplay. In fact, each song film is a photoplay in miniature."

The song story is visualized—not with the old-fashioned conventional slides—but with life-like motion pictures, having continuity and all the necessary conditions found in first-class film playlets. The exhibitor furnishes the singer—Mahan furnishes the song. Old and new songs have an added charm when rendered to the accompaniment of the film.

Take, for example, "Home, Sweet Home." The film for this song was staged at the home of John Howard Payne's direct descendant, Mrs. Clara Payne Boyce, Kingsbridge, New York, and at East Hampton, Long Island, showing John Howard Payne's lowly thatched cottage home. Among the old songs already released we find "Last Rose of Summer," "Silver Threads Among the Gold" and "Annie Laurie."

The latest popular songs also are being released as rapidly as possible. The latest are: "In the Heart of a City that Has No Heart," by Daly, and "In the Valley of the Moon," by Morris. The main offices are 1476 Broadway, N. Y., under the name Imperial Motion Picture Company of N. Y., Inc., and various firms in different parts of the country have territorial rights, while Hurtig & Seamon have European rights.

In the western part of the United States, W. W. Ely, of San Francisco, controls California, Oregon and Washington. The New York office will direct exhibitors to the nearest exchange.

Philadelphia "Reel" Fellows Elect Officers

Lively Quaker City Organization Admits All Persons Connected with the Industry—Eugene L. Perry Made President

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Sept. 3.

AT a small but enthusiastic meeting last Sunday the "Reel" Fellows of Philadelphia became a permanent organization. The faithful and earnest work of a small band of film men who felt that a social club among the Quaker City film boys would be worth while, were rewarded by seeing their work bear fruit.

The title of the club is to be The "Reel" Fellows, and membership is open to all persons connected with the industry. There will be three classes of membership, regular, associate and honorary. In the first class will be those actively engaged in the film business as managers, exchangemen, manufacturers, actors, etc. Associate members will be those who are interested or indirectly connected with the business and will not have the voting power. Honorary members will be those who perform signal service to the organization.

The constitution and by-laws were adopted after a double reading and the following officers elected: President, Eugene L. Perry, general manager for the Stanley Theatres Company; first vice-president, Simon Libros, of the Photo Playhouse Film Company, Philadelphia branch; second vice-president, Ben Zerr, of Reading, Pa., exhibitor; third vice-president, Howard G. Bobb, Liberty Motion Picture Company, Philadelphia; fourth vice-president, William Fox, Box Office Attractions Company, New York and Philadelphia; fifth vice-president, "Pop" Siegmund Lubin, of the Lubin Manufacturing Company; treasurer, Jack Levy, Greater New York Film Rental Company, Philadelphia; secretary, Jay Emanuel, manager Ridge Avenue and Ideal Theatres, Philadelphia; financial secretary, Steve Talbot, Philadelphia representative of the "Billboard"; press representative, Benjamin Zeidman, Liberty Motion Picture Company. Directors: Stanley Mastbaum, Stanley Theatre Company; J. S. Hebrew, Warner's Features; Dave Sablosky, exhibitor of Wilmington, Del., and Lewis M. Swaab, dealer in supplies.

A initiation fee of $10 was placed, so as to keep the undesirables from rushing to join, the dues being but nominal, $3 per quarter. The club starts off very auspiciously with about twenty-five members now on the roll and applications from ninety others. These will be acted on as soon as a meeting can be held by the membership committee.

Plans are also under way to become incorporated as a club under the state laws and a charter will be applied for at once. The meeting Sunday was held at the Ridge Avenue Theatre, and while many were absent because of the final holiday at the shore, all the business that was needed was attended to promptly.

The films which had been taken while on the outing at Atlantic City two weeks previously were thrown on the screen and the boys had the pleasure of realizing Bobbie Burns' dream, "of seeing themselves as others saw them."

Prominent in the film were Steve Talbot and his little grip (contents not shown); Benny of Liberty, with his pennant and smile; "King" Solomon, of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, with his ice cream pants; Simon Libros; Smiling Jay, of the Ridge Avenue, and all the others well-known in local film circles.

A motion was made and carried to hold the next meeting on September 13, with suitable and proper entertainment, and the secretary received a committee to help him put over another good time. Prior to adjournment, Jay passed out young telegraph poles labeled "Pittsburgh." They were well received and immediately turned into smoke.

He Warns Fellow Managers Not to Allow Weather, Delays and the Usual Unavoidable Annoyances Disturb His Equanimity—The Sunny Smile and Happy Disposition Will Work Wonders, and Above All, Watch Every Detail of Your Theatre

WE all like to hear the other fellow tell us how to make a success out of a run-down film theatre, and like as not he is more in need of the advice than the listener. So let us not set ourselves up as paragons, but exchange ideas, and talk about the patient (the sick motion picture theatre) and the best treatment to bring about a healthy hue, in the face of adversity.

It is the heart of the patient we must first consider and regulate, that all-important organ first. Let us call this organ of the motion picture theatre by its technical title "The Manager," be it of the "owner" kind or the plain variety.

The best treatment for this "organ" is careful and rigid self-discipline. and after a systematic rejuvenation, in which he lays out a "daily routine card" and neatly prints the duties to be performed each day; with each day's routine ending with "dress, shave, and doll-up," followed by "house open at — P. M.," we will proceed with a ramble as to a healthy atmosphere for the patient and how to create it.

Optimism Comes First

I believe the first qualification of a successful manager should be optimism, and a generous happy attitude toward the world in general. He should be one who has schooled himself to this frame of mind, who won't waste any time worrying over all the little tantalizing vicissitudes continually coming up in the show business; who will not worry over the weather; the non-appearance of the expressman when he wants to see him most with a film box; nor feel discouraged over a long run of bad business.

These are the occasions when a good manager can rob himself of his naturally "sweet disposition" and ultimately transform himself into a "grouch." I make it a rule to inwardly talk to myself on like occasions and say, "Hold up, old boy, don't go up in the air. You can't help this matter any by getting wild or discouraged; so cool down and let us see what is the right thing to do, then we'll do it and everything will straighten itself out in the end."

"Help to the Nervous System"

In this way I save my nervous system, and even when the matter doesn't come to a satisfactory culmination, I still have my appetite, and it doesn't hurt me to smile. I dwell on this psychological phase of the managerial question, as it is the most important phase of the game. Success more often knocks at our door at the time when we feel things are in a hopeless condition; so you see, the fellow who keeps a generous happy attitude toward the world will have a clear head free from doubt, and will be able to see the opportunities.

When conducting a theatre, week in and week out, for two or three years, one is very apt to get short-sighted as to the familiar surroundings. This is often the reason why houses find that business is not as good as it was a year ago. The remedy is easy to take, if you set about it right. Just use a little mental suggestion and pretend that you are a prospective buyer and are going to look over a theatre which you expect to purchase; then forget everything and give the house (your house) a thorough inspection. Take a big pad of paper with you. Take some morning when the house is closed; turn on all the lights and start from the other side of the street.

Scrutinizing the Theatre

Give the house the critical "once over" of a fussy purchaser, and speak your criticisms out loud. Then go over and scrutinize every nook and cranny of the front, and ask yourself, "Is this front neat and clean? What is the impression of those who don't come in? Are there too many posters? Are they neatly and plainly marked? What can I do to completely change the front to make the most particular patrons want to come in?"

Don't fail to record the most trifling idea that presents itself. Then give the interior a close inspection. What is the impression of an utter stranger when he or she walks into the house?

In passing, let me say I never waste time with a dissatisfied employee, especially the most important of my establishment. So my advice is, if an employee is disgruntled, pay him off, or pay him enough.

Then there is your program; I often wonder how many exhibitors make it a business of studying the motion picture trade weeklies. Very few, I fear, give the fact of "just what is the best" much study. A simple and efficient method for one who is playing a service program is to keep a large scrap book with a section for each manufacturer and to paste the reviews on the releases, with the date of release marked against each.

Weekly List of Exchange Numbers

In this way you may make up a weekly list of the exchange numbers of the most desirable subjects and send your selections in to the exchange manager every week.

If you keep this up you will find that your program will be greatly strengthened, and the exchange man will soon be able to keep you properly supplied with films.

One of the greatest factors, aside from a carefully selected program, which is likewise carefully projected, is the personnel of the house. To illustrate, the efficiency of the ushers at the Knickerbocker is the outcome of close observation and careful schooling. They have been selected from boys going to school, who are anxious to lighten the home burden.

I take for granted when hiring an applicant that he knows how to conduct himself. He must at all times have clean hands and finger nails, linen and shoes. Tuxedos are provided in winter, also grey silk gloves and vests; white flannel trousers and plain white shirts in summer. My patrons experience a new sensation in being attended by young men who speak the king's English correctly and carry themselves as though they were receiving a respected guest in their parents' homes.

Avoid Carelessness

As for myself, even more care is exerted in the way of a careful grooming before going to the theatre. Hense the personnel of the Knickerbocker is such that I do not hesitate to boast of the most select and ultra fashionable patronage.

Before closing, I want to say that undoubtedly the chief reason for the ultimate failure of a motion picture theatre is "pure carelessness," and the faint heart which often goes with it. And if some of the small exhibitors who are constantly complaining would study conditions affecting their theatres and be guided accordingly they would make successes of their undertakings.

CANADA "BEATS" AMERICA TO WAR FILM

For once Canadian film buyers have placed an order for a European subject before it received an American "O.K." The picture, to upset all precedents, is "Called to the Front," a three-reeler. H. Winik bought it for the Apex Film Company, of New York. The points that made the picture a London furore were the bona fide war views assembled with the "acted" scenes. In one section of the story, for instance, hundreds of wealthy Americans stranded in the British metropolis, were made to give color to a dramatic situation.

Land battles, battleships, armies of invasion and armies of defense, the capture of the hero and his thrilling destruction of the "wireless" and escape, were other elements of the film's success. The Apex people, from 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, are firing prints into every part of the continent except Canada, where the native buyers "beat 'em to it."

ROSE COGHLAN TO STAR IN OLD SUCCESS

Rose Coghlan has signed a contract with the Lubin Manufacturing Company, to play the leading role in "The Sporting Duchess," which the firm will produce as a motion picture. The direction of the melodrama has been assigned to Barry O'Neil, who will select a great cast from the pick of the studio companies.

Some years ago "The Sporting Duchess" was brought direct from the Drury Lane Theatre, London, and had a phenomenal run in New York and other big cities, Miss Coghlan being the star. The production promises to surpass the original stage version.

SIGNAL LIGHTS FLASH PERFORMANCES

Special to The Motion Picture News

Louisville, Sept. 2.

The Breeze Amusement Company, of Flemingsburg, Ky., has opened a new motion picture theatre in Augusta, Ky., the Pastime.

The Colonial Theatre, at Harrodsburg, Ky., has just opened up and is claimed to be one of the most modernly equipped in Central Kentucky. Signal lights have been placed on the front of the building to flash the beginning of each performance. The idea is proving to be an effective one.

GIFT FOR THOMAS RICKETTS

Thomas Ricketts, the American director, received a pleasant surprise when he was handed a wrist watch by the secretary of Richard Bennett. The watch is a gold one and on the back is engraved the inscription, "T. R. A Good Old Soul. R. B."

Theatre of War Lacks Appeal for Actress

Gene Gauntier Returns to America, After Thrilling Struggle to Secure Passage from Sweden—Narrates Her Experiences

GENE GAUNTIER, leading lady of her own producing company, which releases through Warner's Features, was one of those among the many thousands of American citizens who experienced countless difficulties on the other side of the water when the war broke out. She returned recently on the "Olympic."

Miss Gauntier visited her sister, Mlle. Marguerite Gauntier, the famous Swedish prima donna at her summer home, situated at Lyckoma, on the west coast of Sweden, to rest before the coming season, and when the war broke out, on August 1, she found herself with only a sum equivalent to fifteen dollars in Swedish money and several unnegotiable letters of credit. Her sister and her husband had all their money tied up in German banks so they were even worse off.

With great difficulty, Miss Gauntier made her way to Stockholm and thence to Liverpool on an overcrowded boat. She wrote several times to America for money, but could receive no answer, as all the mails were tied up. After innumerable difficulties Miss Gauntier and a number of Americans managed to secure second-class passage on the steamer "Olympic," due to the kind services of an American, and after an exciting voyage arrived in America with only a small amount of Swedish money, which she was unable to have exchanged on this side.

She finally managed to borrow five cents and was able to telephone to the studio for assistance. Miss Gauntier says that the methods of transportation in Norway and Sweden are completely demoralized by the war, and that her experiences in reaching this side of the water were most trying, yet exciting.

Los Angeles Film Men Boycott "Movie"

Objectional Word to Be Eliminated from All Publicity Matter—Want Advertising to Appear on "Regular" Theatre Page

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Aug. 31.

OWNERS and managers of the principal Los Angeles motion picture theatres have started a boycott on the slang word "movie" and it is not to be used again in connection with publicity of any kind, if they can prevent it. This word, the exhibitors believe, tends to cheapen motion pictures, and if they can do anything to cause the people to forget it, they certainly will make the attempt.

The word, they claim, originated in the Bowery district of New York City, when motion pictures were really "movies," but now that the film portrays the best of drama, comedy, and is even breaking in on grand opera, it is the opinion of the theatre men that a more dignified name should be used.

It is very possible that prizes will be offered for a word of five letters that will take the place of this objectionable one.

Another attempt of the exhibitors to raise the plane of motion pictures is the demand being made on local newspapers that their advertising appear only in the amusement pages or sections, where the "regular" theatre advertisements are carried. They dislike the idea of the theatrical and motion picture sections being separate.

Strand Will Show Craft "War" Film

Scenes Attending Declaration of War in Belgium and Other Phases of Conflict to Be Shown—Reel a Week Promised

THE Strand Theatre, of New York, has lived up to its name of premier picture theatre of the United States with an announcement of actual war scenes from Europe, to show on their screen next Sunday afternoon, September 6.

The Strand Film Company, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, had cameras in the war zone, but it was thought that they had suffered the fate of most picture machines caught operating there. Right from start to finish, the Belgium campaign unfolds itself—from King Albert bidding good-bye to the famous Ninth Regiment of the Line, who were annihilated at Liege, to the entrance of his faithful Queen at the Royal Palace, where she is zealously nursing the wounded.

H. Winik, of 35 Little Newport street, London, cables Manager Craft that he can assure the Strand Film Company's New York offices, at 145 West Forty-fifth street, the delivery of one "war reel" a week. American picture men who want this service should wire instantly to Mr. Craft at the address printed above.

Vol. X September 12, 1914 No. 10

A Timely Check

THE exhibitors of San Francisco are to be congratulated upon living within the jurisdiction of a court that does not hesitate to check the censorial power of the police, when it becomes apparent that that power is overstepping its legitimate limits.

Decisions within the last few years from courts of every degree have made plain the judicial tendency to give the police power its own way over everything and everyone.

Judges have uniformly declined to say in any case, "here the power of the police must stop."

THE merits of the Stilwell injunction case in San Francisco are not sufficiently well known to be discussed at this time.

But it may be taken for granted that the court which awarded Mr. Stilwell a permanent injunction against Chief of Police White was fully satisfied that the exhibitor's complaint was just and should be upheld.

Had Mr. Stilwell found that war films bred riotous or lawless actions among his patrons, no police order forbidding their exhibition would have been needed. He would have acted himself.

But so long as these performances were conducted with perfect order, the police had no valid excuse for interfering.

IT would be well if the municipal authorities of every city in the United States would take to heart the lesson of this incident, and realize that self-interest will compel the exhibitor to follow their wishes, without any mandate from them, not only in this, but in practically every case where censorship is alleged to be necessary.

Foolishness and Wisdom

THERE is a regrettable "I-should-worry" attitude in some quarters of the trade over the film chemical situation at the present time. The form it takes may be summed up in these words:

"What's the use of losing sleep over this matter? The war won't last more than a month or six weeks longer. We've got a supply that will take us through the next three months (or six months, as the case may be).

"Why start manufacturing these chemicals in America, when the Germans will be upon us, competitively speaking, just as we're ready to market the stuff, and take the market away from us, as they have done in the past?"

THIS is important, IF TRUE.

But there is nothing in the nature or the progress of the European war to indicate that it will be of brief duration.

Every dispatch that comes from the Old World goes to prove the assumption that the nations of Europe are locked in what will be a long drawn out, stubbornly contested conflict, that the present war is, to use a sporting metaphor, "the first round of a fight to a finish."

IN other words, every phase of the situation invites the American manufacturer to go in and possess himself of the market that has been deserted by the warring nations.

And the situation is not only inviting; it is compelling.

AS a matter of self-preservation, the American manufacturer must soon begin to make for himself those necessaries of his business which he can no longer rely upon Germany to make for him.

It is practically a certainty that, even were the war to end by the first of the year, as no one anticipates it will, the German factories would be in no condition to resume at once their operations, and supply the American demand as before the war.

IF the American market finds itself "caught short" at a critical moment, with the supply on hand exhausted, the war in full blast and no relief in sight, those who depend on the American market will have only themselves—and the wiseacre, cocksure, "I-should-worry" manufacturer—to blame.

The situation will be inexcusable, but it will then be irremediable.

INSTEAD of playing the part of the foolish virgins in the parable, it behooves the American manufacturer to bestir himself and impersonate the wise.

"THE TREY O' HEARTS"

(Gold Seal-Universal—Seventh Chapter)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SINCE the first two chapters of this popular serial of the Universal Company, Edward Sloman, as Seneca Trine, the most abhorent villain that has been seen on the screen for some time, has been greatly in the background, but here, in this instalment, which bears the title of "Stalemate," he is to be seen again. Mr. Sloman is well suited to a part such as the character of Seneca Trine calls for.

THE DARING ELOPEMENT

Trine is a man that has been crippled for life through the reckless daring of his most hated enemy, and it is Alan Law, this man's son, that Trine is now attempting to put out of the way through his daughter, Judith, and whom Rose, the twin sister, loves. Trine bears a greater resemblance to the Evil One than we have ever seen in a character on the screen. But this is paying Mr. Sloman a high compliment, and Mr. Vance, in his description of the man, leads one to believe that he is just such a character.

He is seen in this chapter a number of times seated in his wheel-chair, wildly gesticulating to his servants, his face working horribly, his fingers twitching and his eyes rolling. Great credit is due Mr. Sloman for his portrayal of this part.

Another man who had quite a reputation, gained while he was with the Kalem Company, where he interpreted Indian roles, is Arthur Ortega. As he is an Indian, the parts suited him admirably, and as a gunman in this episode he is well cast. He is commissioned by Marrophat, Trine's agent, to kill Law, and follows that young man to the top of a building in course of construction, where he has climbed to get a glimpse of Rose, who is in the house across the way.

Red November, the gunman, attacks Law high in the air and a fierce tussle ensues in which Red is worsted and hurled to the ground, many feet below.

The next day Alan plans to elope with Rose and lowers himself to her window by a derrick, hoping to depart with her. But the wily Judith disguises herself as Rose and takes her place, and Law, unable to tell his sweetheart from her sister, is joyous when Judith comes out the window to meet him.

Here the picture ends and there is much to speculate upon before the next chapter will be seen. Will Law marry Judith, thinking her Rose, is the most vital and exciting question. The outcome of this case of mistaken identity will doubtless be shown in the next release of the series.

STARTS FIGHT AGAINST ONE-EXIT THEATRES

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Houston, Tex., Sept. 3.

MOTION picture theatres in Houston which have but one exit must go if the city council follows the recommendation of George Wead, fire marshal. In a letter to the mayor and council Mr. Wead suggests that an ordinance be passed making it unlawful for any motion picture theatre proprietor to obtain a renewal of his license unless the theatre has more than one exit.

Mr. Wead contends that such action should be taken for the protection of the public. A panic in a small theatre with but one means of escape would prove calamitous, believes the fire marshal.

Mr. Wead also states in his letter that some motion picture theatre proprietors are allowing boys under eighteen years of age to operate motion picture machines, which is against the city ordinance regulating motion picture shows.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY"

(Thanhouser—Eleventh Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"IN the Path of the Fast Express," as this caption clearly implies, revives the old melodramatic expedient for arousing excitement and creating thrills. Jim, the hero of the all-absorbing tale, is bound fast to a railroad track by the conspirators, always plotting to bring about his death, with an express train momentarily nearing him.

But of course he is saved. It would put an end to the serial if he wasn't, besides disobeying all the laws of precedent. Flo manages to reach him, just soon enough to turn the switch and to send the train on another track. This situation, though employed much in the past, is always capable of arousing excitement when well done. A serial would be very tame, indeed, if it were not for its melodramatic situations which are the mainstay of each instalment.

JACKSON THREATENS THE LOVERS WITH DEATH

Before this, the main event of the episode, occurs, another scene worthy of attention is registered. This time the interior of the train is the scene of action. Flo and Jim are seated therein, bound for home. Unknown to them, the Countess and Jackson are also in the car.

Without any warning whatsoever, the car gives a terrific lurch, the occupants are thrown to the floor, and the next instant the car turns on its side, a wreck! And when the scene shifts to an exterior, the wrecking crews are seen, who arrived upon the scene of disaster in a remarkably short time, and gives added realism to the scenes.

The kidnapping of Flo by Jackson and an investigation of her whereabouts by Jim led to the denouement already described, but not until Jim had given his captors a great amount of trouble. After the rescue of Jim a thrilling fight is staged between the police and gang employed by the conspirators. The latter are completely overwhelmed and made captives.

"THE LOST PARADISE"

(Famous Players—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THE struggle of capital and labor offers a fertile field for dramatic interpretation. John Galsworthy has given us in "Strife" a strong play that takes sides with neither of the opponents in this great war, but he sets forth the awful waste and the appalling suffering that the conflict of workers and mill-owners causes, coldly and impartially giving the facts of the case as he sees them and leaving the reader or the spectator to draw the inevitable conclusion that there is some right and some wrong on each side, but that misunderstanding makes an unbridgeable gulf.

In "The Lost Paradise," however, the writers have taken no such judicial view. The sympathy is unmistakably with the down-trodden, over-worked and under-paid operatives, and the sole blame for the strike is laid upon the shoulders of the mill-owner. It is he that extracts a toll of suffering and hardship from the unfortunates in his employ, and in the end he has to pay for this with a penitent and broken spirit. The lofty pride that was once his vanishes, and he submits to the demands of the men and women under him, and leaves their welfare entirely in the hands of the young foreman who has stood through thick and thin as the conciliating medium between the opposing elements, in spite of the great wrong that the owner has done him in stealing his invention and turning it into profits to fill his already laden coffers. This all comes about through the daughter, who, despite being a pampered child of luxury, sees things clearly, and is at last won, heart and soul, by the courage and manly self-denial of the foreman.

She places her future in his hands, and together they go out to bring to the workers comfort and joy in the place of poverty and despair, and if the dreams of youth can ever be realized on this earth, to make of "The Lost Paradise" a "Paradise Regained."

This picture play affords another instance wherein the motion picture can avail itself of its opportunities and surpass in some respects the regular stage. No such wonderful factory scenes as these can ever be reproduced on the stage, even with the most skilful and industrious stage carpenter at work and with unlimited resources at his command, simply because they are made in sure-enough iron mills while the work is going on, and, even though photographs, they are real; whereas the stage factory must necessarily be make-believe, and, as everyone knows and as David Belasco has demonstrated to his lasting fame, the illusion of the make-believe is not as telling with our public as the illusion of the actual.

When it comes to mob scenes, and there are several in this play, the supremacy of the motion picture for this kind of thing is easily apparent. No matter how well trained a mob may be, when it is put on the stage it becomes awkward and ill at ease and doesn't know exactly what to do; its boisterous and unruly behavior is obliged to seem pretended; but in the picture play the mob scenes are made in the natural surroundings, and the mob, although it may be hired for the occasion, has the freedom of mill or outdoors and acts like a mob would act, and is without the handicap of being on show before an audience. The mill scenes in "The Lost Paradise" offer a good chance to study the possibilities of the photo-play in the field of realistic drama.

"WE ARE DEPENDING ON YOUR HELP!"

H. B. Warner is the bright particular star of this production, being cast in the part of the idealizing, yet energetic foreman. He gives fine poise and balance to a difficult role. Miss Catharine Carter plays opposite him, and she invests the luxury-loving but high-minded daughter with enough plausibility to overcome this seeming contradiction in her character.

"THE CRUISE OF THE 'MOLLY ANN'"

(New York Motion-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE slogan of Thomas H. Ince, the commander-in-chief of the directors of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, is evidently "action," and action of the most entertaining and rapid sort. In "The Cruise of the 'Molly Ann'" he has presented to the lovers of rapid and exciting events, combined with a well-knit story, one that will hold the interest from the very start to the last scene—a picture that will be enjoyed to the fullest extent.

The unthinking owner of the vessel, the deepest villainy of its mate, and the undying affection of the captain for his employer's daughter, are combined to make a forceful story, supplemented by the best of photography, a common merit in these films.

An old vessel is used to excellent advantage. The scenes in which the sailors are to be seen climbing among the rigging are exceptionally realistic. The fire in the hold, laid by the mate, paves the way for a strong scene and subsequently a powerful denouement. Rhea Mitchell, Walter Belasco, Harry Keenan and Walter Edwards are the principals.

FILMS WILL AID SUFFRAGE MOVEMENT

Special to The Motion Picture News.

St. Louis, Sept. 2.

The St. Louis Motion Picture Company are producing a four-reel photoplay, written by Mrs. Alice Curtice Moyer, a local suffrage leader, with equal suffrage as the theme.

The play has a strong plot, with much dramatic action and heart interest, and it will be exhibited by the League in the furtherance of the suffrage movement.

"THE BANDIT OF PORT AVON"

(Cosmofotofilm—Four Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THIS is a highly sensational melodrama. Such a statement should not be misunderstoood because the word "melodrama" is often applied to express utter opprobrium of badly acted drama making no pretensions to "mellow."

The film is pure melodrama, and fairly sizzles with sensation pitched in a high key. Some audiences will not like it —those whose tastes do not run to plays depending upon swift action. But judged by its own standards and not by the criterion of dramas of a wholly different type, "The Bandit of Port Avon" is an excellent production.

TRAPPED!

Perhaps you will not care for it, but you will book the picture if your patronage prefers a subject having assassinations, murderous set-tos, plot and counter-plot developed with irresistible swiftness by a capable cast. Nobody could doze in his seat, once the reel began to run, no matter how disappointed he might be in discovering the kind of film he had stumbled upon. The whiz of high pressure incidents would keep him awake, willy nilly.

No one can complain of slow, inconsequential scenes put in for the sake of mere padding. The excitement of sitting on the safety valve of an old-time Mississippi steamboat during a race in Mark Twain's days cannot compare with "The Bandit of Port Avon" for thrills.

But it must be remembered that there is a large public wanting just this kind of mental fare, and naturally it was for them that the picture was produced.

It takes twenty years for the villain to reach the end of his rope, but poetic justice is meted out to him at last in accordance with the established rules of melodrama.

The cast is Italian, and the majority of the scenes are laid in Italy. The emotional temperament of the Latin race is obvious in the acting of the players, and lends the necessary fire expected in the numerous tense situations.

The son of a miser dissipates his inheritance, and turns bandit at the disappearance of the last penny. In one of his robberies he commits wilful murder by shooting the victim without giving him a chance for his life. In the course of time the assassin endeavors to marry a woman of title. In using the dead man's letters to bring pressure upon another woman opposing the match he overreaches himself, for they are identified as the stolen property of the bandit's victim, establishing the long hidden guilt of the unscrupulous suitor.

COOL WEATHER BRINGS ALBANY THEATRES TO LIFE

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 3.

THE sorrowful days of the movie managers seem to be at an end in Albany, for last week a cold snap hit town, and as a result the picture houses were on the boom.

The weather man was certainly merciful in sending the wave of coolness, or it is believed that some of the smaller houses would have closed the doors.

"FACE VALUE"

(Edison—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is one of the many Edison pictures that is enjoyed by the readers of the "Popular Magazine," written by W. B. M. Fergusen. The picture will surely "get across," first because it is practically new and unconventional. It has a capable cast, which enacts the picture with remarkable comprehension. Ben Wilson and Sally Crute play opposite in the leading roles; these two are the only principals. Carleton King and Edward Earle appear in the less prominent parts.

There is an atmosphere of mystery that pervades the entire picture and holds the interest well. Although the story makes an excellent picture, it is obvious that it was not made for the screen, as there are too many subtitles.

This, perhaps, is the only fault. It is almost unnoticeable, as each one is absolutely necessary and explains the story perfectly. The photography and light is up to the usual high standard set by the Edison company.

The story starts in the West, opening with a realistic gambling scene; after a few hundred feet of film, the scene shifts to the city and a neighboring suburb.

WILDING PROTECTS HIS NEW ACQUAINTANCE

Because of bearing the same name as his dead pal, Peter Wilding journeys to the city to claim the former's fortune. It develops that the other Wilding was a crook and his old associates attempt to scare Pete by threatening death unless he pays them, but he is immune to all their demands.

His experiences with the crooks form a great part of the story, and his marriage to a woman whose past he is ignorant of constitutes something new and out of the ordinary, not the incident itself but the manner in which it is executed. The tale ends well for both husband and wife, the crooks are dispelled, and both learn that each other's past is untainted.

"THE MYSTERY OF THE POISON POOL"

(Picture Playhouse Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THE most experienced traveler in the wilds of Africa would certainly think upon seeing this picture that he was being taken back to the continent of his travels, and passing again through the dense, thick, luxuriant foliage of the broken, almost impassable regions that lie to the south of the equatorial line.

The fact that the pictures were all taken in Bermuda does not diminish the reality of the settings in the least because the atmosphere of the African jungle is evident in every scene.

The swarthy, lithe-bodied savages pass stealthily hither and thither through the heavy undergrowth, the oppressive, malarial heat beats down upon the white persons who have the hardihood to dare this climate and shows in the drawn features; the terror of the jungle, the African python, appears in deadly reality upon the barren rocks, and the adventurous spirit of the arrivals in a new land stands revealed in this reckless staking of all upon chance.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company has displayed discriminating judgment in the pictures that they have so far released, and this latest is fully up to the high standard that has been established by them. If anything, it may have a more human story maintaining the interest with better handling of the element of suspense and developing it with more actual thrills than those that have gone before.

The hero is a diamond prospector who falls into the hands of savages and gets away from that danger and from a python that blocks his escape for a tense moment through the generous aid of Corporal Walton. Joe is a hard, unflinching man until he is softened by meeting a little missionary in Ubangi, named Dorothy.

She is the only one that believes in his innocence when circumstances seem to point to his guilt as the murderer of a diamond miner. Corporal Walton tracks him down, loses in the fight, and then gets the upper hand of him in a fierce struggle, then learns that this is the man who has saved his life, and then gets the opportunity to reciprocate by carrying the officer back to the village on his back by sheer superior strength, keeping him from drinking of the poisoned pool. All this cannot be given except in bare outline here.

The innocence of Joe Cameron is established, and the girl saves him from the executioners by dashing through the wilderness with the countermanding orders, and all are happy at the end.

In the cast are such capable players as Betty Harte, James Gordon, E. A. Turner and Frank Sidwell, so one may be sure of seeing acting of high-class order. J. Searle Dawley wrote the scenario and superintended the production.

No better American photography has been seen in a long time than appears throughout these five reels, and the credit for this superior work is due to Charles Rosher.

"THE BOND OF LOVE"

(Eclectic—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

COLLEGE dramatic societies have often proven their ability in staging plays, and the same societies have produced more than one of the great actors of the present day, but it is doubtful if ever before they undertook to stage a motion picture, and their entrance into that line of dramatics marks a new era in the history of the college dramatic society.

"The Bond of Love" was written and played by the members of the Yale Dramatic Association; the only necessities that the Eclectic Film Company supplied them with were a director and a camera-man, the rest was left to the members of this society and they should be proud to have acquitted themselves creditably.

Of course, the picture deals with college life, and it is made a great deal more realistic than most purporting to do the same thing, because all the exteriors and a great many of the interiors were taken on the grounds and in the rooms of the university. And, again, all the cast has a complete idea of college life, and each one, because of this, entertains a more perfect understanding of his part, which he would not possess if he were not a student of the university.

Galliard Thomas and Newbold Moyes enact the roles of heavy and hero of the picture. These are the two important parts and are carried well by these two men.

Howard Cumming plays the father, Littlefield McCoy, the mother, and Rufus King, the girl, the sweetheart of Bob, the lead. The disguises of the two young men who assume the parts of girls are most clever, and if it were not for the notice before the picture, informing the observer of the fact that they were all men, it is certain that it would never enter his head that they were not.

In this brand of pictures it is almost superfluous to say that the photography and light are good, and the sets, those which were laid in the Eclectic studio, are almost as realistic as those filmed in and about the college, and indeed they ought to be, with such good examples to work from.

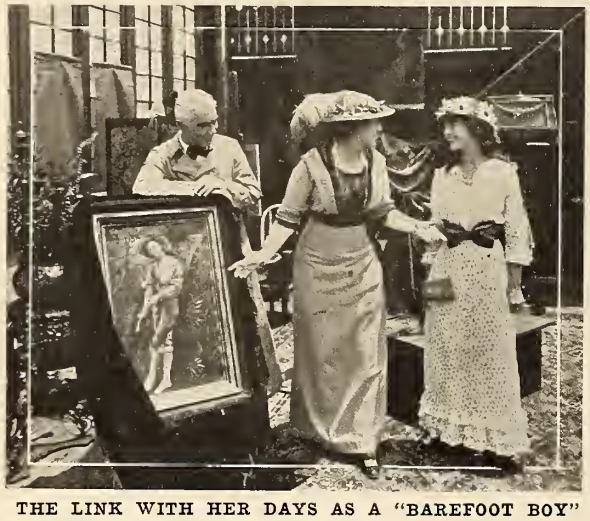
The success of the undertaking, apparently such a radical departure from dramatic traditions of college halls, will mark the inauguration of a series of university plays in Yale and other prominent institutions of learning. Pictures of this character will probably be made for permanently recording the dramatic activities of each class, thus constituting a "film library."

The story, perhaps, is a little conventional, but, then, this fact is overshadowed by the rest of the picture's merits. Bob, who has been brought up by his uncle, is sent to college with his cousin Eric. Bob is a hard worker; Eric is dull and backward. Eric cribs in his examination and Bob takes the blame for the love of the miscreant's sister.



"THE BAREFOOT BOY"

(Kalem—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

IT is not a boy at all that runs through the woods with bare fleet feet and "cheeks of tan," catching rabbits and prying out where the robin lays its eggs, and when hot and tired, splashing and spluttering in the cooling stream.

It is a little girl who leads this happy and carefree life, just as if she were a boy, but she never for a moment loses her maidenly modesty. She is a reincarnated Rosalind, younger and less meditative, but still sweet and simple-hearted and appealing.

THE LINK WITH HER DAYS AS A "BAREFOOT BOY"

This romantic masquerading of a girl in boy's attire, without being in the least original, because it has been done over and over again in song and story—yet if the girl is a girl, we like it, and she finds a man that, somehow, will not let mere clothes be a barrier in the way of his love—it is always refreshing and delightful in its whimsicality.

Just as Rosalind was forced by the cruelty of a wicked uncle to hide her identity under the guise of boy's clothes, so this little girl was given no choice in the matter. Her father raised her up as a boy because his wife had deserted him, and this act had engendered in his heart hatred of all womankind.

To Marguerite Courtot falls the pleasant duty of giving life to this buoyant spirit of the woods. In her delineation it is indeed a blithe, gay, light-hearted creature that runs hither and thither, and helps the father to forget his sorrow.

And when the time arrives for her to take off these masculine garments and to stand forth a blushing, winsome maiden of sixteen summers, she is the most piquant and charming little thing imaginable.

Intelligent and finished support is rendered by Miss Courtot and Tom Moore, as the artist who falls in love with her, and by Alice Hollister as the wife and mother.

The production as a whole is entirely adequate to reveal the best in these differing personalities, but one criticism can justly be laid at the door of the producer. In the third part we have a scene in the studio where the mother is left lying on the floor, and the next scene flashed shows the mother preparing to leave her home to go to the artist again. It would have been very easy to separate these scenes, which naturally have a gap between them, by one of the girl in her new home, or with the artist lover.

PARAMOUNT SERVICE SIGNED FOR SPOKANE HOUSE

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Spokane, Aug. 31.

Paramount pictures will make up the bills at the new quarter million dollar Clemmer Theatre, now building on the Lincoln street corner opposite the Davenport Hotel.

J. R. Cummock, of Seattle, northwestern representative of the Paramount service, has signed Dr. H. S. Clemmer to a contract, effective September 15. The Clemmer Theatre will not be completed until December.

"DICK POTTER'S WIFE"

(Edison—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THE days of fairy tales are over, we are told, but perhaps the world would be better off if there were a little more of the illusion here that in our childhood we felt was so real. Fays and fairies never grow old; they make us forget that there is such a thing, and if we could only believe a little more strongly in them and could become imbued with a little of their joy and blithe, and freedom from all care, how much happier we would be.

All of which is merely preliminary to the matter in hand, which is a motion picture in one reel called "Dick Potter's Wife," labeled a modern fairy story, deserving the rare distinction for a motion picture of embodying an entirely new idea. The credit of this achievement belongs to Frank Hart, the author.

Unlike the old familiar fairy tales, it does not introduce the ethereal beings of everywhere and nowhere; that would be going too far, perhaps, because none of us, including children, any longer believe in them—more's the pity. But it makes use of magic potions which could only be made by fairies.

And behind it all there is a lesson, a commentary on modern life. We know very well that back of every fairy tale there is a moral, if we are discerning enough to see it.

POTTER DOESN'T KNOW HIS OWN WIFE

Here is a warning against the danger of growing old and humdrum, a presentation of the necessity of keeping young in spirit and feeling, if not in body.

The wife has become a nagger and has driven out all the love that the husband once had for her. The terrible truth comes home too late, and in desperation she goes to an old gypsy woman and buys a bottle of liquid, perhaps from the fountain that Ponce de Leon did not find, because it has the magical properties of restoring youth.

But the wife takes too much, and becomes a little girl, unrecognized by her husband. He hires a governess in spite of her protests, and the poor wife has to see this woman forcing her way into her husband's affection.

Another philter that she gets from the gypsy brings back her natural appearance, and she gets back her husband.

SPECIAL FILM REVIEWS

"The Attorney's Decision." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Aug. 26.)—A story that will make a strong bid for the favor of lovers of pictures that have plenty of complications and moments of dramatic intensity.

The weight of money decides the marriage of a girl to a broker, to whom her father has lost money and finds himself in debt. The jilted young man becomes district attorney and it is up to him to press an indictment for crooked methods against the husband of the woman he loves. She persuades him to drop the charge, then finds out what her husband is and relieves him of his promise. The threat of divorce is held over the girl's head unless she holds the lawyer to his given promise, but relief comes to all in the death of the broker at the hands of the lover of the dancer he has tried to wrong.

"Helping Mother." (Rex. Three reels. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—An excellent Universal feature in which Lois Weber and Philip Smalley are the main characters. It is certain that the picture will appeal to all classes and ages, as a picture with such a sympathetic story will naturally attract the public.

Joe and his wife are destitute. She gets a position as maid. Joe learns to run an automobile and is hired by the same family. He forgets his wife and runs away with his mistress, the children remain the wife's sole comforters. He meets his death when the automobile explodes. This scene is done excellently. The wife still waits for his return, but after a long time she marries the secretary of her employer, who was left all his money.

"The Path to Ruin." (Kalem. Sat., Sept. 12.)—Two men and one woman pass through the vicissitudes of life with love still the strongest element in their lives, yet the years have brought many changes. The man that did not win the girl is now a prominent surgeon, and the rich man whom she married has lost all and is forced to fire a furnace. He is terribly burned, and it is nothing but the extraordinary skill of the surgeon that saves his life. Gratitude is strong in the heart of the girl, but the love in the heart of the man who lost is greater than ever, and he avoids a meeting for fear that he may forget himself.

Robert Ellis, Irene Boyle and Cecil Ryan enact this three-sided drama with telling force.

BOBBY ADDRESSES THE DIRECTORS
Scene from "Bobby Burnit" (Lasky-Paramount Feature)

"The Devil's Dansant." (Kalem. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 7.)—The craze of the modern woman for excitement and the dangerous lengths to which she will go to satisfy this craving, is the theme of this two-part drama by Hamilton Smith. The potentialities of such a theme in dramatic action are fully realized, and the intensity is strongly heightened by the skilful manipulation of the element of suspense.

Alice Hollister has the leading role, the wife of the district attorney and the frequenter of the dansant against which her husband is gathering evidence. The startling meeting of husband and wife in the raid brings out the fine capacity of this actress for emotionalism. There are incidental dances by Arthur Albertson and Elsie Cohan. The settings in the dansant are entirely adequate.

"Through the Dark." (Reliance-Mutual. Two reels. Sat., Aug 29.)—Played exceptionally well by Francelia Billington, Billie West, Sam De Grasse and Eugene Pallette. The pictures tell how a girl burdened with the disgrace of a crime of which she was innocent, managed to make a living and finally to marry happily. When her husband is told of her supposed theft he commands her to leave him, but the real thief confesses and all ends well. Fine photography.

"Uncle's Finish." (Hartigan-Eclectic. One reel.)—It all happens in a dream, how Uncle is gotten rid of when he becomes somewhat troublesome to the other fellow, but it is nevertheless very funny. Uncle is disturbing the younger man when he wishes to sleep, and then in his sleep he dreams that he packs Uncle up as a dead body and ships him to a doctor's office.

The doctor is not in when the coffin arrives, and the young lady secretary has to receive the package. Her actions are uproarious because the body soon comes to life, and has a merry time frightening everybody almost of of their wits. About this time the sleeper wakes up, and to his utter surprise, he finds Uncle sitting in the room with him, as sound and whole of body as he ever was.

"Frenchy." (Majestic-Mutual. Two reels. Sun., Aug. 30.)—A very clever character portrayed by Vester Pegg, assisted admirably by Fred Burns and Francelia Billington. It is one of the first pictures directed by Donald Crisp. Frenchy is made the butt of fun by all the cowboys, but he proves their equal many times, and finally earns their everlasting admiration by saving the life of his employer's daughter. He then leaves the ranch, as he sees that the foreman is jealous of his advances toward the girl.

COBB CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

A birthday party was tendered to C. Lang Cobb, Jr., at his home in the Chestershire Apartment, 570 West 183d street,, New York City, on Tuesday evening, August 25. The guests present were:

Mr. Claude Patin, Mr. and Mrs. Homer H. Snow, Mr. and Mrs. Paolino Gerli, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis T. Gimpel, Mrs. K. A. Cobb, Mrs. Josephine K. Egan, Mr. Joseph Meehan, Mr. Edmondo Gerli, Miss Josephine Egan Cobb, Miss Olive Gimpel, Miss Lois Gimpel, Miss Pauline Gerli, Master Francis Gerli, C. Lang and Agnes Egan Cobb.

Among the many gifts received were two particularly worthy of comment. One was a birthday cake made by Mrs. Egan, which measured at least twenty-four inches across. This cake was covered with candles set in little rosebuds, and C. Lang, being the person guilty of the birthday, lit the candles and then cut the cake.

While the ceremony was in progress, Agnes Egan Cobb forthwith spoke up and presented C. Lang with a beautiful solitaire, which you may have a peep at if you watch the small finger of his left hand. The "punch" was very good.

FILM PIONEER JOINS HORSLEY

As the result of negotiations which have been carried on for several weeks between David Horsley and W. G. Gilmore, the last named gentleman left California and arrived in Bayonne, New Jersey, last week to become manager of the factory and plant of the Centaur Film Company.

Mr. Gilmore got his start in the motion picture lusiness under David Horsley, when the latter was releasing the Nestor brand once every week.

Mr. Gilmore soon became business manager. Under his care releases increased to three a week and sales jumped forward with leaps and bounds.

A larger factory soon became necessary, a new one was built in Bayonne under Mr. Gilmore's supervision.

Early in 1912 when Mr. Gilmore had all arrangements made to go to Europe to establish agencies for the Nestor, he received a telegram from David Horsley, who was then at Hollywood, California, requesting him to come to the west coast to systematize matters there before going abroad.

TAKE KLEINE FEATURES

Lubliner & Trinz, managers of the Biograph and Vitagraph Theatres, in Chicago, Ill., have arranged to show a number of George Kleine's pictures, among which are "Quo Vadis?," "Antony and Cleopatra," "The Last Days of Pompeii," "Between Savage and Tiger" and "The Lion of Venice."

Buffalo Exhibitors Prepare for Big Business

Theatres Plan Extensive Advertising Campaign—Will Use Liberal Newspaper Space—Prices Range from Ten to Fifty Cents

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 3.

WELL, it's started. Oh, no! Not war. It is just the opening gun in the competition engagement that is beginning in Buffalo. New photoplay theatres are beginning to open their doors to the public. And each manager thinks that his is the only theatre in town. Which, perhaps, is natural.

Shea's new and large Hippodrome opens with the first of the Paramount releases as the attraction. The Strand, to offset this added competition, has just closed contracts for the two largest electric signs in Buffalo in the downtown section atop two of the largest buildings and almost across the street from that theatre. These signs will be utilized to proclaim "from the housetops" that those who believe in "safety first" should not forget the Strand.

Another use will be to show the list of coming attractions which will be shown at this theatre at no increase in price. The highest price at the Strand is ten cents; at Shea's, fifty. Among the stars which Manager Edel has booked are Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, Raymond Hitchcock, William Collier, and several other equally famous artists. He will also show "The Littlest Rebel," "The House Next Door," "Neptune's Daughter," and a similar list of attractions. Next Sunday the Strand advertising campaign for the fall will open. Bills will be used about the city for the first time this year. These will take the form of large semaphore signs proclaiming "Safety first at the Strand." The largest ads ever inserted in the amusement sections of the local papers will be inserted.

Many local managers are of the opinion that the opening of Shea's Hippodrome will not hurt the downtown houses in the least, because of the often proved fact that Buffalonians will not pay more than ten cents for motion pictures no matter what the feature. The Strand has been showing Lasky and Famous Players films at the latter price.

It remains to be seen whether they will pay twenty-five and fifty at the Hippodrome. Some are inclined to think that the Elmwood will notice the opening of the Hippodrome, because this theatre gets a large percentage of Buffalo's automobile motion picture patrons who, if anybody, will pay the prices asked at the Hippodrome.

Be Sure You Get What You Think You Are Paying For!

Don't let any salesman pull the wool over your eyes by trying to persuade you that he can give you any screen "just as good" as Radium Gold Fibre Screen. There is no such thing. There are lots of people trying to make one just as good, but up to the present they have not even gotten close to it. However, their attempts have cost money. They need more money to continue their experiments. Don't be the sucker who is going to fall for their smooth talk. Don't buy any screen you have not fully investigated. There are "niggers in the wood pile." There is only one place you can get an absolutely perfect screen. In fact, there is only one perfect screen. That one has proved itself to thousands of buyers. It is the

Live News of the Week

Another wedding took place in the exchange ranks of Washington, D. C., when A. Dresner, directing the Universal forces at the Washington Film Exchange, and Miss Rose Mongal, of Baltimore, Md., were married on August 30. The happy couple are enjoying a honeymoon in New York, Buffalo and Niagara Falls, ending in Pittsburgh, where Mr. Dresner will be located in the future. As a token of esteem the local Screen Club presented its president, Mr. Dresner, with two $20 gold pieces.

Mr. Dresner will not sever his connections entirely with Washington film circles, for he will retain the presidency of the Screen Club until after its ball, which will take place in October, at which event he promises to be present with his bride.

Anna Laughlin, who is now playing leads for the Life Photo Film Corporation, has had a long and varied stage experience. Born in Sacramento, Cal., her first entry to the stage was effected in that state, when she appeared as Arthur May in "Rosedale," at the tender age of six.

Some of her more recent and well-known engagements are her appearances with the "Wizard of Oz" company, in which she appeared as Dorothy Gale. Still later she played with Eddie Foy in "Mr. Hamlet of Broadway," and followed that with a season in vaudeville alone. In 1913 she entered the Reliance company, where she played leads for a year, and then returned to the stage, in "When Claudie Smiles," which had a successful run in New York last winter. When her engagement with this company terminated, she entered the Life Photo's employ, where she has been ever since.

One of the first young women to play an important part in editing films and preparing lithograph paper is Eleanor L. Fried, of Warner's Features, Incorporated.

She is possessed of qualifications which well fit her for this work. As a member of Warner's editorial board, she assists in passing on all films submitted, and decides how those accepted should be cut and altered to procure the best effects. She also selects the scenes for lithographic production and assists in criticising the artists' sketches.

ELEANOR L. FRIED

Mitchel H. Mark, Moe Mark, Eugene Falk, Walter Hayes and Harold Edel, of Buffalo, made an extended tour through New York and Massachusetts last week. They visited Rochester, Syracuse, New York and Boston, where they looked over the Mark interests in those cities. Mr. Edel returned on Friday, while the remainder of the party went to the Berkshire Hills.

Edna Flugrath is a young American actress, formerly with the Edison company, and now a member of one of the stock companies of the London Film Company, Ltd., of London, England, whose American representatives are the Cosmofotofilm Company, of New York City.

EDNA FLUGRATH

She takes the part of Lady Betty, daughter of Lord Talbot, secretary to the British prime minister, in the film entitled "England's Menace."

Miss Flugrath began her stage career as a child, playing in "Newport News" with Peter Daly and appearing as Heinrich and Little Minnie with Joseph Jefferson. Her last appearance on the stage was in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." She was a member of the Edison company for about a year, but in that short time she won a well-deserved place in the esteem of the plotoplay-going public.

Carl H. Pierce, who handled the "John Barleycorn" campaign for Bosworth, Inc., in Philadelphia, has been appointed publicity man for that concern. Mr. Pierce's first efforts in his new position will be in the Philadelphia territory, where he started business on September 1. He has had many years of experience in handling publicity campaigns and is a man well qualified for the position.

In honor of Major Daniel Gilfether, who has been on the stage for forty years and who is now nearing his sixtieth birthday, the members of the Balboa Amusement Company, at Long Beach, California, the company with which he is now connected is planning an elaborate entertainment for the old stage veteran.

Major Gilfether is a native of Boston and has played in stock, has been starred individually in a number of plays, and has played in support of such stars as Robert Mantell, Chauncey Olcott, Annie Pixley and Frank Mayo.

Frank Montgomery and Princess Mona Darkfeather, well known leads of the Kalem Indian pictures, were visitors at the Centaur studios in Bayonne, New Jersey, recently.

Robert Conness comes from a family long known in the annals of the American stage. His stage connections have been with the Frohmans in the "Prisoner of Zenda," "Colonial Girl" and "The Bachelor's Baby," and he has starred with

ROBERT CONNESS

Mary Mannering, Blanche Walsh and Hedwig Richer.

Mr. Conness made his first appearance before the camera in the Edison studio about five years ago in "His Daughter," "Children Who Labor," "Church and Country" and "Van Bibber's Experiment." Since then he has been steadily engaged in theatrical productions, but now he has returned to the Edison Stock Company.

The first picture of the Photo Drama Producing Company, of Turin, Italy, "The Lion of Venice," is now ready for release through the various exchanges of George Kleine in this country.

MABEL NORMAND AND HER RACER

Charles W. Denzinger, well known in theatrical circles throughout western New York state, has taken charge of the Olympic Theatre, Buffalo. Mr. Denzinger is a Buffalonian who has been identified with things theatrical from early youth. He was for many years treasurer of Shea's Theatre in that city and later directed the Shea enterprises in Cleveland. He was recently in charge of the Kinemacolor plant in California. M. Slotkin, former manager, will devote his attention entirely to the management of the Olympic Amusement Company.

Stanly H. Twist, president of the Inter-Ocean Sales Company, has moved his offices from the World's Tower Building, New York City, to the fifth floor of the Times Building, where he will occupy part of the Standard Film Corporation's new suite.

The Commercial Club, of Marquette, Mich., has signed contracts with the Dietz Newman Picture Company, of Mayville, Wis., manufacturers of the Ishpeming films, to take a series of pictures 2,500 feet in length, showing the city of Marquette. It is their intention to exhibit them at the Panama Exposition next year. Work has already commenced.

Edward N. Milligan, chief director of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, Philadelphia, will shortly leave for Newport, R. I., with a company, to take a number of pictures. Bennie Zeidman, manager of the advertising and publicity departments of that concern, has made arrangements with the naval authorities of Newport to produce these pictures with their cooperation.

Owing to the death of his sister, Harry C. Drum, general representative of the World Film Corporation, has been called to Chicago.

Mae Marsh, one of the leading women of the Reliance and Majestic companies, attributes much of her success in the motion picture field to the fact that she is "pug ugly." Miss Marsh first played with the Biograph

MAE MARSH

Company and then a year later enacted a character lead in D. W. Griffith's picture, "The Escape."

Later she appeared as Apple Pie Mary in "Home, Sweet Home." She is now acting the feminine lead in "The Great God Fear," which is being produced at Bear Lake Valley, Cal.

Arthur S. Hyman, formerly manager of the New Orleans office of the World Film Corporation, now holds the same position in the Atlanta branch of the company.

The San Francisco Censorship Board, which has not permitted war pictures to be shown which are more favorable to one side than the other, has commended George Kleine's war film, "European Armies in Action." The subtitles are carefully written and give no offense to the different nationalities, and the whole picture is presented in an impartial manner. For these reasons the Censor Board saw its way clear to pass the picture as it stood.

It is not an uncommon event to hear that the police or fire department of some small town have been fooled by a motion picture company in the art of taking a scene, so anxious are they to observe their duties, but a little incident in connection with the production of "Money"

JAMES KEANE AND HIS LEADING WOMAN

at Fairfax, California, by the United Keanograph Company, seems more ridiculous than most.

The picture has to do with counterfeiters, and one of Keane's friends notified the detective service that a band of counterfeiters was operating in Fairfax with the result that a detective investigated. He was well fooled at first and when he was enlightened that a picture was in the course of progress, admitted the joke was on him.

Julius Stern, manager of the Imp studios of the Universal Company, has been appointed supervisor of the productions of the Victor staff as well. The following directors are under Mr. Stern's supervision: Herbert Brenon, Frank Crane, George Lessey, George Roubert, Walter Edwin, Ben Wilson and Harry Meyers.

Harry E. Aitkin, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and Roy Aitkin, of the same concern, recently visited the San Francisco offices of the corporation. Local conditions were gone over carefully with J. R. Crane, and after a few days' stay the visitors resumed their trip of inspection, starting home by way of Los Angeles.

Manager Price, of the Mutual exchange, Omaha, Neb., has started the Continental features there, with great success, he says. E. Epstein, formerly assistant manager, is now manager of the feature department. A manager has been appointed for every department in the exchange, after the style followed in many eastern offices. Manager Price says that these men, by giving their entire time to their own department, are enabled to specialize and can give individual attention and thought to every exhibitor.

Dr. H. L. Stafford, the well-known fiction and technical writer, is the latest addition to the scenario department of the Universal Western studios. He has been assigned as scenario writer for Henry McRae, to the 101 Bison Company. His first picture is called "The Law of the Range," from the story by William Groves Barrows.

A comprehensive method of exploiting motion pictures has been adopted by the publicity department of the Selig Polyscope Company. It is in the form of a "Release Herald" and contains synopsis of all the Selig releases for the month of September.

Buffalo exhibitors had their first chance to see "The Littlest Rebel," at the Allendale Theatre, when George H. Verbeck, of 15 West Swan street, gave a private exhibition of this feature recently. Mr. Verbeck controls the rights of the film for New York state. The Strand Theatre, Buffalo, will show the film.

Following the lead furnished her by a late American release, "This is th' Life," in which modern electric appliances are introduced on the farm, Vivian Rich, of that company, is having her machine equipped with all the latest electrical devices. Miss Rich and her mother are contemplating a series of excursions among the Coast Range Mountains.

Andy Clark, the ten-year-old actor of the Edison comedies, has just returned from his vacation at West Hampton, Long Island. He claims to have landed one of the largest bluefish ever caught in the neighboring waters.

THE DUEL SCENE IN "SEATS OF THE MIGHTY"
(Colonial Motion Picture Company's Feature)

The National Film Producing Company, which commenced business at 111 Turk street, San Francisco, Cal., has been compelled to seek larger quarters and is now located at 220 Post street, in that city. Commercial work is being turned out, but plans are being made for making a number of comedy films. The concern, of which E. N. Dusenberry is general manager, is preparing to incorporate under a different name with a capital of $50,000.

T. H. Bargman, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Los Angeles, Cal., made a trip over the kite-shaped track of the Santa Fe Railroad recently in the interests of that concern. He was well pleased with the business conditions in practically all the small cities visited, and procured many orders for feature pictures.

Vincent Trotta, formerly advertising artist of the Gaumont Company, has severed his relations with that concern. While he was with the Gaumont Company he prepared many of their composite posters and was responsible for all the cartoon advertising published by Gaumont and Melies.

Mr. Trotta is a brother of Joseph Trotta, the gold medalist, and besides doing work for the Gaumont Company has supplied a number of comical sketches to "Life" and other well-known comic journals. He is a capable artist and possesses an unusual amount of originality.

Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World Film Corporation, is now on a business trip, visiting the cities of Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit, Toronto and Montreal. At the expiration of this trip Mr. Selznick will make another journey to the Pittsburgh office and then westward to the Pacific coast branches.

The Chicago branch of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company installed a motion picture orchestra in the Star Theatre, 1516 West Sixty-third street, Chicago, on August 17. Harry Rose is the proprietor of the theatre.

The Galveston (Texas) store of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company recently installed motion picture orchestras in the Orpheum Theatre, Texas City; the Gem Theatre, Houston; and the Star Theatre, Galveston.

In addition to many two and three-reel subjects, all the branch offices of George Kleine are now equipped with prints of "Spartacus" and "The Lion of Venice," and are now equipped to meet the needs of every variety of motion picture theatres. Orders in all the offices are taken care of promptly.

E. Meadows, who was formerly engaged as salesman for the Colonial Motion Picture Corporation, has severed his connections with that concern. He has plans to work out a motion picture advertising proposition that bids fair to be one of the most serious undertakings along this line.

Before entering the motion picture business Mr. Meadows was an advertising man and has given this phase of the motion picture industry particular study. His plans in connection with this new business will be announced in the near future.

The Milwaukee Poster Mounting Company announces the opening of a branch office in Minneapolis, Minn., at 252 First avenue North, of which John Delorenzo will assume the management. His brother, Frank Delorenzo, will be in charge of the Milwaukee office.

Increasing business warranted this extension, and in a short time the company contemplates opening branch offices in all the principal exchange centers in the United States and Canada.

The Beauty picture, "The Other Train," while enjoying a run at the Palace Theatre, Santa Barbara, Cal., has been favorably commended by all who have seen it. The fine work of Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer, the two leads, has called for a great amount of praise and there are few who do not term it one of the best.

George Kleine's four-part subject, "European Armies in Action," which shows military and naval movements of the European Powers, opened a week's engagement on August 10, at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago.

W. F. Barrett, former manager of the feature department of the General Film Company in Canada, has been put in charge of the Toronto office of the World Film Corporation.

The Sterling Camera and Film Company, while disposing of the state rights of "The Land of the Lost," are giving the buyers preference of all the features of the company to follow. The intention is to release one multiple reel subject each month.

Trade Notes from Abroad

By M. H. SCHOENBAUM

The first proof that war is a return to the state of barbarity is given by the fact that the cinematographic expositions which were announced recently in London, Paris, Budapest, Dusseldorf, etc., will not take place.

The African Film trust having signed various contracts with European manufacturers, the government has increased the existing customs duty by adding a new tax of five shillings per 100 feet on foreign films. The trust, it is said, will suffer heavy losses owing to the absence of clauses in the contracts providing against contingencies.

If the war had not been declared and the London motion picture exposition opened, its visitors would have had a surprise in the form of a striking innovation. The officers of the exposition organized an amateur acting contest which promised to be amusing, indeed.

The demand in Europe, before the beginning of the war, was for scientific and other serious subjects; the public there seems to be tired of drama and ordinary comical films.

A new society has recently been founded in Vienna for the purpose of photographing all scenes and monuments which are liable to disappear, so as to transmit their images to future generations.

WHO MADE
"THE LITTLEST REBEL"
"NORTHERN LIGHTS"
"CAPTAIN SWIFT"
THE ANSWER IS:
EDGAR LEWIS
SOLE AND ONLY PRODUCING DIRECTOR

"CAPTAIN SWIFT"

(Life Photo—Five Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THE company made a judicious selection of the players cast for the roles, the photography merits particular notice and the staging reveals a mastery of a difficult branch of the film art. The director, Edgar Lewis, sprung a succession of compelling scenes, rendered intensely dramatic by "flash backs" effecting telling contrasts. This skilful arrangement of material prevented the action of a long story dragging from its own weight.

The Life Photo Company has accomplished an almost impossible achievement—the production of a motion picture that maintains interest throughout, in spite of the fact that the plot is threadbare, presents no new angle and contains scenes whose pivotal action is based on an assumption of blindness to improbabilities. This, let it be repeated, is an achievement.

For with all the defects in the scenario, the author's liberal use of "long-armed coincidence" in bringing characters together in chance meetings; his claptrap devices for identifying long-lost persons; the old-fashioned illegitimate child plot, borrowed from the Bertha M. Clay school of fiction; the strain on one's belief in the limits of maternal instinct; regardless of all these handicaps, the Life Photo Company has succeeded in producing a film of absorbing interest.

It implies too much trust on the part of an audience to ask them to believe in the possibility of a mother's ability to recognize her son twenty-five years after parting with him at the age of six months or less.

The author, C. Haddon Chambers, an English dramatist who some years ago brought out a play whose plot consisted of the marriage between a sentimental and idealistic curate bent on reforming the whole world and a lady in an occupation ancient (but not honored), shows the same inclination to make use of disagreeable subjects for plot material.

He builds up the incidents of the story with the deliberate intention of gaining the sympathy for a character that starts life handicapped with a bar sinister and winds up as a notorious outlaw. Mr. Chambers makes the man stop short of murder, and then as a sop to the universal desire to see poetic justice meted out to transgressors the villain (or shall we say, "hero"?) dies in the last act.

The Australian scenes, represented with pleasing fidelity to the original locale by the director, reveal Mr. Chambers as a close and appreciative student of those parts in Henry Kingsley's "Geoffery Hamlyn" and Charles Reade's "It Is Never Too Late to Mend," depicting life at the antipodes.

David Wall as Captain Swift renders a role demanding vigor, with a full knowledge of the difficulties involved in the undertaking, and acquits himself satisfactorily. William H. Tooker played the foster brother with spirit and animation.

"THE HUMAN SOUL"

(Box Office—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

A PHOTOGRAPH of the human soul is something that philosophers and scientists have dreamed about and mused over in their idle moments, but, like the philosopher's stone, the wisest even have always found it beyond their attainment.

In this picture there is a photograph of the soul caught just after life departed from the body, and upon this the story hinges. It is an entirely novel and original idea in motion pictures, and, so far as our knowledge goes, in literature as well.

The return of persons in spiritual form after death to influence the lives of dear ones is not new, either in stories or in the drama, but this photograph is equally effective and has the advantage of greater probability.

The scene of the story is Southern California, amidst the ruins of the earlier Mission period. The luxuriousness of the California foliage and the tropical brilliance of the southern sun form a background that is in striking contrast to the sombre story.

The full value of this contrast is appreciated by the director, and none of the details of setting have been chosen without thought and care. Photography plays its full part in producing the desired effect, and nothing is lost in this well-considered contrast through faulty or indistinct pictures.

The acting is in the hands of an all-star cast, including Henry Stanley, as Juan Palores, the inventor of the comera. Madeline Pardee, as Catherine, his wife, whose soul is photographed; Bruce Smith, as Father Fabien, a Mission padre, the kindly spirit whose advice and guardianship is always for good in the lives of these people; Jane Dey, as Alice, Palores' daughter, who is saved from eloping with a scoundrel by the wonderful photograph; Francis McDonald, as Robert Thompson, the suitor of Alice, and Robert Grey, as Hernandez, the scoundrel who almost steals the girl away.

"LOLA"

(Amreican—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THE saddest thing oftentimes about a career on the dramatic or the operatic stage is the irreparable break that it causes with the folks that are left at home. Sometimes the girl whose ambitions lead her toward the footlights is forced to burn all of her bridges behind her, and never again, no matter how sorely her heart yearns, can she find the old place, the affections of those to whom she was once dear.

This is the case of Lola exactly. She first sang in the church choir of the town; she attracted attention by the beauty of her voice, and became a prima donna. She is now playing for the first time in her home town, and the memory of the old ties that have been so sharply broken comes back to her.

She longs for the forgiveness of her people, and she goes to her old home. She finds her sister making her living as a dressmaker, married to a former suitor of hers who is now blind. The shock of the girl's running away had killed the father.

The sister has always pretended that she is Lola and the poor fellow has never known the difference. Lola does not reveal the secret, plants a kiss upon the little daughter's cheek and departs from these scenes of her girlhood which have changed so sadly in her absence and never reveals the sister's secret.

The story is very simple, almost fragmentary, but it is handled with delicate touches and it arouses the keenest sympathy and holds it.

Winifred Greenwood, as the ambitious girl who has become a famous prima donna, reveals a subtle grasp of the moods and the temperament of the artist. But it is not a flighty person that she is supposed to be, and Miss Greenwood gives us a clear portrayal of the yearning for home in the midst of a life of homelessness.

"LITTLEST REBEL" WILL OPEN SYRACUSE HOUSE

Owing to the inability of the management of the Regent Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., to secure "The Nightingale," the All-Star release featuring Ethel Barrymore, with which to open their house, they booked "The Littlest Rebel," which was shown when the theatre opened on August 29.

In a popularity contest held by the Star Theatre, 483 Third avenue, New York City, Darwin Karr, the Vitagraph player, poled the largest vote

"Lay Down Your Arms" Argues for Peace

Great Northern Film Company's Powerful Production, Founded on the First Book to Expose War Horror, Affects Spectators

THE Great Northern Film Company's masterful production of "Lay Down Your Arms," although it has been pronounced one of the greatest war pictures ever staged, is not a war film in the fullest sense of the word. It does not parade the pomp and eclat of militarism, nor does it present any of the so-called glories of war, but it emphasizes the horrors of war and its utter barbarity and undesirability.

"Lay Down Your Arms," as the title implies, is therefore an anti-war picture and is all the more timely. A story which ought to excuse or advocate war would be decidedly de trop just now during the stress of an overabundance of belligerency, when so many people have come to abhor war.

Baroness Von Suttner's novel of "Lay Down Your Arms" was the first book to expose the terrible features of war, and the photoplay which is founded upon the book, is likewise the first time that war has been censured by means of the motion picture. By the same token, this film is the first picture to argue for universal peace. But in addition it possesses a powerful story, enacted with vividness and staged on a gigantic scale. It is an unusual production in that it contains as realistic battle scenes as have ever been seen anywhere except at an actual seat of war.

The power of the photoplay is exemplified in the fact that at private exhibitions of the film, spectators have left the projection room after the exhibition with tears in their eyes, moved by the tensely dramatic story, and the realism of the pictured calamities that follow in the wake of war.

While the photoplay is timely now, it is a subject that will be timely always, because of its great argument for universal peace, which has been so earnestly advocated in recent years, and will probably be urged more strongly than ever after the present conflict is over. The European war is in itself an argument for peace.

"Lay Down Your Arms" is destined to have far-reaching effects. It will prove a great stimulus to the cause of peace by creating greater hatred for war, thus enlisting new advocates of peace.

The Operator's Exchange

Problems of the Operator

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This section is designed to be of service to the experienced operator for assistance in the solution of problems of the booth. No matter how long an operator has been following his profession points are constantly arising upon which he feels the necessity of expert advice. It is with this purpose in mind that the present department has been inaugurated.

How to Handle Carbons

I. B. asks: I don't understand much about theories but I would like to know if there is any theory regarding carbons and what other people before me have tried to do.

Thanking you in anticipation, etc.

Answer: Carbons must be handled with great care. In order to get good results they must be set at the proper distance, which varies between three and six millimeters, according to the intensity or strength of current. As you probably already know, when used with direct current, the positive carbon is of greater diameter than the negative one.

When an alternating current is employed the carbons are generally of equal diameter.

With direct current the positive carbon must be a little behind the negative. In other words not quite as near to the condenser as the negative, while when using alternating current the carbons may be opposite each other.

In any case, it is always wise to have a few sets of carbons at hand. It has proven to be more economical than to have to run for them just when you need them. If you add your own experience of carbons to the above I don't doubt that you will never be bothered by any carbon trouble.

I must add that you will find a little more information connected with carbons if you read our recent article on the manufacture of carbons and one that appeared several months ago on arc controllers.

What Causes Finger Prints

S. W. F. asks: I have been myself an operator for many years and now I am the owner of the theatre where I have a very good operator whom I pay a fair price. I am puzzled by the fact that every time my operator returns a film to the exchange the latter complains of finger spots which I never heard of before, when I was an operator myself. Can you tell me if the films manufactured now are different from those of a few years ago?

Answer: The films manufactured to-day are not much different from those manufactured when you were engaged as an operator, at least as far as finger spots are concerned. The trouble, I believe, is due to perspiration and there is little doubt that the moisture which exudes from the pores of your skin is or was less acid or strong than that of your operator. You will get rid of spots of any kind in future if you give your operator a pair of cheap silk or similar gloves, unless you prefer to buy a few rubber finger protectors which he will also be able to use when manipulating electric wires, lenses, etc.

Quick Drying Films

G. R. asks: Can you tell me if there is a reliable method for speedily drying films after they are developed? I do most of my camera work outside and my films must be shown soon after they have been taken.

Answer: Drying films as quickly as possible is a problem which has been solved in several instances. You will perhaps be interested in seeing the film drying department of the Standard Film Print Corporation, 120 School street, Yonkers, N. Y., where four electric heaters of a k.w. tach have been installed and which warm the film on the drum while it is revolving.

The drums of the Standard Film Print Corporation are ten feet long and nine feet in diameter, and each one takes 2,000 feet of film. They are revolved by electric motors at the rate of fifty revolutions per minute.

On a dry day the films are said to be dry after half an hour. On a day when there is considerable moisture in the air, the electric heaters do their work in an hour or an hour and a half. The above process enables the company to turn out 40,000 feet of film a day with the machinery on hand.

The time for drying may still be reduced, if additional blades are arranged within the center of the drum so as to disturb the air inwardly and distribute it on both sides of the film.

WHY ?

Why is it a fact that a man who has invested many thousands of dollars in a theatre, for the display of motion pictures, will, without question, turn his projection over to the tender mercies of an inexperienced operator?

How can the manager expect to obcertain results when he will insist on engaging an operator at the ordinary prevailing rate of wages, instead of taking into consideration the fact that the class of patrons to whom he expects to cater will naturally look for something better than the average projection in the better class of house?

The operator who applies for a position in the class of theatre that is lately being devoted to the exposition of the motion picture art, naturally expects to receive a little larger remuneration, for his work, than he would expect in an ordinary store-show. And in return, he realizes that a little better work is expected from him.

In fact, he expects a SALARY instead of WAGES, and knows that first-class results are demanded from him, instead of ordinary projection.

The manager does not take into consideration the experience or ability of the applicant, but engages the man who offers his services at the prevailing rate.

Just as long as this condition prevails, just so long will poor projection predominate in the better class of theatre.

If I can obtain the same salary for working in a small theatre on Eighth avenue that I can at Hammerstein's Lexington Avenue Opera House, and with less worry on my part, why should I desire to work at said opera house?

Honor does not buy beef, and it is a rather DOUBTFUL HONOR at best.

UNION DEMANDS INCREASE

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 3.

Union motion picture operators have notified the proprietors of the Cleveland picture houses that beginning September 1 the scale of wages demanded will be raised $5 a week. Under the present scale the minimum wage is $15 and the maximum is $25. Under the scale presented by the operators the minimum will be $20 and the maximum $30.

A meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be held soon to take action upon the situation. The sentiment of the members is that the demand of the operators is prohibitively high.

The exhibitors received their first intimation of the union demand last Friday. President Samuel Morris, of the exhibitors' organization, stated that it would be impossible for the proprietors to comply with the order by September 1, as many of the theatres have barely been paying expenses during the summer.

VISITORS IN THE CAPITAL

The big motion productions now holding the screen in the large theatres of Washington, D. C., have brought several guests to the Motion Picture Operators Union, Local 224. These are M. Silverman manipulating "Cabiria"; G. A. Huntley, with the Lyman Howe Travel Festival, and A. S. Fuller, who is looking after the Paul Rainey African Hunt Pictures. All of these men have enjoyed the hospitality of the local organization.

B. A. Spellbring, president of the Washington operators, stated that the organization was in a prosperous condition with increasing membership. Regular meetings, which have been postponed on account of the extreme heat, would soon be resumed when semi-monthly instructive talks would be inaugurated.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Los Angeles, August 31.

Friends here have been advised that David Miles, formerly director of big features for the Biograph Company, will soon return to Los Angeles and begin producing multiple-reel pictures. It is stated on authority that Charles Fleming and Linda Griffith will be his leading people.

The Reliance Company, directed by Fred A. Kelsey, has just returned from Imperial Valley, where it went in search of "atmosphere" for the filming of "How The Kid Went Over the Range," and found it about a hundred in the shade.

In this picture Irene Hunt is featured, and when cooking utensils to be used in a camp-fire cooking scene were left in the sun for several hours, they became so hot the leading woman could not handle them. This week the company is producing a two-reel picture "The Wireless Voice," in which a wireless telephone invented by a Los Angeles man will be explained in detail as well as playing a conspicuous part in a love affair. Frank Bennett, Irene Hunt and Vester Perry have been cast for this picture.
